Mr. BUTLER. I know they prophesy much for those ships. I do not know what they will do, but I know what we propose to authorize the Government to attempt to do. Some military men may say they can successfully attack these airships. I was opposed to them at first because I feared a single shot would bring them down. But other military men say they are no longer dangerous from inflammability or from being shot down. Further than that, they propose to load them with cannon. They can defend themselves against these heavier-than-air machines; but, of course, with the aid of them, they are supposed to be easily defended.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman made it very clear that this program will not involve an additional amount. Does this program involve any additional expense to the regular and usual naval appropriations?

Mr. BUTLER. We think we will be able to adjust these figures so that they will not. Of course, the gentleman from New York must understand that it will cost something to build and maintain these airplanes. We are not trying to deceive you. That will involve some additional expense to the Treasury, but we hope by adjusting our appropriations for military defenses to provide these additional units without increasing the amount of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I did not get it in mind, whether any of this money can be used for the purchase of aviation grounds or the construction of buildings or quarters for the men.

Mr. BUTLER. No. We have all the ground now that we need. I would not vote for any more except for a cemetery. It will cost a lot of money to build this program, and it will cost a lot of money to maintain it and keep it up. The cost for both every year will be about $35,000,000.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. In respect to competitive bidding, do I understand that the gentleman refers to the President's recommendation as contained in the report of the Morrow Aircraft Board?

Mr. BUTLER. I made no reference to it, but I have it in mind that some members of the board—

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It was not a unanimous report?

Mr. BUTLER. No. My colleague from Georgia [Mr. Vinson] will explain that. I want to assure you, gentlemen, that he is alive to the actual needs of the naval service. He will not stand for noncompetitive bidding. I want these airplanes to be built or purchased just as the ships of the Navy now are. They must be bought or built by competition. Further than that, if there is anything like a conspiracy among these 12 or 15 different airplane builders, then the airships or aircraft shall go to Government yards.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Did not the Morrow Board make a finding to the effect that there was corruption among some of the aircraft people?

Mr. BUTLER. I would not charge that there was corruption.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Or that they were in conspiracy?

Mr. BUTLER. I would not call it "a conspiracy." We call it up in our State "an understanding." But they will not have any understanding on this if I can help it.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. That is why you provide that if there is any understanding between them, then they must get out?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Is it not a fact that the language in reference to the purchase of airplanes is the same as that used in connection with the construction of battleships?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes. It has been voted for time and time again. It is like the Lord's Prayer; it is always the same.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say that he wanted commercial industry encouraged in the aircraft industry?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I know that the gentleman understands that the President's Aircraft Board had that same point in mind?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. In sections 6 and 7 of the report of the Morrow Board is not this language found that—

(6) Existing statutes covering the procurement of supplies and requiring competitive bidding be modified when necessary to allow putting the recommendations previously made into effect.

(7) Governmental research in aeronautic science be actively continued and the testing facilities of the various department agencies should be made readily available to the civil industry. The functions of the national advisory committee for aeronautics should be extended to cover the field of advice to inventors regarding aeronautic inventions.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no reflection to cast on the Morrow Board, let me say to my friend, but they were business giants and therefore I prefer to stand by the old hitching post that has held me up for several years. Let them go out and get bids and get them fairly or I do not want them to get them at all. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes. [Applause.] Before I commence a discussion of the various provisions of the bill I desire to answer the statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Vinson] with reference to the recommendation of the Morrow Board. It is true that the Morrow Board inserted a provision along the line which the gentleman read, but when the Naval Affairs Committee started to consider this bill no effort was made by any member to insert that thought which would do away with competitive bidding in the bill. It is such a fundamental change in the method of purchasing and so important that Congress should consider that question separately and independent of any other legislation. Therefore we kept it out of our bill, and I am glad to know that the Military Affairs Committee has kept it out of their bill. We want to purchase these airplanes upon the strongest kind of competition, and we have used the same language with reference to the purchase of them as is used with reference to the purchase of battleships.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I am certain the gentleman can differentiate between the increase in the aircraft industry of the United States and commercial aviation and the construction of battleships which are only to be used by the United States Government.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Well, practically all of the airplanes are used by the United States Government.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Not at all, because civilians may use these airplanes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, it is the unanimous opinion of the members of the Naval Affairs Committee that it is highly important for the Navy to have a definite program, for by such a program it has some objective at which it is aiming, and the objective in this bill is to have 1,000 serviceable airplanes in the Navy at the end of five years. In addition to that reason, it is essential, in the interest of orderly legislative procedure, that such a program be authorized so that the Appropriations Committee and Congress may be in position annually to make appropriations for the purchase of new airplanes in the regular appropriation bill for the support of the Navy.

Under the rules of the House, as every Member knows, before the Appropriations Committee can authorize the expenditure of any money for the purchase of new aircraft there must be some legislative authority for such expenditure.

To illustrate, the appropriation bill for the support of the Navy this year had an item in it authorizing the purchase of 137 new airplanes, to cost $9,062,500. This item was subject to a point of order, and went out of the bill because there was no legislative authority authorizing the Appropriations Committee to provide for their purchase.

Unless a program covering a period of years is enacted, the Appropriations Committee must each year wait until Congress has passed a bill providing for the purchase of a certain number of airplanes before that committee could make an appropriation.

Therefore to my mind it is clearly in the interest of orderly legislative procedure, in view of the rules of the House, to lay down a program covering a period of years giving the Appropriations Committee the authority annually to provide for the purchase of new airplanes, if in the judgment of the Appropriations Committee and Congress the needs of the Navy justify such purchase.

It does not by any means follow that by granting this authorization that the Appropriations Committee is compelled to provide for the number of planes designated for each year. The legislative committee, which is the Naval Affairs Committee, having jurisdiction of the subject has concluded that, in our opinion, with the objective of having 1,000 planes at the end of five years, it is necessary to purchase 235 new planes in 1927 and so many for each of the remaining four years.

But, however, the economic condition of the country and the President's program of economy may be such that, in the opinion of the Appropriations Committee, Congress would not be justified to purchase that number of airplanes for that year. It would be up to the Appropriations Committee and Congress to decide the number to be purchased, but it could not exceed the total number fixed in this bill for each year, but, of course, the number to be purchased could be less.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. The Appropriations Committee, if it is left to them, of course will take care of the appropriation, but would it not be the policy, after we made this authorization, to push the Appropriations Committee to make the appropriation?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Let me say to the gentleman that the Appropriations Committee this year has appropriated for 137 airplanes, to cost $9,062,500. When that matter comes back from conference, the House can determine whether or not the facts justify the purchase of 235, as we recommend, or the purchase of 137, as recommended by the Appropriations Committee. Of course, the House determines upon which side the soundest argument is.

Mr. McKEOWN. Would not this legislation embarrass the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not at all.

Mr. McKEOWN. If the Appropriations Committee should refuse to give you as much as you want, then you would come into the House and say, "Here is the law, and the Appropriations Committee has got to give that much money."

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It is not mandatory upon the part of the Appropriations Committee to appropriate this amount; it is discretionary, but the Appropriations Committee can not exceed this amount. Now take the other end of it. Suppose the Appropriations Committee should come in and say they thought we ought to spend $15,000,000 in 1927 for aviation. They could not do it, because Congress has said that a certain amount—$12,285,000—shall be the maximum.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. As the gentleman knows, the House sometimes takes the Appropriations Committee to task because they will not appropriate as the law says they should appropriate; and when you get this statute, will you not say that to the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Of course not. There are some ships, which were provided for in the 1916 building program, on which not $1 has ever been spent. The Appropriations Committee was authorized to spend that money, but they have not done it, and there has not been any real protest against it.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. The law authorizes the enlistment of 137,400 men, but the Appropriations Committee provides for 81,000 men, because they think that number is sufficient. They have heard the evidence and we take their judgment as to that.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I think the gentleman is correct. This bill, as I understand from the gentleman, only authorizes a certain number to be built and it will be for the House to later determine what number shall be built each year?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If that is the purpose, why would not a blanket authority—so we would not be confronted with a point of order each year—be sufficient and decide each year just how many planes should be built.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That would be subject to a point of order unless you definitely authorize the construction of a certain number of planes or made a certain authorization. Unless you did that a point of order would lie against the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman knows we could write that into this bill and that the very first section authorizes the Navy Department to procure airplanes. That being so, we would not be confronted with a point of order each year on the appropriation bills. Therefore I do not see the necessity of in any way binding, morally or otherwise, the Congress to a fixed number of planes for the next five years.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. We say that some Committee on Appropriations might be more generous than the present Committee on Appropriations and might try to spend more money than the facts justify, so therefore we put a limitation now on the generosity of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman does not want me to swallow that, does he?

Mr. McKEOWN. The gentleman does not indulge in any idea that the Committee on Appropriations can exceed the Naval Affairs Committee?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In deference to the Committee on Appropriations, if that committee will make the same careful investigation that the House Naval Affairs Committee made, I am satisfied if they have a definite objective in view, with a definite purpose to have 1,000 airplanes in a certain length of time, they will be convinced that our figures are absolutely correct and that these annual appropriations should be made and this annual number of planes should be authorized to be purchased.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. In other words, in order to make it plain, assume a conference should be held and there should be a limitation on the building of planes and the number authorized herein exceeded that number, it would not be necessary to go back to your committee—

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Of course not.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Because the number to be built is left entirely to the House hereafter to determine.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Exactly.

Mr. Chairman, let us turn our thoughts and attention to the bill under consideration, and I respectfully invite your attention to the first paragraph wherein we lay down a heavier-than-air five-year program. But before commencing a discussion I deem it important to take stock and see what the Navy has at this time in the way of airplanes.

Planes are divided in the Navy into four classes, namely:

- First. Service types.
- Second. Obsolescent types.
- Third. Experimental types.
- Fourth. Obsolete types.

Now, let me call your attention to the fact that the first two classes—service types and obsolescent types—comprise the useful planes of the Navy. The obsolescent types are those planes which were formerly of the serviceable types, but which are gradually passing out of the scene and will become obsolete if not destroyed in the meantime. On November 1, 1925, there were in the Navy 408 classified as serviceable planes, 398 classified as obsolescent planes, 55 classified as experimental planes, 132 classified as obsolete planes. A grand total of 993 planes of all kinds.

The serviceable and obsolescent types, which are the useful planes of the Navy, are further divided by the Bureau of Aeronautics into serviceable planes, unserviceable planes, and planes on order.

On November 1, 1925, we had a total of 639 serviceable planes in the Navy. In addition to the 639 planes of the two classes, there were 7 unserviceable type planes, 78 unserviceable obsolescent planes, 82 serviceable type planes on order, making a grand total of these two classes of 806.

Of the experimental planes there are 34 in serviceable condition, 1 in unserviceable condition, and 20 on order, making a total of 55.

Of the obsolescent planes there are 79 that are serviceable and 53 that are unserviceable, making a total of 132.

These figures account for the total of 993 planes on hand on November 1, 1925.

Therefore your committee, in considering the five-year building program, started with the number of serviceable planes, to wit, 638, to be on hand in the Navy on July 1, 1926. In that year one-third must be replaced on account of wastage. Hence, 213 new planes must be purchased as replacement planes; but, however, in 1926 there was an excess of 40 observation planes and 5 training planes, making a total excess of 45 planes. Therefore the replacement for wastage will only be, in view of this excess of 45 planes, 198 planes, and in addition to the replacement for wastage we authorize the permanent increase of 67 new planes. The total authorization for purchase of new planes for 1927 is 235, to cost not exceeding $12,285,000; the maintenance cost will be not exceeding $11,545,000, making the total cost under "Aviation of Navy" not exceeding $23,830,000.

For that year there will be in the Navy 738 serviceable planes, of which 314 will be ashore and 424 afloat.

Now, let us take 1928. We start with 738 serviceable planes in that year, one-third of which must be replaced on account of wastage. Therefore, 246 new planes must be purchased as replacement planes, and in addition to the replacement planes we authorize a permanent increase of 67 new planes, making a total of new planes to be purchased not exceeding 313, at a total cost not exceeding $16,223,750. There will be in the Navy 805 serviceable planes, of which 345 will be ashore and 460 afloat. The maintenance cost will be not exceeding $12,020,000, making a total cost for 1928 under "Aviation of Navy" not exceeding $28,243,750.

Let us look at 1929. That year the Navy will start with 805 serviceable planes, one-third of which must be replaced on account of wastage. Therefore 268 new planes must be purchased that year as replacement planes, and in addition to the replacement planes the committee authorizes the permanent increase of 67 new planes, making a total of new planes to be purchased not exceeding 335, at a total cost not exceeding $17,582,500. There will be in the Navy 872 serviceable planes, of which 394 will be ashore and 478 afloat. The maintenance cost will be not exceeding $12,570,000, making the total cost for 1929 under "aviation of Navy" not exceeding $30,152,500.

Take 1930. That year the Navy will start with 872 serviceable planes, one-third of which must be replaced on account of wastage. Therefore 290 new planes must be purchased that year as replacement planes, and in addition to the replacement planes the committee authorizes a permanent increase of 67 new planes, making a total to be purchased of 357 new planes, at a total cost of not exceeding $18,941,250. There will be in the Navy that year 939 serviceable planes, of which 434 will be ashore and 505 afloat. The maintenance costs will be not exceeding $13,070,000, making a total cost for 1930 for "aviation of Navy" of not exceeding $32,011,250.

Now, let us take 1931. That year the Navy will start with 939 serviceable planes, one-third of which must be replaced on account of wastage. Therefore 313 planes must be purchased that year as replacement planes, and in addition to the replacement planes the committee authorizes a permanent purchase of 67 new planes, making a total of new planes to be purchased 374, at a total cost of not exceeding $20,046,250. There will be in the Navy 1,000 serviceable planes, of which 495 will be ashore and 505 afloat. The maintenance cost for that year will be not exceeding $13,520,000, making a total cost for 1931 under "aviation of Navy" of not exceeding $33,566,250.

Under this program you will observe that during the five-year period there is authorized to be purchased 1,614 new planes, at a total cost of not exceeding $85,078,750 and a total maintenance cost during the five-year period of not exceeding $62,725,000. Therefore, the total maximum expenditure provided for by this bill under "Aviation of Navy" for the five-year period for heavier than air is $147,803,750.

This, therefore, completes the five-year building program as set out in the bill, and in 1932 the Navy would start with 1,000 serviceable planes, and to maintain that number of serviceable planes it would be necessary to purchase one-third, or 333 replacement planes, each year, at a cost of not exceeding $17,476,250 and a maintenance cost of not exceeding $13,870,000. The total expenditure under "Aviation of Navy" per year would be not exceeding $31,346,250.

I desire to call your attention to the reduction under "Aviation of Navy" of $2,220,000 from the cost of 1931 to the cost in 1932. This is brought about because after 1931 it is not necessary to purchase any planes for the permanent increase, but only necessary to purchase one-third each year as replacement planes, and as long as the strength of the Navy is maintained as it is to-day it will not be necessary to increase the total number of service planes over 1,000, as the Navy could not economically use more than that number.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman give way for a question?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes; with much pleasure.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I understand it is contemplated to buy all the new planes involved in this program as a result of competitive bidding?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes, sir; the strongest competitive bidding that English language can put in a bill. [Applause.] In my opinion, it would be a serious mistake for Congress to couple up with this program or with the military program any proposition to give to the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy the right to purchase airplanes without competition. If Congress decides to do otherwise, let a separate bill be brought in before Congress and let it stand on its own merits, and then Congress can safeguard it in such a way as to save the Secretary's office, possibly, from some national scandal.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. If the gentleman will permit, that is what has been done by both the Military Affairs Committee and the Naval Affairs Committee.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I understand the gentleman is very glad to give way to questions and, in fact, has invited questions.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. What provision is to be made for experimentation in the development of improved types of planes? I am assuming that as this is progressive every year you are going to get better airplanes?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Now, what inducements are you to give to the limited number of manufacturers to develop improved types of planes, or how are you going to promote the experimental part of the work?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. We appropriate this year in the appropriation bill for the upkeep of the Navy $1,900,000 exclusively for experimental work in addition to what we ask for in this bill.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. May I ask whether that experimentation is to be conducted entirely at the naval aircraft establishment or—

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is purely an administrative matter. I do not know how they are going to make the experiments, whether that is going to be done at the Naval Establishment—

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman kindly wait until I conclude my question? Is it contemplated that this experimentation is to be at the naval aircraft establishment, or will there be any inducement to the manufacturers to continue their engineering experimentation work? In other words, does this appropriation the gentleman speaks of enable the Navy Department to place with the manufacturers experimental orders?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. When the aircraft industry of this country finds out that Congress is authorized to make a maximum expenditure of $85,000,000 over a five-year period, of which, under the program, $43,723,750 would go directly to the aircraft industry and $41,353,085 to automotive industry, you need have no apprehension that the industry will fail to conduct all necessary experimental work to advance aviation.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Let us assume that the appropriations made will induce a great deal of activity and experimentation. Suppose the aircraft factory and the aircraft manufacturer recommends and develops an improved type of plane—an improvement in speed and other necessary elements—and is of a type that has been submitted and accepted by the Government. Is the construction of that type to be submitted to the trade generally for competitive bids?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I do not know, if it falls within the classification of a fighting plane, or a scouting plane, or a patrol plane, or a training plane, under this authorization it will have to be purchased by competitive bidding.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I will.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I feel that there is good reason for the position taken by my friend, who was a member of the aircraft board. I have been wondering how section 6 met with the approval of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman knows that you have to compromise to get some things you are driving for. I subscribed to the whole report, but there are some things I could not subscribe to independently, but altogether it is a report that I hope is in the interest of aviation.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. It is a splendid report, and shows a considerable amount of work, and section 6 is quite persuasive as to determining what the policy of the Government must be.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It is not so persuasive because no one has followed it.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I will.

Mr. LAZARO. I know the gentleman has given a great deal of study to the subject, and from what I understand he knows that if we have another war it is going to be decided in the air. The most advanced nations in aviation—namely, Great Britain and France—have a unified air service. Why should not we have a unified air service?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I hope my good friend will not get me off on a unified air service or a separate air corps, or any other administrative changes. I am willing to answer any question relating to this bill.

Mr. LAZARO. I have not made up my mind about it and I know the gentleman has given it considerable study and I wanted his opinion.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I will tell the gentleman why you ought not to have a unified air service. I presume the gentleman means the amalgamation of the Army and Navy under a secretary of national defense.

Mr. LAZARO. Not necessarily; you could have a secretary, with three undersecretaries or assistants.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I will put my views in the RECORD for the benefit of the gentleman from Louisiana and others, and if he reads it he will see that there is sound argument why there should be no administrative changes.

Mr. BUTLER. If the gentleman will yield, suppose a future Congress should adopt a unified air service, this program will go on just the same.

Mr. LAZARO. I am not advocating it; I am trying to get the opinion of an expert.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman has said that the passage of this bill will encourage the aircraft industry. What will happen if after they have passed this bill in the future the Appropriations Committee does not appropriate? Will we not have all of the factories on our back?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I do not think the Appropriations Committee will ever fail to measure up to the high standard and maintain this program of national defense where it should be.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman state whether or not this bill would authorize those in power to take any steps during this period which would put Congress under obligation to make the appropriations if Congress does not see fit to do so?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Not at all.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman will recall that we got into that situation with reference to the building of ships during the war. They were authorized during the war, and we started them.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In 1916 we laid down a building program for surface ships. Up to this time no appropriation has been made for some of those ships. This does not commit Congress to anything except that you can not exceed this amount in five years unless you go back to the Naval Affairs Committee and get legislation to do so.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman will recall that during the first year or two they used the money not only for building ships but started to build a lot more, and that made it necessary to appropriate a good deal of money to prevent losing a lot of other money.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Your appropriation for expenditure for the first year is something over $12,000,000?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. How much is that increased by the new construction this year under the appropriation already made?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Let us make a comparison of what Congress is appropriating for the Navy and what is proposed in this measure. In the appropriation bill for the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1927, there was carried an item appropriating $9,062,500 for the purchase of 137 new airplanes. This amount, as you will recall, was struck out of the appropriation bill upon a point of order, as it was legislation upon an appropriation bill.

The measure under consideration provides for the expenditure for new planes for the fiscal year of 1927 of $12,285,000, which will purchase 235 new airplanes. Therefore this bill carries an increase in amount for 1927 of $3,222,500 and 98 more airplanes than was authorized in the appropriation bill.

The maintenance cost that was provided for in the appropriation bill for 1927 was $9,546,625, and under this measure the maintenance cost is estimated to be $11,545,000, a difference of $1,998,375. Of course, it naturally follows that the increased maintenance cost is brought about due to the increased number of planes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How much would it be the following year?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I could not work that out, because I do not know what the Appropriations Committee is going to appropriate.

Mr. Chairman, let us see what effect on the personnel of the Navy there will be by the enactment of this five-year program.

To-day we have in the Navy, when the present class of student officers have finished training within a few months, 400 officer pilots, 147 ground officers, 24 warrant officers, 104 enlisted pilots, and the Bureau of Aeronautics is allowed by the Bureau of Navigation 3,842 enlisted men. However, there are only approximately 1,842 enlisted men assigned to aeronautical duty at this time, because there is not a sufficient number of planes to justify the full use of the number of men allowed by the Bureau of Navigation, to wit, 3,842. The passage of this measure will necessarily increase each year the number of officer pilots, ground officers, warrant officers, enlisted pilots and enlisted men, which increase for each year will be as follows:

1926.....	514	99	34	192	3,771
1927.....	604	99	36	222	4,435
1928.....	666	99	39	260	4,745
1929.....	720	99	41	302	5,015
1931.....	802	99	44	344	5,285

Therefore this program will mean the ultimate increase of 402 officer pilots, 20 warrant officers, 240 enlisted pilots, and 1,533 enlisted men, which will make a permanent strength of the aviation arm of the fleet of 802 officer pilots, 99 ground officers, 44 warrant officers, 344 enlisted pilots, and 5,385 enlisted men, a grand total of 6,674 officers and men.

There will be available from the line of the Navy as fed in year by year from the classes at Annapolis approximately enough officers to permit of this increase of officer pilots, and this program will not require the increasing of the admission to the Naval Academy.

It, however, will be necessary to increase the enlisted personnel of the Navy during this period, but if Congress would appropriate sufficient money to maintain the present strength of the Navy as authorized, to wit, 86,000 men, there would be sufficient enlistments in the Navy to meet the requirements of the enlisted personnel assigned to aviation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to invite your attention to the lighter-than-air craft program wherein we provide for two 6,000,000-cubit-foot dirigibles.

At the outset, permit me to say that this conclusion was not hastily reached by your committee, but after many weeks of investigation and after having heard the leading experts on the subject from the Navy, and having the benefit of the testimony of the few surviving officers of the Shenandoah, and having examined at length Doctor Arnstein, one of the chief engineers of the German Zeppelin Co., who aided in the construction of more than 70 Zeppelins during the war, your committee unanimously concluded that rigid airships are an essential part of the national defense and too valuable a weapon to be abandoned because of the loss of the Shenandoah.

At the very outset I want to differentiate between lighter-than-air craft and heavier-than-air craft. They are two entirely different things. They are not competitors, and in the Navy they will not occupy the same field. The heavier-than-air craft is distinctly a machine for overland work or short distances over water. The lighter-than-air craft is essentially a long-distance scouting ship.

The principal naval mission of rigid airships is scouting and reconnaissance, and this mission should be kept clearly in mind in the consideration of the utility of these craft in the scheme of naval organization. All other use to which airships might be put are side issues, and their consideration should not be allowed to becloud the main issue.

A failure to appreciate this has led to serious confusion and misinterpretations in judging rigid airships by past performances, particularly the Zeppelins in the World War. No one realizes more than Germany herself that, by employing rigid airships on bombing raids under the conditions obtaining at the time, she was increasing their normal war hazard and using them beyond their prime function. There can be no doubt that she was forced to do this by public opinion. But, in spite of the allied attempts to minimize the damage in material and morale inflicted by Zeppelin air raids, the harm to the cause occasioned by the constant threat of these ships is incalculable. War industries were shut down at night; thousands of guns and men were diverted from the front; and civilian and military morale was lowered and disrupted. These effects are difficult to measure, but it is dangerous to disregard them.

Out of slightly over 100 rigid airships of the German air force available during the period 1914 to 1918, 40 were assigned to the army, and these were delivered either before or in the early stages of the war. Approximately 63 went to the navy.

The British, confining their airship operations to scouting, reconnaissance, convoy, and antisubmarine patrol, covered 2,245,000 miles during the period of the war. Including all training and experimental flying, in addition to all deaths resulting from enemy action, only 48 lives were lost, or an average of 46,787 miles per fatality.

Let me quote from a secret British report under date of September 20, 1917, wherein it states:

From the results already given of instances, it will be seen how justified is the confidence felt by the German Navy in its airships when used in their proper sphere as the eyes of the fleet. It is no small achievement for their Zeppelins to have saved the high-sea fleet at the Battle of Jutland, to have saved their cruiser squadron on the Yarmouth raid, and to have been instrumental in sinking the Nottingham and Falmouth. Had the positions been reversed in the Jutland Battle, and had we had rigids to enable us to locate and annihilate the German High Sea Fleet, can anyone deny the far-reaching effects it would have had in ending the war? There are many other striking, though perhaps less important, successes to the credit of Zeppelins at sea—even to the capture of the Norwegian bark Royal off Haustholm in May, 1917.

Admiral Sir John Jellicoe, of the British Navy, in a letter to Admiral Sims in 1919 wrote, "I have a firm belief in the value of Zeppelins for naval purposes. They have become somewhat discredited during the war because the Germans put them to the wrong use by bombing instead of scouting. I can not see that a heavier-than-air machine can ever be so efficient a scout as the Zeppelin, because she can never get the same radius of action. . . . The Zeppelin is bound to give better information than the airplane, as she can hover and observe closely whilst hovering. . . . Had the Germans had their Zeppelins out on May 31, 1916, the battle fleet would never have gained contact with the high-sea fleet. They would have turned as on August 19, 1916.

An airship of the capacity as authorized in this bill, filled with helium, will have an endurance of 7,150 nautical miles at a standard speed of 50 knots. At 2,000 feet altitude, under normal sea conditions, an observer from such an airship has a visibility radius of 60 miles, and during 14 hours of daylight an airship of standard speed, under circumstances of visibility just mentioned, can scout a sea of 85,000 square miles.

Now listen to this: At 30 knots standard speed it would require approximately five scout cruisers to observe an equal area. The cost of five scout cruisers would be over $85,000,000, and would require over 2,400 officers and men to man the same, while the cost of one airship is approximately $5,000,000, and will be manned by a crew of 40 officers and men.

The Los Angeles flying with helium cruised from Lakehurst to Bermuda in 12 hours and Porto Rico in 31 hours. The Los Angeles inflated with hydrogen cruised the Atlantic Ocean from Gironde River to Boston in 64 hours. It is clearly beyond the capacity of any surface ships now in existence or even contemplated to equal such performance. There can be no doubt that airships assigned to their proper naval function during the war rendered valuable service in scouting and reconnaissance. During the 17 months prior to the armistice British airships cited 49 submarines and successfully attacked 27 of them.

They convoyed over 2,000 surface vessels and carried out over 9,000 antisubmarine patrols.

From an examination of the diaries of submarine commanders, there can be no doubt there was a great apprehension felt on the part of the submarines of airship attacks, and this fear was justified in a number of cases, such as the attack on the British E-18, which was sighted and bombarded by German Zeppelins while lying in 70 feet of water.

The advent of the mooring mast, both ashore and afloat, has opened up a new era in airship mobility. At Bermuda in one of the recent maneuvers the Los Angeles was moored to the Potoka in a 45-mile wind. The R-33 in England spent 111 out of 126 days at a mast in winds up to 40 miles an hour.

From January 1 to November 11, 1918, there were only nine days on which the British airships could not fly because of bad weather. This goes to show that airships have passed the stage of fair-weather vessels.

It is contemplated by the Bureau of Aeronautics that these airships or dirigibles as provided for in this bill shall be fully equipped for defensive protection. It is proposed to carry seven 50-caliber machine guns; thirteen 30-caliber single-mount machine guns; five double-mount 30-caliber machine guns; and one 1-pound automatic gun; and there will ordinarily be carried 9,700 rounds of ammunition.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. How much longer would a scout cruiser last than a Zeppelin?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It all depends on what hits it.

Mr. BLANTON. Would it not outlast five Zeppelins?

Mr. BUTLER. One would last 9 years and the other 13 years.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. When a Zeppelin is scouting and goes out to meet the enemy, and they shoot at it, they can hardly keep from hitting it, can they?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Well, do not be so apprehensive that it is going to be destroyed, because I will tell the gentleman exactly what it can do.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to have the gentleman tell us about its vulnerability.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I will do that.

Mr. BLANTON. Because they are vulnerable?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Of course, they are vulnerable, and the battleship is vulnerable, but do we hesitate to build them because they are?

It has been calculated that airships of the kind provided in this measure can be pierced with 200 holes, 20 holes 1 inch in diameter in each of 10 cells, and lose but 25 per cent of the gas volume in five hours, but during that five hours she can continue to carry out the mission to which she was assigned.

Let me quote to you from the testimony of Admiral Moffett, wherein he stated:

A 6,000,000 cubic foot rigid filled with helium can fly at 50 knots speed from the west coast to the Hawaiian Islands with a military load of 43 tons. At 70 knots speed such a ship can arrive in Hawaii with a military load of 34 tons. Again, this airship, which is so essential to our naval needs, can carry six fighting planes weighing a ton and a half each 5,000 nautical miles at a speed of 50 knots and still have a reserve of fuel good for 1,200 miles at the same speed. Inflated with hydrogen, these performances can be bettered by 40 to 60 per cent. We can not close our eyes to such figures and performances.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman has made an admission coming from the Navy as to the usefulness of the Zeppelin. When did the Navy concede that?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Always.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman knows that eight years ago, when that very point was brought out by the friends of aviation, the Navy absolutely denied it.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Well, the Navy and the world learned a great deal from the war.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Even five years ago the Navy would not concede as much.

Mr. UPDIKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. UPDIKE. Is it not a fact that every expert, both naval and commercial, who came before the Naval Affairs Committee testified as to their value?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is no denying that.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. While I recognize that the lighter-than-air machine may have high military value, yet I feel confident that the conservative officers of the Navy recognize that it has its limitations.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. In the danger zone and far from a base it might not be practicable to use lighter-than-air machines.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That may be true.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. But as coastal patrols they have very high military value, and in my judgment nothing afloat can compare with them as scouting patrols for our coasts.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Does this development or addition to the Naval Establishment contemplate the protection of the Gulf coast as well as the Atlantic and Pacific coasts?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. All naval matters are viewed from a national standpoint, and we are trying to protect New Orleans as well as New York and the Pacific.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Does the gentleman think the practice of the Naval Affairs Committee and the Naval Establishment has been to do that which the gentleman suggests will be done?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Well, if it is not, I hope the gentleman will help us to make it national in its scope.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Let me suggest that the department as presently constituted has about five navy yards on the North Atlantic coast, a great number on the Pacific coast, and yet not a single one from Hampton Roads to the Rio Grande, though it is admitted, I think, generally speaking, that any combat with a trans-Atlantic power will take place, from a naval standpoint, on the Caribbean.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If the gentleman from Louisiana had stayed on the Committee on Naval Affairs probably he could have gotten a navy yard in his vicinity.

The naval bill for 1927 carried an item of $500,000 for the purchase of helium from the Bureau of Mines. For what purpose is the helium unless we are to have airships to use the same? In the development of helium, Congress has already expended over $10,000,000. Our great plant at Fort Worth, Tex., cost over $4,500,000.

Unless a definite lighter-than-air program is established, unless the rigid airships described in this bill are authorized, we are confronted with one of two propositions—we must continue to appropriate for and receive helium at Lakehurst, there only to be stored, or we must close up the Fort Worth plant.

The committee concluded that it was the part of wisdom that rigid airship building should go hand in hand with our production and conservation of helium.

On the morning after the disastrous wreck of the Shenandoah the press carried the cheering news that the President—regards the airship, although in the experimental stage, as too valuable a part of the national defense to be abandoned because one is destroyed.

The naval policy of this Government is that—the Navy of the United States should be maintained in sufficient strength to support its policy and its commerce and to guard its continental and overseas possessions.

The task of the Navy as a first line of defense is enormous, and each and every arm of the fleet must at all times be maintained up to the highest point of efficiency, and this can not be accomplished unless there be sufficient aviation, both lighter and heavier than air, with the fleet, and in the language of the Chief Executive in his message last December to Congress:

We must have an air strength worthy of America.

And that is, Mr. Chairman, what this bill seeks to do. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to ask my friend a question, so it may go in the Record. Did I understand the gentleman to say the Government has spent $10,000,000 in the development of helium?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. How many more millions of dollars has the Government spent for car barns, for plants, for machinery, and for masts to which they are to tie these ships? It will amount to $10,000,000 more, will it not?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes; easily.

Mr. BUTLER. And what will become of all these great plants unless we continue our program for lighter-than-air planes?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is the very question I asked the committee. There is but one of two things to do—either continue the program or abandon the whole business.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. May I ask the gentleman a question there?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I understood the gentleman to say that the mere fact there is no provision in this bill in any way modifying the requirements as to competitive bidding is no indication that that matter may not be taken up in some other way, so as to take care of what, in the judgment of a great many people, is an important feature of the program with respect to aircraft.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In my judgment, that is such an important question it should stand on its own merits and a separate bill should be brought in to consider that. Our committee has not done that at this time.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LEHLBACH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9690) to authorize the construction and procurement of aircraft and aircraft equipment in the Navy and Marine Corps and to adjust and define the status of the operating personnel in connection therewith, had come to no resolution thereon.

THE TARIFF

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on House Joint Resolution No. 35, introduced by myself and pertaining to certain features of the present tariff law.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, some time ago I introduced House Joint Resolution 35, which is as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 35) calling upon the President of the United States to reduce the tariff on materials and commodities essential to and generally used by the agricultural population of the United States in carrying on the farming industry, and for lessening the burdens now imposed upon agriculture

Whereas in many sections of the United States the prices of farm products have declined and reached a low and unprofitable level during the past few years; and

Whereas decline in the prices of such farm products has been such as to place the agricultural industry in a hazardous position, exposed to unusual loss; and

Whereas the present high protective tariff law levies a tariff upon many materials and commodities that are essential to, and are necessarily employed in and used upon the farm; and

Whereas many of said materials and commodities are included in schedule 3 under Title I of the present tariff law; and

Whereas in said tariff law it is provided that the President of the United States may by proclamation reduce the tariff on such materials and commodities so that it will not exceed one-half of the present tariff rate on said materials and commodities; and

Whereas if the President of the United States will reduce the tariff on said materials and commodities, it will bring some measure of relief to the agricultural industry: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the attention of the President of the United States is called to the existing condition of agriculture and to the provisions of the present tariff law.

Resolved further, That in view of the gravity of the situation, and the burden imposed upon agriculture by virtue of the schedule of the tariff law aforesaid, that in the opinion of the membership of the Sixty-ninth Congress now assembled the President should promptly act in the premises and reduce the tariff on the materials and commodities aforesaid.

Since the introduction of this resolution several other resolutions and bills have been introduced by other Democratic Members of the House pertaining to a repeal of the present Fordney-McCumber tariff law or to some particular feature of that law. It very soon, however, became apparent that the present Republican administration, by reason of its majority control of Congress, would not undertake or permit to be undertaken any action for any reduction of the tariff or for any relief from the exacting burdens imposed thereby.

It is not my purpose to attempt a discussion of the tariff question in that way in which it has been so fully discussed on both sides from time immemorial, because I think that the high protective tariff theory to protect infant industry in which the heart of the Republican Party believes, and the theory of tariff for revenue with equal rights to all and special privileges to none, in which the soul of the Democratic Party is imbedded, are so well understood by all those who are familiar with the fundamentals of their party that it would be an idle ceremony to attempt to arrest anyone's attention at this time on that phase alone.

Writers may differ as to the past history of the American Government; statesmen may disagree as to where the future will lead our country and as to the wisdom or folly of such a course; but I am sure the average citizen is not blind to all that surrounds him at the present time.

We are now living under the Fordney-McCumber tariff law—the highest protective tariff that has ever been written into law—at the same time, in my opinion, the farmer in the United States finds himself in more distress and he is finding it more difficult to meet his debts and interest charges and often to save his home from foreclosure than ever before.

Now, that is the situation that confronts the farmers of this country, and he who tells you the farmer is prosperous either undertakes to deceive or is not familiar with and does not know the actual present condition of the farmer.

Now, what have we? First, the highest protective tariff ever enacted into law; second, more suffering and bankrupt farmers than ever.

Therefore something has happened. The high protective tariff law has not made the farmer prosperous, because he is not prosperous; on the contrary, he is, as a class, financially depressed. It will be observed that under the provisions of the Fordney-McCumber tariff law a flexible provision was written into that law empowering the President of the United States, by his proclamation, to lower the tariff to a point not exceeding 50 per cent of the present tariff.

Men may dispute over the causes, but there are certain facts that stand out so boldly that as to their existence there can be no successful dispute. Among those facts we find: That under the present Republican Fordney-McCumber tariff law the farmers have suffered more than ever before; that under the last Democratic administration, under a much lower tariff law than the one in force now, the farmers of America received higher prices for their products and were more prosperous than at any time at least in a half century.

The average farmer finds that under the Democratic administration the value of his land and his personal property was much higher than it is under the present administration.

But whatever one's views may be on the tariff there is one thing certain, that if the tariff is taken off or reduced on the manufactured articles the farmer has to buy it will reduce the cost to the farmer and enable him to obtain it at a lower cost. Therefore the purpose of the resolution is to in some measure bring relief to the agricultural interests from the high price which they are now compelled to pay while suffering the handicap of the comparatively low prices the farmer has to accept for his products.

Under the present tariff law the President is given power to make some reduction in cost to the farmer. I hope he will exercise this power, and it is regretted that he has not done so promptly and decisively before now.

That the President is familiar with his rights, privileges, and powers under this flexible provision of the tariff law is not questioned, because on one occasion, and one only, he has exercised that power by reducing the tariff on Mexican quail one-half of the amount of permissible reduction allowed under the law. An interesting bit of information is that the tariff was reduced on the quail just about hunting season, and news of the President's profound service broadcasted by the press over the country.

It must have enthused the quail hunter in Missouri, as well as in many other sections, as he took up his gun in quest of quail on the opening day of the hunting season, and visualized a quail flying over the Mexican border during the hunting season. It is not recorded whether the hunter caught the quail from Mexico on the wing or waited for a pot shot. Unfortunately, this information could not be conveyed to the quail in Mexico; otherwise they, no doubt, would have taken immediate advantage of the proclamation of President Coolidge and would have come into the United States in great droves, disregarding entirely the immigration laws.

It would appear, therefore, in view of the President's knowledge of his power under the flexible provision of the present tariff law, and in view of the nation-wide knowledge of the distress and business depression among the farmers, that it would be of some benefit, as well as show a sympathetic interest in agriculture, if the President would reduce the tariff on such articles as the farmer has to buy and use upon the farm and in his farming pursuits, and thereby help in part to lift agriculture out of its present embarrassing situation.

The farmer has, by reason of high protective tariff policies in force mainly in the interest of manufacturing enterprise, contributed so long to the enrichment of the manufacturers that it would seem that the Government should some time cease causing him to pay further tribute to special interests and especially so when thereby and by reason of such a policy the farmers' financial condition has been reduced to one of real distress.

I am quite sure, in my opinion, that the present administration has no intention of attempting to have enacted any legislation calculated to stabilize and aid agriculture; I hope the Republican Party, which is in control of every branch of the Government, will permit the enactment of or join in the enactment of legislation in the interest of agriculture. If this administration will not bring positive and affirmative relief to agriculture, it certainly should remove the artificial handicaps which have been imposed on the farmer by way of a high tariff on the necessities he has to purchase and use upon the farm, and, to say the least, the President should invoke the power and authority he has in the flexible provision of the tariff act and comply with the purposes of resolution 35 herein referred to.

Under the last Democratic national administration the sulky plow that cost the farmer $40 now under the Fordney-McCumber tariff law costs the farmer $75.

The three-section steel harrow that under the Democratic administration cost the farmer $18 now costs him under the present high tariff law $41.

The set of harness that cost the farmer under Democratic rule $40 now costs him $75.

The corn planter that cost the farmer $50 under the Democratic rule now costs the farmer $83.50.

The mowing machine that cost the farmer $45 under the Democratic administration now costs him $95.

The high protective tariff protects and aids the manufacturer. Some of these tariff provisions should be repealed if the farmer is to find the relief he is fully entitled to.

The agricultural interests now find that while they pay a hundred-cent dollar for the manufactured products they buy under the high protective tariff law in force, the dollar's worth of farm products they sell brings them only about 60 cents, in comparison. The American farmer can not much longer exist under such circumstances, and the necessity for the President to act is one of the imperative steps that should be taken. On every bridle bit, harness buckle, and materials in his plow, binder, and rake the farmer uses he pays a tariff.

He pays a tariff on the forks, spoons, knives, and dishes he uses on his table; he pays a tariff on steel, steel wire, and nails; on pocketknives, shotguns, and aluminum. If his wife does the family washing, he pays a tariff on the galvanized washboard and washtub and on the wire clothesline. If misfortune overtakes him and sickness leads him to the hospital, where the surgeon uses the knife, he finds that there is a tariff on the surgeon's knife, and if he is so unfortunate as not to be able to survive the operation but dies, the nails used in his coffin have a tariff on them.

Many ways he is burdened with the tariff. Authority is given to the President to reduce in a measure the tariff; under the flexible provision Joint Resolution No. 35 asks his affirmative action in the farmer's behalf. The action or failure to act lies in the President's direction.

IMPORTATION OF GRAIN AND SEEDS INTO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER], chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2465) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate foreign commerce by prohibiting the admission into the United States of certain adulterated grain and seeds unfit for seeding purposes," approved August 24, 1912, as amended, and for other purposes, with House amendments disagreed to by the Senate, insist upon the House amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this is what is commonly known as the Ketcham seed bill?

Mr. MAPES. Yes; the Ketcham seed bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And the Senate has refused to agree to the House amendments and has requested a conference?

Mr. MAPES. That is true.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. MAPES, Mr. BURNES, and Mr. PARKS.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, April 9, 1926, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. TILSON submitted the following tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for April 9, 1926, as reported to the floor leader by clerks of the several committees:

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

(10 a. m.)

Agricultural relief legislation.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

(10 a. m.)

To regulate, control, and safeguard the disbursement of Federal funds expended for the creation, construction, extension, repair, or ornamentation of any public building, highway, dam, excavation, dredging, drainage, or other construction project (H. R. 8902).

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

(10.15 a. m.)

Requesting the President of the United States to invite foreign governments to participate in the Seventh International Dental Congress to be held at Philadelphia, Pa., August 23 to 28, 1926 (H. J. Res. 209).

Authorizing certain military organizations to visit France, England, and Belgium (H. J. Res. 204).

COMMITTEE ON COINAGE, WEIGHTS, AND MEASURES

(10 a. m.)

To fix standards for hampers, round-stave baskets, and split baskets for fruits and vegetables (H. R. 5077).

COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

(10.30 a. m.)

To regulate in the District of Columbia the traffic in sale and use of milk bottles, cans, crates, and other containers of milk and cream, to prevent fraud and deception (H. R. 6728).

To regulate the practice of chiropractic, to create a board of chiropractic examiners of the District of Columbia, and to punish persons violating the provisions thereof (H. R. 9053).

(10.30 a. m.)

To amend paragraph (d) of section 14 of the Federal reserve act, as amended, to provide for the stabilization of the price level for commodities in general (H. R. 7895).

COMMITTEE ON THE MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

(10.30 a. m.)

To amend and supplement the merchant marine act of 1920 and the shipping act of 1916 (H. R. 8052 and H. R. 5369).

To provide for the operation and disposition of merchant vessels of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation (H. R. 5395).

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

(10 a. m.)

To provide for the payment of the awards of the Mixed Claims Commission, the payment of certain claims of German nationals against the United States, and the return to German nationals of property held by the Alien Property Custodian (H. R. 10820).

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

425. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting two communications from the Secretary of the Interior submitting estimates of appropriations in the sum of $178 to pay claims which have been adjusted (H. Doc. No. 295); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

426. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting two communications from the Comptroller General of the United States submitting estimates of appropriations in the sum of $78.85, to pay claims for damages or losses of privately owned property (H. Doc. No. 296); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

427. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting three communications from the Secretary of War submitting estimates of appropriations in the sum of $2,892.28, to pay claims for damages by collisions, and by the breaking of a dike, river, and harbor work (H. Doc. No. 297); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

428. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting two communications from the Acting Secretary of Agriculture submitting estimates of appropriations in the sum of $422.75 to pay claims which have been adjusted (H. Doc. No. 298); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

429. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, submitting an estimate in the sum of $1,064.45 to pay claims which have been adjusted (H. Doc. No. 299); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

430. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $10 to pay a claim which has been adjusted (H. Doc. No. 300); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

431. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting three communications from the Postmaster General, submitting estimates of appropriations in the sum of $4,411.08 to pay claims which have been adjusted (H. Doc. No. 301); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

432. A letter from the chief justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, transmitting a certified copy of the decree of said court in the case of the United States of America, plaintiff, v. Robert Cumberland et al. and the Anolostan Boat Club, defendants (Equity No. 31632); to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. LUCE: Committee on the Library. H. R. 3791. A bill to purchase a painting of the several ships of the United States Navy in 1891 and entitled "Peace"; without amendment (Rept. No. 790). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 2465) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate foreign commerce by prohibiting the admission into the United States of certain adulterated grain and seeds unfit for seeding purposes," approved August 24, 1912, as amended, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MAPES, Mr. BURNES, and Mr. PARKS were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bill and joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 3108. An act to amend section 2 of the act of June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. L. p. 653), as amended by the act of March 3, 1925 (43 Stat. L. p. 1127), entitled "An act to provide for the protection of forest lands, for the reforestation of denuded areas, for the extension of national forests, and for other purposes, in order to promote the continuous production of timber on lands chiefly suitable therefor";

S. J. Res. 37. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with Territories and other possessions of the United States under the provisions of sections 3, 4, and 5 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the protection of forest lands, and for the reforestation of denuded areas, for the extension of national forests, and for other purposes, in order to promote the continuous production of timber on lands chiefly suitable therefor"; and

S. J. Res. 78. Joint resolution for the amendment of the plant quarantine act of August 20, 1912, to allow the States to quarantine against the shipment therein or through of plants, plant products, and other articles found to be diseased or infested when not covered by a quarantine established by the Secretary of Agriculture, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. DILL. I present short resolutions adopted at a meeting of workmen and shingle manufacturers of my State that I would like to have printed in the Record and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Whereas the shingle industry of the States of Washington and Oregon is operating under antagonistic conditions produced by allowing the free entry of shingles into the United States from foreign nations, while an import tax is charged on logs, a partly raw material from which shingles are manufactured, and to which the Canadian Government had added an export log tax and a direct embargo on the exportation of logs when deemed advisable by said Canadian Government, thereby forcing the United States shingle industry to operate under a threefold handicap and under opposition of adverse laws of both the United States and Canadian Governments; and

Whereas the Canadian shingle manufacturers employ from 54 to 60 per cent of oriental labor in their shingle manufacturing and ship to United States approximately 90 per cent of their shingle output, which is sold in competition with the products of American labor and American industries; and

Whereas the existing United States tariff laws serve to encourage foreign production, to discourage home production, to favor the employment of foreign oriental labor, and to exclude American labor and American industries from the manufacture of shingles for the markets of the United States, and entails millions of dollars in annual loss to our Nation, its labor and industries: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we respectfully and earnestly urge Congress to enact a fair and adequate tariff law that will afford American labor and its industries a fair and equal chance in American markets for the sale of American-made shingles, manufactured by American workmen; and be it further

Resolved, That in view of the evident fact that the United States shingle industry is at the present time facing a crisis, caused by such industry having been forced to operate under such adverse conditions for the past number of years that we energetically urge the passage of a fair and adequate shingle tariff law at the present session of Congress; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States and to each Member of Congress from the States of Washington and Oregon.

Adopted at a meeting of workmen and manufacturers held in the Chamber of Commerce Auditorium, Seattle, Wash., March 27, 1926.

A. C. EDWARDS, Chairman.

D. H. CARPENTER, Secretary.

Mr. WILLIS presented a paper in the nature of a petition of the Central Dairy Producers' Council in the State of Ohio, favoring the making of increased appropriations for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, on March 25 I presented 80 resolutions adopted by provincial boards, municipal boards and councils, and Filipino organizations in favor of measures which I introduced and which are now pending before the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions, providing for immediate independence of the Filipinos and for the withdrawal of the United States troops from the Philippine Islands.

I present herewith 16 additional resolutions—2 from provincial boards and 14 from municipal councils. I ask their reference to the committee and that they be considered along with those heretofore presented.

The resolutions from the following provincial boards and municipal councils were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions:

The provincial government of Ilocos Sur, city of Vigan, P. I.
The provincial government of Rizal, city of Pasig, P. I.
The municipal council of Tiwi, Province of Albay, P. I.
The municipal council of De Banga, Province of Capiz, P. I.
The municipal council of Pinili, Province of Ilocos Norte, P. I.
The municipal council of Tig Bauan, Province of Iloilo, P. I.
The municipal council of Sara, Province of Iloilo, P. I.
The municipal council of Cataingan, Province of Masbate, P. I.

The municipal council of San Jose, Province of Mindoro, P. I.
The municipal council of Clarin, Province of Misamis, P. I.
The municipal council of Tagoloan, Province of Misamis, P. I.
The municipal council of Dumaguete, Province of Oriental Negros, P. I.

The municipal council of Concepcion, Province of Romblon, P. I.

The municipal council of San Manuel, Province of Tarlac, P. I.

The municipal council of Dapitan, Province of Zamboanga, P. I.

The municipal council of Zamboanga, Province of Zamboanga, P. I.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. STANFIELD, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 171) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to approve the application of the State of Idaho to certain lands under an act entitled "An act to authorize the State of Idaho to exchange certain lands heretofore granted for public-school purposes for other Government lands," approved September 22, 1922, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 561) thereon.

Mr. WILLIS, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9314) to provide for the enlargement of the present customs warehouse at San Juan, P. R., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 562) thereon.

REMOVAL OF BARTHOLOI FOUNTAIN

Mr. FESS. From the Committee on the Library I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 3423) authorizing the removal of the Bartholdi Fountain from its present location and authorizing its recreation on other public grounds in the District of Columbia. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The amendments were, on page 2, line 2, after the word "site," to insert the words "without injury to the fountain," and on page 2, line 9, to strike out the comma after the word "Arts" and insert the words "and of the Joint Committee on the Library," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to permit the completion by the Pennsylvania Meade Memorial Commission of the memorial to Gen. George Gordon Meade, as authorized by the joint resolution of January 21, 1915 (38 Stat. L. p. 1222), and to permit suitable treatment of the grounds around the Grant Memorial and the Meade Memorial and to carry out the plans for the improvement of the Mall, the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital is hereby authorized to remove the Bartholdi Fountain and its basin and equipment from its present site, without injury to the fountain, such removal to be without cost to the United States.

Sec. 2. That the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital is hereby authorized to erect said Bartholdi Fountain on public grounds of the United States within the District of Columbia, the site and plans for such recreation to be subject to the approval of the Commission of Fine Arts and of the Joint Committee on the Library, the expense of such recreation to be paid from such appropriations as are available or may be made available in the future for the improvement, care, and maintenance of public grounds in the District of Columbia.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I wish my colleague would state briefly the purpose of the bill.

Mr. FESS. The original location of the Meade Memorial in the Botanical Garden provided for the removal of the fountain located near the monument. Later on we had a construction of the law from the Attorney General stating that there was no authority in the original enactment for the removal of the fountain. The bill provides for the removal of the fountain, which is in accordance with the wish not only of the committee but of the Commission on the Meade Memorial and the Fine Arts Commission, and is also under the permission of the Director of the Botanical Garden.

Mr. WILLIS. It is the large fountain in the Botanical Garden near the Capitol Grounds?

Mr. FESS. It is.

Mr. WILLIS. What is proposed to be done with it?

Mr. FESS. The idea is to relocate it in the Botanical Garden or the extension of the garden when that is finally decided upon. It is to be stored until a decision is reached in respect to that matter. I am sure the bill will meet with the approval of the Senator. I talked with him some time ago about it.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask if the bill has the approval of the Fine Arts Commission and the District Commissioners, and if it was a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON TERRITORIES AND INSULAR POSSESSIONS

Mr. KEYES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably without amendment Senate resolution 192, and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. WILLIS. The resolution relates to the work of the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions. It is the usual resolution authorizing the committee to hold hearings.

Mr. KING. There is no objection to it.

The resolution, which had been submitted by Mr. WILLIS on the 5th instant, was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-ninth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject that may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

ELLA DINSMORE SANDERSON

Mr. KEYES, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate Resolution 101, submitted by Mr. McKINLEY January 4, 1926, reported it favorably without amendment and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, miscellaneous items, fiscal year 1925, to Ella Dinsmore Sanderson, widow of George A. Sanderson, late Secretary of the Senate, a sum equal to one year's salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Mr. GREENE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that to-day that committee had presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bill and joint resolutions:

S. 3108. An act to amend section 2 of the act of June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. L. p. 653), as amended by the act of March 3, 1925 (43 Stat. L. p. 1127), entitled "An act to provide for the protection of forest lands, for the reforestation of denuded areas, for the extension of national forests, and for other purposes, in order to promote the continuous production of timber on lands chiefly suitable therefor";

S. J. Res. 37. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with Territories and other possessions of the United States under the provisions of sections 3, 4, and 5 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the protection of forest lands, for the reforestation of denuded areas, for the extension of national forests, and for other purposes, in order to promote the continuous production of timber on lands chiefly suitable therefor"; and

S. J. Res. 78. Joint resolution for the amendment of the plant quarantine act of August 20, 1912, to allow the States to quarantine against the shipment therein or through of plants, plant products, and other articles found to be diseased or infested when not covered by a quarantine established by the Secretary of Agriculture, and for other purposes.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BAYARD:

A bill (S. 3922) granting a pension to Nathan McNatt; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 3923) for the relief of the widow and minor children of Raymond C. Hanford; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MOSES:

A bill (S. 3924) to amend the act of February 28, 1925, fixing the compensation of fourth-class postmasters; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. PEPPER:

A bill (S. 3925) for the relief of T. Gaines Roberts; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3926) to fix standards for hampers, round stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Manufactures.

By Mr. WILLIS:

A bill (S. 3927) granting a pension to Edward H. Packer (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 3928) authorizing the designation of an ex officio commissioner for Alaska for each of the executive departments of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions.

By Mr. HARRELD (by request):

A bill (S. 3929) to authorize the deposit and expenditure of various revenues of the Indian Service as Indian moneys, proceeds of labor; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. WILLIAMS:

A bill (S. 3930) granting a pension to Joseph F. Dorgan (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIS:

A bill (S. 3931) granting the consent of Congress to the Board of County Commissioners of Trumbull County, Ohio, to construct an overhead viaduct across the Mahoning River at Girard, Trumbull County, Ohio; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BRUCE:

A bill (S. 3932) authorizing certain dredging and filling in the vicinity of the Aberdeen Proving Grounds, Md.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BUTLER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 89) for participation of the United States in the Third World's Poultry Congress to be held at Ottawa, Canada, in 1927; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. FESS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 90) authorizing the publication of Madison's Debates of the Federal Convention and relevant documents, in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence; to the Committee on Printing.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. BUTLER, the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 3911) to reimburse the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for expenses incurred in compliance with the request of the United States marshal, dated December 6, 1917, to the Governor of Massachusetts, in furnishing the State military forces for duty on and around Boston Harbor under regulation 13 of the President's proclamation, and it was referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. WADSWORTH, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1130) to amend section 232 of the act of March 4, 1909 (35 Stat. L. p. 1134), forbidding the carrying of certain explosives on passenger trains, vessels, or vehicles used as common carriers of passengers, excepting munitions of war and small-arms powder, ammunition, and ammunition components shipped by the War Department or under its military organizations or civilian clubs, or to individual members of the National Rifle Association, and it was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

CONTRACTS CONNECTED WITH THE PROSECUTION OF THE WAR

Mr. ODDIE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 8641) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1919, as amended, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

PROPOSED PHILIPPINE MISSION

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution, which I ask to have read and lie on the table.

The resolution (S. Res. 196) was read, as follows:

Whereas it is reported that Carmel Thompson, Esq., of Ohio, has been appointed by the President without authority of Congress and without the advice and consent of the Senate, to go to the Philippine Islands, accompanied by a staff and retinue of experts, investigators, and clerks, to make an investigation of conditions in the Philippine Islands and of the affairs of the Philippine government and to report to the President upon the policy of the United States as affecting the political independence of the Philippine Islands; and

Whereas it is the exclusive function of Congress, under the Constitution, to determine the policy of the United States with respect to the Philippine Islands, and to make such investigations and visitations as it may deem advisable of the Territories and dependencies of the United States; and

Whereas Congress has made no provision for the payment of the expenditures of said Thompson and of his staff: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury advise the Senate as to whether or not any funds in the Treasury are available for the payment of the expenses of said Thompson and his staff under any existing appropriation act; and if not, what funds of the Government are to be advanced or made available for the use of said Thompson and his staff in the premises?

Mr. CURTIS. Let the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table.

COLORADO RIVER BASIN

Mr. JOHNSON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 197), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the report by F. E. Weymouth on the problems of the Colorado River Basin, dated February 28, 1924, together with the reports prepared by William Kelly and Herman Stabler, respectively, on special phases of the problems of the Colorado River Basin, the report by the committee of engineers to the Secretary of the Interior, dated March 17, 1924, and the supplementary report by F. E. Weymouth, dated June, 1924, be printed with illustrations as a Senate document.

BRANCH BUILDING FOR FEDERAL RESERVE BANK AT DETROIT, MICH.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 61) authorizing the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago to enter into contracts for the erection of a building for its branch establishment in the city of Detroit, Mich., which was to strike out the preamble.

Mr. COUZENS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House. It is simply the elimination of the whereases.

The motion was agreed to.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on House bill 8917, the War Department appropriation bill, which was read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,

April 6, 1926.

Resolved, That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 22, 28, and 48 to the bill (H. R. 8917) entitled "An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes," and concurs therein.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 3 and agree with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That hereafter enlisted men, including the members of the United States Army Band, entitled to receive allowances for quarters and subsistence shall continue, while their permanent stations remain unchanged, to receive such allowances while sick in hospital or absent from their permanent-duty stations in a pay status: Provided further, That allowances for subsistence shall not accrue to such an enlisted man while he is in fact being subsisted at Government expense."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 7 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$11,964,391."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 10 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$14,520,230."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 11 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "and of the said sum of $14,520,230, $30,000 shall be immediately available for transportation of troops to and from the celebration commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of the Little Big Horn."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 12 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 6 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "be," insert the following: "procured locally through National Guard officers whenever practicable and shall be."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 30 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$1,282,080, of which sum not to exceed $25,000 shall remain available until October 1, 1927, and may be used in completing agricultural research experiments in exterminating the cotton boll weevil."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 34 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$310,000: Provided, That not to exceed $2,000 of this sum shall be expended for travel of officers of the War Department General Staff in connection with the National Guard."

Mr. WADSWORTH. All these amendments were actually agreed upon in conference between the Senate and the House, but under the House rules they had to be returned to the House for separate and distinct action. This accounts for the message just laid before the Senate. I move that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House to the Senate amendments.

Mr. WARREN. And this completes the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This list of amendments completes the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York.

The motion was agreed to.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN (S. DOC. NO. 94)

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLEAKE in the chair) laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and, with the accompanying document, ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the requirement of section 6 of the trading with the enemy act, I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a communication from the Alien Property Custodian submitting the annual report of the proceedings had under the trading with the enemy act for the year ended December 31, 1925.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 9, 1926.

SENATOR FROM IOWA

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 194) declaring Daniel F. Steck to be duly elected Senator of the United States from the State of Iowa for the term beginning March 4, 1925.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the controversy giving rise to the pending privileged question before the Senate has been narrowed down until it is now confined within very restricted limits. The majority report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections advises the Senate that, as computed by it, Mr. Steck has a majority of 1,420 votes. Within those are included 1,344 votes which, if I have correctly appraised the temper of the Senate, ought to be accredited to Mr. Brookhart, reducing the majority to 76 votes.

The condition of the ballots giving rise to the 1,344 disputed votes is undoubtedly perfectly understood. There was a cross in the circle at the top of the Republican ticket, on which Mr. Brookhart's name appeared as the candidate of that party for United States Senate. There were likewise crosses opposite the names of some of the candidates on that ticket but not opposite the name of Senator Brookhart.

The committee, as I understand, declines to give Senator Brookhart credit for those votes, insisting that it was the intention of the voter manifested by the failure to put the cross opposite the name of Senator Brookhart not to vote for him.

I merely desire to say in that connection, Mr. President, that we must be governed in this matter, beyond question, by the law of the State of Iowa. The question at issue with respect to those particular votes has been the subject of consideration by the courts of a number of the States. In the State of Colorado it was held that a ballot so marked—

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question before he proceeds along that line of argument?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the intent of the voter should govern, then every ballot that has a legal defect should be excluded, should it not?

Mr. WALSH. I did not catch the Senator's question.

Mr. CARAWAY. I say if the committee was wrong in accepting the intent of the voter, it should then have excluded every ballot that did not meet the legal requirements of the law, should it not?

Mr. WALSH. I do not know how to answer that question.

Mr. CARAWAY. If I may trespass a little further on the Senator's time, one of two rules had to be adopted: Either the committee had to accept what it had understood to be the rule of the Senate, namely, the intent of the voter, or to find out what the legal act of the voter was. It had to follow one or the other of those rules. Is it the contention of the Senator that the committee ought to have followed the legal rule and given to the contestant and the contestee only such ballots as they were entitled to receive under the legal rule?

Mr. WALSH. I would not undertake to say that either one or the other is to be done. The voter expresses his intent in the manner prescribed by the law. My argument was to be to the effect that we must ascertain the intent of the voter from what he did, in the light of what the law is.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is to say, in other words, that the voter has no right to have his intention translated into a ballot unless he did some legal act that would have made his vote legal?

Mr. WALSH. It must be a legal vote as a matter of course.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the Senator know, then, how many votes are credited to each party that do not fall within that class at all?

Mr. WALSH. No; I do not.

Mr. CARAWAY. Would not the Senator want to know that before he made up his mind, then, on which side he should cast his vote in this contest?

Mr. WALSH. I can only make up my mind concerning the controverted questions, of course.

Mr. CARAWAY. I thought—

Mr. WALSH. Pardon me. There are a vast number of ballots that were passed upon by both parties and no record at all made of them. I can not undertake now to speak as to them. I have got to accept what is before us with respect to those ballots.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me ask the Senator a further question.

Mr. WALSH. I can pass upon only those ballots to which our attention is called.

Mr. CARAWAY. I thought that was exactly what the Senator was denying to the committee the right to do. The committee passed only on those questions that the parties to this contest brought to the committee, and they related only to 4,000 votes. Is the Senator in agreement with the committee that we ought not to have raised any question that the parties did not raise?

Mr. WALSH. No; what I undertake to say is that there is a question raised in relation to 1,344 votes. I insist that those 1,344 votes should be counted for Senator Brookhart.

Mr. CARAWAY. Under the legal interpretation?

Mr. WALSH. Under the law they must be counted for Senator Brookhart.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH. Now, wait a moment. If there are any other ballots that are controverted in any way, I should be very glad to give my views concerning how those ballots ought to be counted.

Mr. CARAWAY. The report shows and the record shows that there were 4,000 ballots that were controverted. The 16 classes of ballots submitted by the attorneys appear in the record, and these 1,344 votes fall in class 5. Every class is as much before the Senator as the 1,344 votes. If the Senator is going to invoke the legal rule to dispose of the 1,344 votes which fall in class 5, ought he not to invoke the same rule to dispose of those that fall in classes 2, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16?

Mr. WALSH. If anybody controverts those votes, I shall be very glad to give my opinion about the matter.

Mr. CARAWAY. They are in controversy.

Mr. WALSH. No one on this floor, so far as I know, is challenging the accuracy of the work with respect to those branches of the case.

Mr. CARAWAY. They were all challenged, but if the Senator wants to accept what the committee did with the other classes, the 1,344 votes make no difference. Give them to Mr. Brookhart and he still lacks 78 votes of having a plurality. The Senator's position is that he is not going to look into any others, but is going to talk only about the 1,344 votes. Consider them in any way the Senator wants to and they do not change the result.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I merely desire to say that I can not talk about anything that has not been controverted here. I have not been a member of the committee, and I have not made a study of the individual votes to find out whether or not they have been correctly counted. I assume they have been because the accuracy of the work of the committee with respect to those does not seem to be challenged.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me say a word further. I wish to understand the Senator. If he accepts everything the committee did except with reference to the 1,344 votes, it will make absolutely no difference which way the Senator decides as to them, because they do not constitute a plurality. That is the point I want to make clear. Is the Senator accepting everything the committee did except as to the 1,344 votes?

Mr. WALSH. I am accepting everything the committee did except with respect to—

Mr. CARAWAY. The 1,344 votes?

Mr. WALSH. The 1,344 votes and the count from the precincts where the number of ballots in the box was less than the number of names on the poll list.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is the Senator going into all those?

Mr. WALSH. I am going into those; yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. I thought the Senator said he was going to discuss only the votes about which a controversy arose. There never was a controversy about those before the committee, because nobody raised it. But if the Senator is going into them, then he has to consider the machine ballots. I presume he wants to treat them all alike.

Mr. WALSH. No; I do not have to.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, well—

Mr. WALSH. If anyone else wants to go into the machine ballots and make an issue with respect to them, of course, I shall direct my attention to that feature of the case, and I will try to decide the question as my judgment and my knowledge of the law enable me to do it. Just now I do not know of anyone who is challenging any work of the committee except with respect to these two classes of ballots.

Mr. CARAWAY. I wanted to ascertain the Senator's position, and then I shall not interrupt him further. If there is to be any distinction drawn and he is going to accept the committee's findings in some particulars and reject them in others, I was going to ask if the Senator thought the same rule ought not to apply to everything the committee did.

Mr. WALSH. I think, as a matter of course, we ought to go into everything that anybody challenges with respect to the work of the committee. If the work of the committee is not challenged with reference to 300,000 votes, I do not see any reason why anybody should go into the question of whether or not those 300,000 votes were correctly assigned.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me ask the Senator one more question and I will be through. Did not the committee have the same right to accept what the board of auditors did as the Senator has to accept what the committee did, if nobody challenges it, if no questions are to be raised except as to those about which there is a challenge? The board of auditors, who were hostile one to the other—

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President—

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me say this and I will not interrupt the Senator further. There is not a vote awarded to Mr. Brookhart that Steck's representative did not agree that he ought to have, nor is there a vote given to Steck that Brookhart's representative and attorney did not say he ought to have, except as to 4,000 votes. The Senator will find in the record where Mitchell himself says the only thing is the count, and there may be a question as to two or three hundred votes, but he never did follow that up. Would the Senator have accepted that statement?

Mr. WALSH. I was going to refer to that. As a matter of course, that involves the question as to whether with respect to the 76 plurality the count of the ballots in the box should be taken or whether the official count should be taken. Of course, I expect to talk about that. That is the only question, as I see it now, that remains in this case.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me ask the Senator another question. Where 198 ballots were absent the official count ought to have been accepted, ought it not?

Mr. WALSH. I think so.

Mr. CARAWAY. It was accepted, was it not?

Mr. WALSH. I think so.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is the only question about which they differed.

Mr. WALSH. I will reach that in due time, but I was going to say, Mr. President, when I was interrupted, that the intent of the voter is, in my judgment, to be gathered from what he did when he marked his ballot in the light of what the law in relation to the matter is. Attention has been repeatedly called to the statute, but prior to the time this statute was enacted, this very subject was a matter of consideration by the courts in a number of the Western States. In the State of Colorado it was held that a ballot thus marked was a nullity and signified that the voter intended to qualify the effect of the cross in the circle. As they expressed it, the special intent overruled the general intent expressed by the cross in the circle. That view, however, was repudiated by the Supreme Court of the State of Iowa, by the supreme court of my State, and by the Supreme Court of the State of South Dakota, all holding—and I shall not refer to the wording of the opinions, because they have heretofore been quoted—all holding that when the ballot is marked with a cross in the circle, under the law it counts as a vote for everyone on that ticket, and the effect is not changed by putting crosses opposite the names of any of the candidates on the ticket. That rule, so expressed by the Supreme Court of the State of Iowa under the old law, was crystalized and made perfectly clear, as it seems to me, by the law under which this election was conducted, as is provided in section 811 of the statutes:

If the names of all the candidates for whom a voter desires to vote appear upon the same ticket, and he desires to vote for all candidates whose names appear upon such ticket, he may do so in any one of the following ways:

1. He may place a cross in the circle at the top of such ticket without making a cross in any squares beneath said circle.
2. He may place a cross in the square opposite the name of each such candidate without making any cross in the circle at the top of such ticket.
3. He may place a cross in the circle at the top of such ticket and also a cross in any or all of the squares beneath said circle.

In any one of those three ways he may indicate that he desires to vote for all on that ticket.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WALSH. I will ask the Senator to pardon me just a moment.

Now, reversing the matter, let us try to get at what the voter intended to do. If we find that he put a cross in the circle at the top of the ticket and did not do anything else, we are forced under the statute to believe that he intended to vote for every man on that ticket. If he put a cross opposite the name of every man on the ticket but did not put any cross in the circle at the top, again the statute forces us to assume that it was his intent to vote for every man on that ticket. Finally, Mr. President, if he has put a cross in the circle at the top and then put a cross opposite the name of any or all of the candidates upon the ticket, then we are likewise forced to the conclusion under the statute, and the statute makes it our duty to assume, that it was his intent to vote for every candidate upon that ticket.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question right there?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CARAWAY. This is a new code from which the Senator quotes. It went into effect on the 28th day of October, 1924, just six days before the election. The instructions to the voters must go to the voters and to the polling places 30 days before the election. Does the Senator think a voter ought to be disfranchised because he was instructed to vote a certain way, and voted according to the legal instructions given to him, and a new code coming into effect, that he had never had an opportunity to see, possibly, prescribed a different rule?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I thought I made that perfectly clear. It is a matter of no consequence at all, as I see it, that the statute was only 10 days old—

Mr. CARAWAY. It was not that old.

Mr. WALSH. Or nine days, or whatever time it was, because the statute simply expressed the law as the Supreme Court of Iowa had declared it to be under the preexisting law.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator another question? If that is true, then if there was no change in the statute, and you are willing to let the people in Iowa construe that statute, the instructions that went to the voters were just exactly opposite from what the Senator says the law is.

Mr. WALSH. I can not help that.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course, the Senator can not help it; but I am asking him whether he believes that a voter ought to be disfranchised because the law officers of Iowa told him how to vote, and the kind of law they had—the Senator says it was not changed—and the instructions that went to the voters were exactly opposite from what the Senator says is the law in Iowa. He says the law has not been changed.

Mr. WALSH. It has not.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is the Senator asking the Senate, then, to disfranchise the people of Iowa for obeying the law as the officers of Iowa said they should?

Mr. WALSH. No; I am not asking the Senate to disfranchise the people of the State of Iowa at all. I am asking the Senate to give expression to the choice of the people of the State of Iowa according to the law.

Mr. CARAWAY. As they understood it, or as the Senator understands it?

Mr. WALSH. As the law is.

Mr. CARAWAY. But as they understood it, or as the Senator understands it?

Mr. WALSH. I am unable, any more than the Senator is, to say how they understood it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, no; the Senator can look at the ballot, and he can not miss it, because it is so absolutely plain that no one can misunderstand it. Here is what I am getting to: If the Senator wants to say that this new code, which pretends to prescribe three ways to vote a straight ticket without defining what a straight ticket is, shall receive his interpretation, then 900,000 voters voted under a misapprehension of what the law was.

Mr. WALSH. I do not care to enter into a discussion of that subject, Mr. President.

Mr. CARAWAY. Pardon me; I asked the question because I intend to discuss it.

Mr. WALSH. I can not convince myself that the Senate of the United States, any more than a judge of the State of Iowa, is entitled to disregard the law of the State of Iowa in determining who is elected in that State under the laws of the State as prescribed by the constitution.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. GOFF. Do I understand the Senator's contention relative to section 811 of the code of 1924 to be that the three provisions there set out are mandatory or directory?

Mr. WALSH. I do not know how to answer that question. These questions seem to me rather difficult to understand. The statute says that if the voter desires to vote a straight ticket, he may do it in any one of these three ways. If he wants to vote a straight ticket, it appears that he must do it in one of these three ways, and to that extent it is mandatory. Of course, there is no mandate about it at all. He does not have to vote at all if he does not want to.

Mr. GOFF. If it were mandatory, then I infer that the Senator would eliminate the actual intent of the voter as expressed in one of the three methods of voting.

Mr. WALSH. No; not at all. If he votes in any one of those three ways, we are conclusively bound to presume that he intended to vote for everybody on the ticket.

Mr. GOFF. Then the Senator would construe that it is a mandatory provision.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The Senator says that it is presumed that the voter intended to vote the entire ballot. Why should the Senator presume that, any more than he should presume that the voter intended to exercise his privilege under section 812 of voting part of a ticket only? These ballots show that he intended to vote part of the ticket only.

Mr. WALSH. Let us see.

Mr. TRAMMELL. He was exercising his right under the law to vote part of the ticket only; and the Senator would construe that he did not intend that, but that he intended to vote the entire ballot. He is exercising one of his privileges under the statute, and the Senator would construe that to mean that he intended to exercise the privilege of voting the entire ballot, when as a matter of fact he had just as much right to vote part of the ballot as he did to vote all of it.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator is quite right, that all parts of the statute are to be construed together. If he is right about section 812, as a matter of course, the argument which I made falls; but let us see what section 814 provides, as follows:

If the names of all the candidates for whom a voter desires to vote do not appear upon the same ticket, he may indicate the candidates of his choice by marking his ballot in any one of the following ways.

That is to say, a man desires to vote for most of the Republican candidates, but he wants to vote for a Democratic candidate for United States Senator. Now, he votes according to section 814, namely:

He may place a cross in the circle at the top of a ticket on which the names of some of the candidates for whom he desires to vote appear, and also a cross in the square opposite the name of each other candidate of his choice whose name appears upon some ticket other than the one in which he has marked the circle at the top.

It is perfectly evident, Mr. President, that this particular voter did not want to vote for any candidate except the Republican candidate. If he did not want to vote for any particular Republican candidate, he likewise did not want to vote for his opponent upon the Democratic ticket or some other ticket. Section 814 simply provides how he shall vote if he wants to vote for some candidates on one ticket and some candidates on another ticket; so he may place a cross in the circle at the top, and he may place a cross opposite the names of candidates for whom he desires to vote for special places in the other ticket.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I call the Senator's attention to one thing in looking at the ballot? It is in section 1120:

If for any reason it is impossible to determine the voter's choice for any office, his ballot shall not be counted for such office; but a mark in the circle of any ticket on the ballot shall not be held to make it impossible to determine the voter's choice.

Therefore it does not control.

Mr. WALSH. I referred, Mr. President, to the decision of the Supreme Court of the State of Iowa; but I read just a sentence from the case of Whittam v. Zaborik (91 Iowa), decided away back in 1894. I read from page 32:

When the cross is placed in the circle preceding the party appellation, the ballot so marked "shall be counted as cast for all the candidates named after that title," excepting, only, that when the name or names of one or more candidates on another ticket are marked, the ballot is to be counted for the candidates on the other ticket whose names are so marked—but the ticket in which the circle preceding the title is marked is to be counted as cast for all candidates whose names are printed upon it, excepting those for offices for which names on another ticket were marked and counted as stated. Hence, when a voter has marked his ticket by placing a cross in the circle opposite the title, he does not add to the legal effect of that marking by placing crosses in squares opposite the names of candidates on the same ticket.

That leaves it just exactly as if he had not marked those candidates at all. That rule, Mr. President, is expressed quite clearly in the case of Potts v. Folsom (24 Okla. 731) decided by the Supreme Court of Oklahoma, in which it is said:

To our minds it seems clear that under this statute—

And the statute is not in exactly the same language, but it is the same class of statute—

To our minds it seems clear that under this statute a stamp in the circle at the head of the list of candidates is the statutory method provided whereby a voter may manifest his intention to vote for every candidate under that stamp. If this is true, and after having placed the stamp there the voter has succeeded in voting for all of these candidates, then the placing of additional stamps in front of the different names on that same list would either constitute distinguishing marks or be without any effect whatsoever. These are held not to be distinguishing marks in the McClelland v. Irwin case, supra. Hence we conclude they are without effect. Our conclusion herein seems to be supported by the case of Dickerman v. Gelsthorpe (19 Mont. 249, 47 Pac. 999); Spurrier v. McLennan (115 Iowa 461, 88 N. W. 1062); Whittam v. Zaborik (91 Iowa 23, 59 N. W. 57, 51 Am. St. Rep. 317); McKittrick v. Pardee (8 S. D. 39, 65 N. W. 23).

I have here the case of Gelsthorpe against Dickerman in the Supreme Court of Montana; and the decision in that case was followed in the case of State v. Frausham, in nineteenth Montana, in which I am reminded by the record that I appeared as counsel.

So, if these 1,344 votes not counted for Mr. Brookhart by the majority are counted for him, the apparent majority is reduced to 76 votes; and as to those the question is determined by whether, with respect to those precincts in which the number of ballots in the box varied from the number of names on the poll list, being either less or more, we must follow the actual count of the ballots that were returned to the committee by the local authorities or whether we must resort to the official count.

If we go according to the count made by the committee of the ballots which came to them, the seat belongs to Steck. If we go by the official returns from those particular precincts, then the seat goes to Senator Brookhart. The whole question depends upon whether, in view of the shortage or the excess of ballots, if I may so express myself, the official count must be resorted to.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. GOFF. I was diverted a moment before the Senator left the subject which he was discussing, and I wish to ask the Senator what is the legal or intentioned purpose subverted by permitting or advising voters to physically vote twice for the same candidate?

Mr. WALSH. I do not know, except that the statute contemplated that a cross in the circle meant a vote for all of the candidates under the circle, but quite likely it was found that some voter wanted to make perfectly sure that he was going to vote for a favorite candidate, and so, to enforce the thing, he put a cross opposite the name of his favorite candidate, or candidates, and it was not intended that he should be disfranchised by reason of the fact that he had done so.

Mr. GOFF. Was it not the opinion of those in charge of elections, based upon actual experience, that such voters, whether they voted the Republican or the Democratic ticket, desired to register their political affiliations, and then, having done that by placing a cross in the circle at the head of their respective party columns, they were permitted, if they so desired, to vote a second time for some one upon the ticket, but that the main purpose was to register the political affiliation of the voter generally, rather than specifically?

Mr. WALSH. Of course, that is quite contrary to the statute, because the statute says that if a voter wants to vote for everyone upon the ticket he puts a cross at the top. The cross at the top indicates that he desires to vote for everybody on the ticket. It might be that if the Senator were framing the statute, he would frame it differently; but that is the law of Iowa.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is discussing a question which has troubled me very much; I think I have told him so privately. Does the Senator think that the 1,344 individual voters who voted the ticket a copy of which is on the wall, intended, when they left that blank in front of Mr. Brookhart's name, to vote for Mr. Brookhart?

Mr. WALSH. I can only judge by what the law says. That has been the law of Iowa, clearly expressed, since 1894. For 30 years it has been known in the State of Iowa that a vote like that was a vote for every man upon the ticket.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption at that point?

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one moment. Let me ask one other question about that. Disregarding for the moment the equation of the law, and just taking the vote as it appears there, does not the absence of a cross in front of Senator Brookhart's name indicate that the voter did not intend to vote for him?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a voter is understood to vote in the light of the law. If there were no law upon the subject, I might agree with the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. It seems to me that when a voter marks the other candidates on the Republican ticket, or a number of them, and fails to mark the square in front of this candidate, he does not intend to cast any vote for anyone for the office of United States Senator.

Mr. WALSH. I say to the Senator that if it had not been known for 30 years to be the law in the State of Iowa that the cross in the circle meant a vote for everyone under the circle, and that it is not destroyed at all by a cross opposite each individual name, I should say that perhaps he was correct.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me at that point?

Mr. WALSH. I yield; but let me say that I can not dispossess myself of the idea that it must have been known all through the State of Iowa that a cross in the circle at the top meant a vote for every candidate under the circle.

Mr. GEORGE. I am not in disagreement with the Senator about the 1,344 votes, so far as I am personally concerned; I want to make myself perfectly clear on that; but I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that it has not been the law in Iowa for 30 years that a cross in the circle meant a vote for the whole ticket, because for many years the circle in Iowa was completely outlawed and it was restored by the code of 1919. At one time in the early history of Iowa, about 30 years ago, there was a circle provided for the ticket, and then, by express provision of the law or ruling from some authoritative source, the party circle was entirely removed from the ticket and it was not restored until 1919.

Mr. WALSH. I am glad to be corrected by the Senator.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me suggest that it was restored with an instruction that is entirely at variance with the conclusion the Senator places on it now. Did the Senator see one of the official ballots containing the instruction that went to the voter? Has he ever seen one of them?

Mr. WALSH. I have not paid any attention to the instructions to the voters by the official whose business it is to interpret the law.

Mr. CARAWAY. Here is the ballot sent out, an official ballot that was voted on November 4, 1924. Iowa has an absent voters law, and they had to instruct the voter on the bottom of his ticket how to vote, and this was the language:

To vote a straight party ticket, mark a cross in circle only.

That means that he shall mark a cross nowhere else.

If not voting straight party ticket mark a cross in the square over the name for which you wish to vote and also mark your party ticket circle.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, that is plainly in contravention of the law.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is the way the officials understood the law, and that is the way this man voted. That is the way 900,000 people in Iowa understood the law, and that is the way the officers understood it. Now, the Senator says that is not the law; but everybody in Iowa thought it was.

Mr. WALSH. I have not heard of anybody who has made any explanation of the law other than that which I have advanced.

Mr. CARAWAY. Just a moment ago the Senator said that the way to vote a straight ticket had been settled in Iowa for 30 years. Now he discovers that the circle was restored only in 1919, and the instructions sent out to the voters state that a cross in the circle does not control.

Mr. WALSH. I must govern myself by the law.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator said the law had not been changed.

Mr. WALSH. I must govern myself by the law.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, does not the Senator believe that the construction of the law given to it in Iowa ought to control over any opinion which an individual outside of Iowa might have regarding it?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if there were any ambiguity or doubt about it, of course we ought to give attention to the interpretation put upon the law by the officers charged with the execution of it. I would cheerfully yield my own opinion to theirs if there were any ambiguity in it. To my mind there is none.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It appears here that the official controllers of election in Iowa did interpret the law otherwise.

Mr. WALSH. The instructions were otherwise, not necessarily that they interpreted it in that way. They sent out those instructions, which to my mind are flatly contradictory of the law. I can not help that.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. If instead of omitting the cross in the square opposite Senator Brookhart's name the 1,344 persons whose alleged "straight" votes we are considering had written in the square the declaration, "I do not intend to vote for Brookhart," would the Senator from Montana have given the votes in question to Senator Brookhart?

Mr. WALSH. No; that would be a distinguishing mark on the ballot. That would invalidate the ballot.

Mr. NEELY. Assuming that under the law of Iowa the ballots would not have been invalidated by the insertion of the declaration I have suggested, would the Senator consider that the votes should be given to Brookhart?

Mr. WALSH. I could not assume that, because if the voter did anything of that kind of course the ballot would be a nullity.

Mr. NEELY. Then does the Senator think that all of the ballots which have arrows or other marks on them indicating the voter's choice of candidates should have been rejected?

Mr. WALSH. As I said to the Senator from Arkansas, I can not discuss any of these ballots about which I do not know anything. Of course, in all of these systems, in Iowa as well, as I understand the matter, the voter may write in the name of the candidate for whom he desires to vote.

Mr. NEELY. Is it not the law of the Senator's State, and the law generally, that the real purpose of a recount or of a contest is to ascertain the actual intent of the voter and give effect to that intent?

Mr. WALSH. That is quite right—

Mr. NEELY. The manifest intent of the voter must govern?

Mr. WALSH. But his intent is to be gathered in the light of the law.

Mr. NEELY. Does the Senator know of any decision of an election contest by this body in which the intent of the voter has not been considered the controlling factor?

Mr. WALSH. That is a universal rule of law, that the intent of the voter governs, and what is his intention is to be gathered from what he does, in the light of the law under which he votes. Let me say, further, if it ever were decided that the law required that a vote be counted one way, and it was counted another way upon the assumption that the voter's intent was otherwise, I should say we would be obliged to follow the law.

Mr. NEELY. In other words, if the clearly expressed intention of the voter conflicts in any manner whatsoever with the statute of the State in which the ballot is cast, then the law is to be strictly followed and, if necessary, the voter disfranchised.

Mr. WALSH. No; if his ballot is marked contrary to the law, it can not be counted. It must be entirely consistent with the law in order to be counted at all.

Mr. NEELY. But if the ballot is not marked contrary to the law, but simply in a way not expressly authorized by the statute, yet in such a manner as to make perfectly clear the voter's intention—what would the Senator do with it?

Mr. WALSH. The intent is to be judged from what a voter does in the light of the law, as I have said heretofore. If, in the light of the law the intention of the voter can be gathered, of course the ballot is to be counted as he intended to vote it.

Mr. NEELY. Can the Senator cite any election case decided by the Senate in which it is held that the intention of the voter is to be determined by the statute of the State in which the contest arises?

Mr. WALSH. No; I have not searched for any, but I am sure the Senator will find the principle stated.

Mr. NEELY. I do not believe that the Senate has ever so decided. On the contrary, it has been held many times that where the intention of the voter can be ascertained, that intention shall unconditionally prevail.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but if the statute provides that if he votes in a certain way it is to be presumed that he intended to vote for a particular candidate, then that is his intent, and we can not get at it in any other way.

Mr. NEELY. But suppose the voter marks a cross in the circle at the head of a certain ticket, thereby indicating his party affiliation or manifesting his intention to vote "straight." And suppose that he then proceeds to mark a cross in the square opposite the name of every candidate on that ticket from President to constable, excepting only the candidate for the Senate—in this case Mr. Brookhart.

In the circumstances and in the light of the recent political history of Iowa, does the Senator not think that the voter who marked his ballot in the manner I have indicated has unmistakably manifested his intention not to vote for Senator Brookhart as if he had written that declaration across the face of the ballot?

Mr. WALSH. I have expressed my view about the matter. I can not in the light of the law reach any other conclusion than that the man who voted with a cross in the circle and also put crosses opposite the names of the candidates in the same ticket intended to vote for everybody on that ticket. If there were no law at all and we were merely to judge of the thing and dispossess our minds entirely of what the law requires in the matter, I might be able to agree with the Senator.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. NEELY. Five hundred and eighty-five of the one thousand three hundred and forty-four ballots in controversy were marked with a cross in the circle at the head of the Republican ticket. The squares in front of the names of Coolidge and Dawes were marked. The square before Senator Brookhart's name was not marked. All other squares on the ticket, including those before the names of candidates for local petty offices, were marked.

By his failure to make a cross or mark in the square before the name of the contestee, did the voter not conclusively prove that he did not intend to vote for Senator Brookhart?

Mr. WALSH. The law says he intended to vote for him.

Mr. NEELY. I am not asking the Senator to construe the law. What does the Senator think the voter intended to do?

Mr. WALSH. I have already answered the Senator. If we dispossess our minds entirely of what the law requires and of the knowledge which the voter is supposed to have of the law, I should be disposed to agree with the Senator that he did not intend to vote for Brookhart; but the law makes the intent conclusive.

Mr. NEELY. In the recent Nye case a number of Senators, including myself, took the position that the intention or spirit of the law is of more importance than its letter. Many of us who then acted upon that principle believe that we now ought to be consistent and vote in this contest to give effect to the manifest intention of a plurality of the voters of Iowa instead of outraging that intention by enforcing a technicality.

Mr. WALSH. I find no fault with what the Senator is going to do.

Mr. NEELY. I am sure that the Senator does not, and I thank him for the spirit of tolerance of which his generous statement is born.

Mr. WALSH. I am sure the Senator reaches the conclusion conscientiously, but he will likewise remember that I did not agree with him in the Nye case.

Mr. NEELY. I recall that fact with regret; but I know that the able Senator was conscientious in that case, just as he is in this.

Mr. WALSH. I felt it in that case at that time my duty to follow the law and I feel it my duty in this case to follow the law.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator is quite consistent in voting for Mr. Brookhart in the light of the vote he cast in the Nye case. I think I am equally consistent in voting for Mr. Steck in view of the fact that I worked and voted for Senator NYE.

Mr. WALSH. Then, Mr. President, if there is nothing further to be said on that branch of the case, and I do not desire to say anything myself, I go to the other question, namely, with respect to the precincts in which the discrepancy occurred, whether the count of the ballots should be taken or the official count should be taken. I regret that so much time has been taken on the other aspect of the case because I hoped to have a larger audience when I discussed what I conceive to be the real controversial question remaining in the case.

With respect to this question, as I understand the contention of those supporting the conclusion of the majority, it is that by reason of some stipulation which was entered into or some agreement which was made or some course of conduct upon the part of the contestee or his representative, the contestee is estopped from complaining that the count is not the true record of the vote in those particular precincts.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLEASE in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator said that if the contestee agreed as to how the vote should be brought here and counted, he is estopped.

Mr. WALSH. No; I was trying to state, as I understand it, the contention of those supporting the majority report to the effect that by reason of acts of the contestee or those representing him, or by reason of some stipulation which he entered into, he is estopped from asserting that the count of the votes should not be taken, but that the official return should be taken.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the Senator agree that when he enters into a stipulation and everybody lives up to it—

Mr. WALSH. I am trying to state the contention of the opponents. I have not undertaken yet to state my position.

Mr. CARAWAY. I was trying to ascertain the Senator's position. Is it his position that if the contestee does agree and everybody acts upon that agreement, he is estopped?

Mr. WALSH. That is a matter I am going to discuss.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is what I was trying to find out.

Mr. WALSH. That is the whole controversy right now.

Mr. President, I desire to say that I have followed the discussion with such attention as I have been able to give to it, and I have been here nearly all the time. My attention has been called to no stipulation by which Senator Brookhart agreed that the count of the ballots should determine the contest without any reference to the question as to whether the number of ballots conformed to the names on the poll lists.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. WALSH. Just a moment. Furthermore I do not conceive at all that the mere matter of agreeing to appoint counters of the ballots in the box or any act done in connection with the counting of the ballots in the box operates in any manner whatever as an estoppel against contending that the ballots did not come here in proper form nor that the official count could not be resorted to by reason of discrepancy. Now I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the contestee agreed as to how the votes should be brought here and counted, and they were brought here and counted in accordance with his agreement, and no question was raised about it, then would he be estopped from disputing that they had been recounted?

Mr. WALSH. Let me remark, Mr. President, that that is the subject upon which I am going to try to express my views and of course the Senator will have to draw his conclusion after my discussion.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I suggest—

Mr. WALSH. The Senator wants me to state in advance my attitude with respect to the matter. I would rather state my views about the matter and then eventually state my conclusion about it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I wanted to call the Senator's attention to this fact. Senator Brookhart himself said that if we brought the ballots down here in accordance with the stipulation, he was estopped from raising any question about it. Would the Senator agree with him if he stated that, and if we did bring them here in accordance with the stipulation?

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will advise me where in the record such a stipulation is to be found, I will answer him.

Mr. BAYARD. It is on page 338 of the hearings.

Mr. WALSH. I have read that page.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is exactly what he said. He said he would be estopped. He denied, however, that they had done it. The record shows that he did agree to it, and that he was conversant with every step that was taken and his attorney knew it, and they all ratified it. They threw the ballots back and never raised that question until the result was apparent. Is he estopped according to his own statement?

Mr. WALSH. I listened to the Senator make that argument the other day.

Mr. CARAWAY. Would not this be true—

Mr. WALSH. I do not care to discuss the subject as to whether it is true or whether it is not true.

Mr. CARAWAY. But assuming that it is true?

Mr. WALSH. The Senator calls my attention to the hearings on page 338 where this occurred, and this was after the count took place:

Senator BROOKHART. Here is the way this count was started. We had this board with Colonel Thayer at the head selected by the committee, with two assistants, one nominated by me and one nominated by Mr. Steck. We agreed first how these ballots should be handled. The committee took its own method and summoned them down here. If they had followed the method we agreed upon I would say that I was estopped from asserting rules of law, but that was not done. Therefore, I maintain that I can raise all the different law questions just as though we had proceeded without any agreement from the start.

Mr. CARAWAY. If he is mistaken about the committee not following his agreement, does the Senator say he is estopped? He said he was.

Mr. WALSH. I do not care to answer that question. I would prefer to make my argument in my own way.

Mr. President, much caustic criticism has been directed against Senator Brookhart in connection with the contention upon his part that with respect to these particular precincts the official count must be taken and not the count of the ballots which were returned by the local authorities. It is contended that he stipulated or it is contended that his acts had put him in the position where he is estopped from making that contention.

It will be borne in mind that that criticism as a matter of course is directed just exactly as much against the Members of this body who take the view that he is entitled to have the official return as it is against Senator Brookhart, because those of us who support the contention that he has a right to resort to that return and that the Senate must resort to it, if the contention is correct, are condoning and indorsing and supporting this breach of ethics, to use no harsher term, upon the part of Senator Brookhart. There is no Member of this body so far as I know, and certainly I am able to speak for myself, who has any desire whatever to hold Senator Brookhart absolved from any stipulation that he made with respect to this matter. Certainly I have none. Neither have I any disposition to hold him absolved from the effect of any acts that were done by him in the course of this proceeding. I simply do not take the view of it expressed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. I do not think he is estopped, and my views about the matter I am quite willing to state.

I have no doubt in the world that the matter Senator Brookhart had in mind when the remark was made, to which our attention is now directed as in the nature of a stipulation estopping him from insisting that the official count must be taken, was the preliminary proof that would be made ordinarily in the trial of a case concerning the care and custody of those ballots before they were presented in court. If this were a trial in an action at law, whenever the ballots were produced by the legal officer in whose custody they were, then would arise the question as to whether they had been properly kept, and kept not only so they were not tampered with but so that no opportunity had been afforded to permit them to be tampered with.

But, Mr. President, this lawsuit is not being tried, if it may be so described, before a judge or a court of law out in the State of Iowa and before a jury where the objections can be made in advance when the ballots are offered.

Mr. President, with respect to all these matters of which I speak, if the contestee, at the time the ballots were produced and before the envelopes were opened, did not object upon the ground that the preliminary proof of their care and custody had not been made, I dare say he would thereby have waived the objection so far as that is concerned; but, of course, so far as there was a discrepancy between the number of names on the poll list and the number of ballots in the box, he could not know anything about that until after the packages were opened and the ballots were counted. Then it became a question of law as to whether the actual count should control or resort be had to the official return. So we must distinguish between the proof concerning the care and custody of the ballots or the packages containing the ballots and the discrepancy between the actual count and the official return.

They stand upon an entirely different footing, in my estimation. One of them could be waived, I think, if the case were being tried before a court out in the State of Iowa; the other could not be waived and would not be waived.

But, Mr. President, that is not the situation. The proceedings here conform more nearly not to a proceeding at law but to a proceeding in equity, where the testimony is not taken before the judge who tries the case in actual trial but is taken before a master in chancery who has no power to dispose of anything. If the controversy were thus being tried, the objection would be made, it would be noted, the packages would be opened, the ballots would be counted, just as they have been counted here, and then, eventually, when the matter came finally before the judge of the court, as it finally comes before this body, the question would have to be determined upon the objection that was originally made.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. May I inquire—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WALSH. I will yield, first, to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. If it were a case in equity, would not this procedure have been followed: While they would have noted the discrepancy, they would have kept separately the protested ballots, so that there could have been an opportunity for the court to pass upon the question and arrive at a definite conclusion according to the theory which the court entertained? That, however, was not done in this case.

Mr. WALSH. No; I do not so understand. These ballots were opened, and if the case were being tried before a judge, as an equity case would be tried, it would have been done just exactly the same way, both sides understanding that no matter what objection was made to the introduction of the ballots in evidence it would be simply noted, the packages would be opened, and the count would actually be made.

Mr. GEORGE. No, Mr. President, the Senator from Montana is vitally wrong about that.

Mr. WALSH. I should be glad to be corrected by the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. Specific instructions were given on the first day the subcommittee convened that not a single ballot objected to or about which counsel raised a question should go into the count.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly; but that is not the point at all. The count was made; that is, the count of the ballots concerning which there was no objection at all and those in relation to which there was a dispute were noted, and all of those went to the subcommittee. Is not that correct?

Mr. GEORGE. All of the questions, of course, went to the subcommittee; but if the Senator will read the first day's proceedings of the committee he will see that the specific instruction, the specific understanding—not vague and general—was that the counters should not take into consideration and should have nothing to do with, except to set aside for the full committee, any question about which there was any dispute.

Mr. WALSH. I understand that perfectly well; and that is just exactly what a master in chancery would do if he were taking the testimony. He would take the testimony, and with respect to a certain number of ballots no notation whatever would be made; he would make no report about those at all. That was done here with respect to ballots concerning which there was no controversy. Those with respect to which there was a controversy were reported to the full committee. Now, the point I am making is that, in view of the proceedings that were to take place, the mere matter of the agreement that certain men should represent each party in the counting of votes does not signify anything and does not operate as an estoppel of anything.

Mr. GEORGE. It signifies everything, because their agreement that a ballot was to be a good ballot was forever to foreclose the committee. That was the plain, unmistakable agreement.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator does not address his mind at all to the proposition that I am making.

Mr. GEORGE. I may misunderstand the Senator, but the Senator puts himself in this attitude, if I may be pardoned the allusion: He has just been talking about the law, and now he is over in a court of equity, applying a different rule. In one instance he is standing on the naked law and in the other he is going over to the equity side, if I may be pardoned the suggestion. The proceeding before these counters, however—

Mr. WALSH. Excuse me; I must interrupt the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well.

Mr. WALSH. I merely said that the proceeding had here very properly approximates more nearly the method of taking testimony and hearing and determining an equity case than a law case. I am appealing to no principle of equity at all.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not want the Senator from Montana to get the impression that the work done by the supervisors and counters was merely preliminary; it was final, and to be absolutely final, except as to the matters they brought back to us and said, "These are in dispute."

Mr. WALSH. I understand that perfectly well. I have not endeavored to convey any other impression.

Mr. GEORGE. Then I did not understand the Senator. So far as concerns all of the votes which they agreed upon as being good, from whatever precinct they came, whether a precinct in which the vote tallied with the poll sheets or from a precinct in which the actual ballots did not tally with the names on the poll sheets, those votes agreed to be good were counted. It was the whole purpose of the proceeding that they should be finally and irrevocably held to be good votes for one party or the other.

Mr. WALSH. All that is entirely aside from the argument I am trying to make that the votes would be counted regardless of any objection that might have been urged concerning the custody of the packages.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator; but what troubles me is that a proper proceeding would have segregated the contested ballots and kept them with the precincts where there was a discrepancy, because, otherwise, we would have no record upon which we could intelligently pass unless we adopted the theory of the majority of the committee. That is the difficulty here.

Mr. WALSH. I do not follow the Senator there at all.

Mr. LENROOT. They took the protested ballots from the precincts where there was a discrepancy and put them into the mass of ballots where there was no discrepancy, and consequently we have no way of knowing as to the protested ballots.

Mr. WALSH. What difference does it make whether they were kept separate or whether they were put into the mass?

Mr. LENROOT. It makes this difference, that if the Senator's theory is correct then those protested ballots are entirely out of the case, are they not? Because if we take the official return, then we ought to have, for the Senate to pass upon, the contested ballots that came from precincts where there was no discrepancy; and those we have not got.

Mr. WALSH. But no question is raised about those.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, yes; there are protested ballots, and we do not know which is which.

Mr. GOFF. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. WALSH. I will yield in a moment. I may be exceedingly dull, but I do not follow the Senator from Wisconsin at all.

Mr. LENROOT. There were 789 precincts in which there were protested ballots, amounting to three thousand and odd in number. Then from the precincts where there were discrepancies there were 5,400 ballots. All the ballots of both classes are put together in a common mass. If the Senator's theory is correct—and I am inclined to think it is—how are we to determine those contested ballots from the ballots from precincts where there was no discrepancy?

Mr. WALSH. This is the way I see the situation: The counters went on and counted the ballots concerning which there was no controversy, both sides agreeing that a ballot was either for Steck or a ballot for Brookhart or it was a ballot for neither of them. There is no need of keeping those separate at all.

Mr. LENROOT. No; I do not refer to those.

Mr. WALSH. They may be thrown together. There are certain ballots which were contested either by one or the other of the parties and reported, amounting to some 7,000 altogether, as my recollection is. Then the attorney for Brookhart and the attorney for Steck got together, going over the work of the counters, and they agreed upon a large number of other ballots, and those did not go before the committee but they went into the general heap.

Then the committee classified into 16 different classes the contested ballots. They disposed of those; they disposed of them apparently in a way that was entirely satisfactory to both of the parties, and those went into the general mass. But with respect to these two classes there is a controversy here upon the floor. The question is presented as to whether or not the 1,344 ballots, which we will say for the purpose of the case are in the general heap, should be counted. It does not make any difference whether they are in the general heap or whether they are in a separate package; the question is, Shall they be counted?

Mr. LENROOT. That is true.

Mr. WALSH. The character of those ballots is fully disclosed here.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly. I am not speaking of those ballots.

Mr. WALSH. So that with reference to the ballots of the other three or five precincts, why should they be kept? It is a simple question. We have the facts about the matter; we could get no further even by an examination of the ballots. There is a shortage of 20 in one case, 22 in another, and 20 in another, comparing the ballots with the number of names on the poll list. Now, why not put them into the general heap as well?

Mr. LENROOT. Because the Senate is not following that theory in passing on any contested ballots. It is impossible for the Senate to do so, because the greater part of them should not be considered at all under that view of the law, for we take the official count that throws them out; otherwise we are counting them twice. Is not that true?

Mr. WALSH. I do not see that at all.

Mr. LENROOT. If we take the official count, and then there are 10,000 contested ballots, and count them, too, are we not counting the same ballots twice?

Mr. WALSH. But the 1,344 were not counted.

Mr. LENROOT. I am not speaking of the 1,344; I take the Senator's view as to them; but there are still a large number of ballots, and we do not know to which class they belong.

Mr. WALSH. No; there is no controversy here about those.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Who is controverting them? No question has been raised about them that I have heard.

Mr. LENROOT. There is no controversy as to how they should be counted, if they should be counted; but there is a controversy as to whether they should be counted at all or not in certain cases.

Mr. WALSH. These 1,344 ballots are not in the count.

Mr. LENROOT. I am not speaking of the 1,344; those are settled; the 1,344 of the 6,000 as to which we have information upon which we can pass our judgment; but even as to those 1,344 they should not be all counted, because part of them come from precincts where the official count should be taken, and, therefore, they should not be considered if we take the official count.

Mr. WALSH. I do not know; that might be all right; they might be duplicated in some precincts; but I have no information about that.

Mr. LENROOT. That is the point. Have we a record upon which we can pass any judgment?

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, that might be all right; they might be duplicated in those precincts, but I have no information about that.

Mr. LENROOT. That is the point. It is a question of what we have here in the record. Have we a record upon which we can base any judgment?

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will pardon me, I assume that if there should be any deduction from these 1,344 on account of these five disputed precincts out of the 1,800, the fact would be called to our attention.

Mr. LENROOT. I was referring to the 1,068 precincts in which there are discrepancies.

Mr. WALSH. But these 1,344 ballots came from the 1,800 precincts.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly; all the paper ballots.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to suggest—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield first to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. GOFF. I wish to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he will kindly descend to a greater particularity in the question which he propounded to the Senator from Montana as to the class of ballots to which he referred, as well as the precincts from which those ballots come.

Mr. LENROOT. My view is that if this question as to discrepancy was to be raised, it was the duty of the committee or their subordinates to have segregated every protested ballot that came from a precinct in which there was a discrepancy, because if the Senate shall follow the rule of law suggested by the Senator from Montana, then those protested ballots can not have any bearing on this case, because we take the official count.

Mr. WALSH. I fully agree with the Senator that it may be possible that the 1,344 should be depleted by the number of those ballots which came from the precincts in which there was an excess or a deficiency.

Mr. LENROOT. That is exactly the case; and the same is true of every other contested ballot. I do not see how we can get away from it.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me, there—

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator's contention is right, would it not follow that the Senator is up against an absolute impossibility to determine anything, and, therefore, that there is only one thing to do and that is to take the official count?

Mr. LENROOT. That is the natural conclusion, unless it is possible to segregate these ballots and get the information.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana will be good enough to yield further for just one other question, as I understand the position of the Senator from Wisconsin, it is confused in this: He refers to 1,068 precincts, in none of which, as I understand—and in that regard I agree with the Senator from Montana—were there any protested ballots. He does not descend to the particular of showing any specifically protested ballot there.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; I gave the Senator—

Mr. GOFF. Just one moment. The general argument which has been advanced was that there was a shortage or a discrepancy between the poll lists and the ballots in the official containers, and that that discrepancy had averaged, as the Senator from Georgia so clearly stated yesterday, about 3 ballots plus to a precinct. There would be no opportunity for the counters or those representing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to have segregated such ballots, because none of those ballots were protested; and when the Senator from Montana says there is no difference here now in allowing such ballots, if they were ever identified, to go back into the general mass, I quite agree with his conclusion.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GOFF. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. I rely wholly upon the statement of Mr. Turner that, instead of there being no protested ballots from those 1,068 precincts, his report shows that there were 5,463 protested ballots in those 1,068 precincts.

Mr. WALSH. But those protests were all disposed of.

Mr. LENROOT. Disposed of by agreement that if they were to be counted they should be counted in a certain way, but not disposed of if the theory of law proposed now is to be accepted.

Mr. GOFF. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that they were so disposed of, and those ballots to which he refers were among the protested ballots which were disposed of by the supervisors with the full knowledge and consent of the attorneys for the contestant and contestee.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question. Those 5,463 ballots, then, were counted for either Brookhart or Steck?

Mr. GOFF. Yes, sir.

Mr. LENROOT. Then if we now take the official returns from those 1,068 precincts, we will be counting twice to that extent, will we not, in arriving at a result?

Mr. GOFF. That would not necessarily follow, because that would involve the speculation as to whether or not the official count in all of those precincts exceeded the recount. Wherever it did not, of course, there would be no duplication; but if there was a difference or a discrepancy, there would be a duplication.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question at that point?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. Anybody who insists on taking the official count must insist, then, on having votes given to one party or the other that he knows were not cast for him, because the official count shows that some votes were counted for Mr. Steck that he never received, and that some votes were counted for Mr. Brookhart that he never received. To insist on going back to the official count in those townships is to insist on letting the election be decided by what we know is an error of the official count; is it not?

Mr. GOFF. Of the official managers in Iowa.

Mr. CARAWAY. Absolutely. The Senate must accept that, and must decide the contest on several thousand fewer votes than we know now to have been cast.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator will agree that we ought not to take the recount and then add to that the 5,000 ballots that have been recounted.

Mr. CARAWAY. Absolutely.

Mr. LENROOT. That is the point I am making.

Mr. CARAWAY. You ought not to have the advantage of the objected-to ballots, and have them added to your plurality, and then go back and insist on the official count, which also increases it. There ought to be no recount, or there ought to be a complete recount.

Mr. LENROOT. If the theory of law proposed by the Senator from Montana is correct, then for the Senate to pass an intelligent judgment those ballots will have to be segregated, and we will have to find out how it is agreed that those ballots, coming from these precincts where discrepancies occurred, were in fact counted.

Mr. GOFF. Does the Senator refer to the 3,570 ballots?

Mr. LENROOT. No; I am not referring to the discrepancies at all. I am referring merely to the protested ballots from precincts where there were discrepancies.

Mr. CARAWAY. There were 9,000 protested ballots. They are taken from all the paper ballots. There were discrepancies in the machine vote. Mr. Brookhart gained 774 votes upon the recount or the rereading of the machine ballots. There are 1,056 or 1,068 precincts in which there was a discrepancy from 1 vote up or down, one way or the other.

I do not think there was a single lost ballot. I think if they had wanted to raise that question—which they did not want to raise, although they knew it from the beginning—they could have examined the poll list or examined the envelopes that contained what are called spoiled ballots or defective ballots and found enough to have accounted for everything they wanted, barring some few mistakes that necessarily occurred.

All those questions were before the recount board, and they passed on every one of them, and the committee let them settle every question in it. They settled definitely how nine hundred and ninety-some-odd thousand of them voted. There were 1,000,000 votes cast, in round numbers; and there was not a vote given to Steck that Brookhart did not agree he ought to have, and there was not a vote given to Brookhart that Steck did not agree he ought to have, until we get down to 4,000 votes; and they were before the committee, and they are before the Senate.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one other question?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to get some information from the Senator from Arkansas. Here were 9,000 contested ballots.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not each ballot show on its face the county and precinct where it belonged?

Mr. CARAWAY. Absolutely.

Mr. LENROOT. What makes the impossibility, then, of getting the facts about these protested ballots?

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not know that anybody has said that it was impossible, except this: These 990,000 votes were mixed. Some of them have been sent back to Iowa. Whether others have been properly cared for or not, nobody knows. The envelopes in which they have come have been torn up in some instances, and in some instances they are here yet. All the things that would have made certain the ability to determine exactly whether or not there was a discrepancy are gone. There was a difference, because you can take Brookhart's sworn statement of how many votes he got and how many Steck got, and each of them is found to have been entitled to more votes than that by more than a thousand—between three and four thousand votes between them. So everybody knows that the official count was wrong; and in nearly every township in which they went the men who were selected by the contestant and the contestee and their lawyers went over them and admitted that they had been counted wrong, and brought in a different result and assented to it.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, what precincts were those?

Mr. CARAWAY. All the 1,068, and the machine ballots. Everything that was done was agreed to. Not one of these 4,000 votes, in round numbers, could have gone into Mr. Steck's column unless a representative of Mr. Brookhart agreed that he was entitled to it and unless the Secretary of the Senate agreed that he was entitled to it, and the representative of Mr. Steck, of course, agreeing to it; and then their lawyers had to ratify what was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Are these 9,000 contested ballots still kept segregated?

Mr. CARAWAY. No; they are not, as I understand—

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have been reasonably courteous, I think, in permitting discussions in the course of my argument.

Mr. CARAWAY. I beg the Senator's pardon; I just want to answer that one question, but I will refrain from doing so.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator desire to ask me a question? If so, I yield to him.

Mr. HOWELL. Will the Senator allow me to make a statement in reference to the machine ballots and the protested ballots?

Mr. WALSH. I would rather not have that done at this time. It is aside from the argument that I desire to make.

Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin that to arrive at the correct result such ballots within these four or five disputed precincts as were marked as the general 1,344 were marked and were not counted for Brookhart should be deducted from the total vote given to Brookhart, because otherwise there would be a duplication there; but, Mr. President, it does not change the situation at all, because it is utterly impossible for us to determine how many such votes were cast in those four or five precincts. Consequently we are unable to determine the exact result, so that the situation is not changed at all by reason of that fact. That is to say, we do not know how many such ballots there were there, and consequently we can not determine the exact amount. I can not believe that in those five precincts out of all the ballot precincts the number could be very considerable.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator why he segregates the five precincts and differentiates them from any other precincts?

Mr. WALSH. I differentiate those because those are the only ones that are before us.

Mr. CARAWAY. No; the Senator knows, if he will read the brief of his own contestee, that other precincts were in exactly the same condition.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I understand that. In 1,068 precincts there was a discrepancy between the number of names on the poll list and the number of ballots in the box. I had purposed to refer to that as my argument progressed, and it has been somewhat chopped up thus far.

The point I was making, Mr. President, was that in view of the way in which the contest proceeded—and it was the only way, in substance, in which it could proceed—the fact that Brookhart agreed to appoint a man who was to assist in counting the votes as they were returned is by no means an agreement that he was going to accept the count of the ballots in the box rather than insisting that the official count should be taken. I see nothing approaching a disregard of any stipulation in that particular.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. After everything was known about this matter that the Senator from Montana now knows, Mr. Mitchell, who represents Mr. Brookhart, said "There is not anything in dispute now except possibly two or three hundred votes and how these 9,000 votes ought to be counted." If the Senator will examine the record, he will find that the only thing the committee undertook to pass upon was a straight recount. That appears in the record. I can get the page in a moment. He said the only thing was a straight recount. I will not interrupt the Senator, but I will indicate the page in the record later.

Mr. WALSH. In that situation of affairs, all that could be done was what was done, to note on the work sheet the number of ballots in the box and the number of names on the poll list. The only time when the question could be presented was after the counters had reported their proceedings, and what they found, to the committee. When they did that, the colloquy occurred, which appears at page 63.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is when Mr. Mitchell said the only thing was a question as to two or three hundred votes? The whole matter was known to him then.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly. That is what I am trying to say, that the first time when it could be appropriately done, the attention of the committee was called to the fact that there was a discrepancy between the number of names on the poll lists and the number of ballots in the box.

Mr. CARAWAY. I can not let that go unchallenged, because it was agreed that everything they wanted to object to they must object to, and as to every vote they did not expect to concede they must file their objection. They let all the votes in these precincts be counted, and they took a vote from this and that township and made up an official lot of disputed ballots, and came with them to the committee and said, "These are all we want you to pass upon." Then Mr. Mitchell said, "Possibly there may be a question of two or three hundred votes." I myself asked him if he wanted to take any evidence with reference to them, and he said no. He never again referred to those two or three hundred votes.

Mr. WALSH. I have asserted that there is nothing in the record to which my attention has been called which is to the effect that Mr. Brookhart agreed to abide by the result of the count of the ballots in the box, to the exclusion of the official return, in case there was a discrepancy. If there is anything of that kind, I shall be glad to have the Senator call my attention to it.

Mr. CARAWAY. But the Senator—

Mr. WALSH. I do not care to have the Senator argue his case again in my time.

Mr. CARAWAY. I always yielded to the Senator even on Monday, when I attempted to open the case, when I hardly got time to say a word. But I shall, of course, not interrupt the Senator. I yielded three-fourths of my time to the Senator and others when I had the floor. But I am perfectly willing to refrain from interrupting the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. It seems that I can not engage in a discussion with the Senator from Arkansas on this floor, when we are on opposite sides of a question, without unpleasantness.

Mr. CARAWAY. If there was anything unpleasant, it was on the part of the Senator. I never was in better humor in my life. I am really enjoying myself.

Mr. WALSH. I assert that at the first opportunity the attention of the committee was called to this discrepancy, and

I can not understand how anyone can contend that there had been theretofore or that there was then any waiver of this point.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I just say, with all due deference, that the Senator himself said that he was estopped if he had agreed to the manner in which they brought them here?

Mr. WALSH. I have discussed that.

Mr. CARAWAY. I know it.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. GOFF. It is disclosed by the record that the contestant and the contestee were represented by experienced, competent, and reliable supervisors. As the recount of the votes progressed these supervisors reflected on the work sheet what the vote from the different precincts disclosed.

Mr. WALSH. And they reflected on the work sheet that with respect to these precincts there was a discrepancy between the number of votes in the box and the number of names on the poll list.

Mr. GOFF. Wherever that occurred.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. GOFF. Do I understand the Senator to contend that these supervisors did not, as a matter of fact, disclose to their respective principals the condition of the recount as it progressed? If they did, as a matter of fact—because in law the principal was presumed to know—would it not have been open to the attorneys to have them come before the committee as the recount progressed and have raised these very questions which were subsequently suggested to the subcommittee in a general objective form?

Mr. WALSH. I do not know. They might have done that; but they did not do it.

Mr. GOFF. If they did not do it, did they not refrain from doing it presumably because they were satisfied with the recount, as they were making that recount subject to such protests as they recorded upon the work sheets?

Mr. WALSH. Exactly; they were perfectly satisfied with the recount of the ballots in the box. No one questions that at all. That is what they were there for, to satisfy themselves concerning the status of the case as disclosed by the ballots in the box. They also noted on the work sheets that the ballots in the box did not conform to the number of names on the poll list, and at the first opportunity when the matter came before the committee they called attention to that fact, as I now proceed to read, as appears on page 63:

The CHAIRMAN. And those who are interested in the contest were also permitted to go over them with you?

Mr. PARSONS. Yes. They have not been heard, but I suppose they have that right.

The CHAIRMAN. They have not requested it?

Mr. PARSONS. No.

Senator WATSON. In other words, they are not interested in counting the ballots, but they come in on another issue.

Senator GEORGE. All of the ballots cast in the election have been brought to Washington and have been gone over?

That appears to have been the first knowledge he had of the thing. I continue:

Mr. PARSONS. Yes.

Senator GEORGE. And there is no dispute arising about any omission of ballots?

Mr. PARSONS. None that I know of.

Mr. MITCHELL. There may be a question of discrepancy between the ballots and the poll books.

What does that mean? That means, "We found a discrepancy between the ballots and the poll books, and we want to reserve the right to argue that question before this committee, and the effect of it."

Senator CARAWAY said:

How many votes will likely be involved in that?

Apparently at that time he considered that that was an open question. He wanted to know how many votes were involved in that part of the controversy. Then the answer comes from Mr. Mitchell:

I would not think more than 200 or 300.

It is quite obvious that Mr. Mitchell was quite in error about the matter. But what is the difference whether it was 200 or 300, or whether it was two or three thousand? He was reserving the question of the effect to be given to the fact that there was a discrepancy between the number of names on the poll list and the number of votes in the ballot box.

All this goes to the question of the right of Brookhart to insist that the official count must be taken with respect to these precincts rather than the count of the ballots in the box. I can not believe that there was any waiver whatever of the right. The fact that he appointed counters simply indicated that he agreed to count the ballots that were in the boxes, without any agreement whatever on his part to the effect that if the number of ballots in the box were short of the number of names of the poll list he was to have the right to insist that the official count should govern.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, does the Senator then absolutely disregard the statement of Mr. Brookhart, appearing on page 338, to the effect that had the original stipulation been held to he would have been precluded from raising this question?

Mr. WALSH. I will give the Senator my view about that. At that place Senator Brookhart was undoubtedly referring to what we might speak of as the preliminary proof—that is to say, the proof that the packages as they came to the auditor from the local judges of election had been carefully preserved, that they had not been tampered with, and that no opportunity had been given to tamper with them. He insisted that if the ballots had been brought here after a representative of each party had been in the office of the auditor when he took them and put them in the mail bag, and they had an opportunity to observe them, he could not raise that question; but that now, in view of the fact that they did not proceed in that way, he had the right to raise the question that the ballots did not come from the proper custody, and he refers in that connection to the 67 precincts from which the bags came unsealed, as it is reported upon the work sheet.

At pages 224 and 225 there will be observed a list of the precincts from which the packages came unsealed. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] tells us that in the cases of most of these packages it was just a matter of the breaking of the sealing wax from the handling of the bags, and he calls attention to the testimony of Mr. Thayer that it did not appear as if they had been tampered with. But Senator Brookhart was contending that he still had the right to insist that the proof had not been made that these ballots had been correctly kept, and that no opportunity had been given to tamper with them. That remark of Senator Brookhart, to my mind, has absolutely nothing whatever to do with the matter of discrepancy between the number of names on the poll list and the number of ballots in the box.

Mr. BAYARD. Let me suggest to the Senator that a careful reading of the argument at that point will disclose, I think, as I read it, at any rate, the fact that Senator Brookhart refers us to the first stipulation signed by himself and counsel, and by Mr. Steck and counsel, in which it was provided that the representatives of both parties should go to the county officers and see that the packages of votes were properly sealed, and make any comment and notation at that time in regard to their being unsealed. He says in his statement there, as I read it in connection with the argument at that time, that had that been carried out he would have been precluded from going into the question of the shortage of ballots.

Mr. WALSH. I do not understand it that way. Let me ask the Senator where he gets that conclusion.

Mr. BAYARD. It is immediately prior to that, in the first few pages. The whole question was raised as to the right of Brookhart or his counsel to raise the point at that time.

Mr. WALSH. Unless the Senator will call my attention to some specific place—

Mr. BAYARD. Thereafter the first stipulation was followed by consent of counsel. That appears from Mr. Thayer's affidavit, and there is also in the office of the Sergeant at Arms, or in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, a telegram from Mr. Mitchell confirming that stipulation. So, in either event, it is a stipulation made on behalf of Mr. Brookhart. If he is bound by the first, he is bound by the second, which is a variation of the first, because the stipulation was varied in accordance with his agreement that what was done by counsel should be considered as having been done by him. If my contention is correct, he is just as much bound by the second stipulation as he is by the first. I rose to ask the Senator, in view of the statement of Senator Brookhart at the time to which he was referring, whether or no the committee at this time could go into the over and short ballots in whatever number of precincts they say should be counted.

Mr. WALSH. I have read it, and if the Senator can find anything in the record that he thinks indicates that fact, I shall be glad to be interrupted by him.

Mr. BAYARD. It is open to the Senator himself if he wants to read it. That is my construction.

Mr. WALSH. I have read it, and I submit there is no reference whatever to the matter of discrepancy to which I am addressing myself.

Mr. BAYARD. If the Senator will pardon me further, does the Senator state there is no reference made only to the discrepancy, or to the whole question of opening the ballot boxes? Senator Brookhart's contention was manifestly—

Mr. WALSH. My statement is to the effect that there is nothing in that stipulation which indicates that Senator Brookhart would be unable, by reason of any stipulation he entered into, to insist upon the point that there was a discrepancy between the number of ballots in the box and the number of names on the poll list.

Mr. BAYARD. The reason why I make my statement is this: I think in substance that what he demanded was the right to go back to the return, to determine the vote on the basis of the return made by the election officials to the Federal county auditors. As I recollect it, that was what he considered to be the general law, except that but for this stipulation he could have done so, but the stipulation standing in his way he could not do it. If he could do that, then the question of over and short votes was necessarily a part of his contention.

Mr. WALSH. It is perfectly obvious that if the original stipulation had been carried out there would be no means of Mr. Brookhart knowing anything about whether the number of ballots was short or not. That never could be disclosed until after the count was made.

Mr. BAYARD. I think that is quite true, too.

Mr. WALSH. How can it be said that by stipulating that there should be a representative of each party at the time the packages were delivered by the auditor for the purpose of transmitting them to Washington he waived the question of the discrepancy, which could not possibly be disclosed and which could not be known to him?

Mr. BAYARD. Senator Brookhart's argument follows that of Mr. Mitchell, his counsel, and Mr. Mitchell's argument is in substance that they had a right under the Iowa law to insist upon it that Mr. Steck should have proved to the committee down here, and therefore to the Senate, that all the records after the closing of the polls were kept inviolate. That was the original contention and Senator Brookhart was following that line of argument.

Mr. WALSH. I have read the statement and now that the Senator from Delaware raised the question again I am going to put it all in the record again. The statement of Senator Brookhart is found at pages 338 and 339 of the record of the hearings, and is as follows:

Senator BROOKHART. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to make my statement in full of this situation as I see it. I am not in dispute with most of the facts as stated, especially with the way in which Senator GEORGE has described them.

Senator GEORGE. I stated merely the method that was followed.

Senator BROOKHART. Here is the way this count was started. We had this board with Colonel Thayer at the head selected by the committee, with two assistants, one nominated by me and one nominated by Mr. Steck. We agreed first how these ballots should be handled. The committee took its own method and summoned them down here. If they had followed the method we agreed upon I would say that I was estopped from asserting rules of law, but that was not done. Therefore, I maintain that I can raise all the different law questions just as though we had proceeded without any agreement from the start.

They came down and started the count of these ballots. Nobody knows about their condition because we had not examined them in the State as this stipulation provided, and it was not my fault that that was not done. The committee had the right to do it the way it did. There is no challenge of that whatever. We had made it easy so that the preliminary proof of identity and the care and keeping were unnecessary and signed this stipulation to make it easy for the committee, but the committee did it the other way.

It is perfectly obvious that what he was referring to was that the proof of identity and the care and keeping was unnecessary.

Mr. BAYARD. Yes; but having waived that proof of identity and care, is he not bound by the condition of the boxes and bags when they got down here?

Mr. WALSH. Not at all. He would not know anything about what the boxes contained before they were opened.

Mr. BAYARD. Then why does he assert that he does know all about it, as he did in his reply to Mr. Steck's contest petition?

Mr. WALSH. I think that language can not be misinterpreted. He was maintaining that under the circumstances he could still insist that the preliminary proof concerning the identity and the care and the keeping of the ballots could be urged by him and that he could further insist upon the proof shown in the record concerning the breaking of the seals as reported.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The procedure, as I understand it, was that the ballots from the respective counties came here in one or more containers. The people who were doing the counting, Mr. Brookhart being represented among them, were directed to take the ballots and segregate them, putting in the one pile the unobjected ballots and in another pile the contested ballots or the ballots about which there was a dispute. As I take it, the ballots of each county were thus treated as distinct from the general mass of ballots. Could not Senator Brookhart at that time have ascertained whether there was any discrepancy in the number of ballots coming from each county as compared with the poll list?

Mr. WALSH. Of course, as each precinct was canvassed, he would determine that.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. As each precinct was canvassed, yes. Taking the analogy that the Senator referred to earlier in his address of a proceeding before an examiner, in that case before taking the unobjected ballots and putting them into a receptacle for all ballots, after he could have ascertained whether or not there was a discrepancy between the number of the ballots coming from the precincts, respectively, and the number of names upon the poll list, should not he at that time have made this objection regarding the discrepancy; and if he failed to do it, would he not be estopped? As I take it, if it were a proceeding in equity where the matter was being carried on before an examiner, while the examiner would not have the right to pass upon the objections which were made, yet the parties concerned would be required to make their objection at the time and before the examiner.

Mr. WALSH. But the Senator will bear in mind that the opening of the packages and the counting of the votes and the segregation of the protested ballots from those concerning which no question arose was conducted by two laymen, not lawyers at all, but by two laymen, and they did just exactly what they were expected to do. They said there are a certain number of ballots here that are agreed to by both sides and there is no controversy about those at all; so many for Brookhart—

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Agreed to for what purpose?

Mr. WALSH. To report to the committee.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Absolutely.

Mr. WALSH. Then they set aside those ballots concerning which any question was raised, and they made a notation to the effect that the number of names on the poll lists was so many, and the number of ballots in the box were so many. What more could have been done there?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. At that time, before those ballots were accepted as uncontested ballots and put into a general receptacle for all uncontested ballots, would not both of the parties to the contest be required, if they had any objection to the counting of those ballots as uncontested ballots, to state their objection?

Mr. WALSH. But they were not there and were not expected to be there. The facts in relation to the situation were to be reported to the committee by the two supervisors who were laymen, just merely to report the facts.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then, if that be true, if it was not the duty of those counters to ascertain the difference between the poll lists and the number of ballots there—

Mr. WALSH. But it was their duty, and they did their duty.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then, if it was their duty, why should not objection have been made at that time to counting those uncontested ballots and before they were thrown into a common receptacle?

Mr. WALSH. But why protest? Why object to them at all? Here is the fact reported that there is this discrepancy, and the fact is reported that there are so many for Steck and so many for Brookhart.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then, if objection on that ground was raised at the time, why should they have counted those ballots at all; and if objection was not raised at that time, how can the objection be now raised?

Mr. WALSH. They could not determine the fact until the ballots were counted.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But they were determining it from county to county, as I understand, and as the ballots from the particular county were being canvassed and assorted, as narrated here, they were putting off to one side the uncontested ballots, and then having done that and having also understood, as the Senator now states, and ascertained that there was a discrepancy, yet notwithstanding that discrepancy they went ahead and put those ballots into a receptacle for uncontested ballots and counted them, and all parties were there counting and accepting them as bona fide ballots.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will recur to the proceedings before the examiner or master, and bear in mind that the lawyers were not present at all and were not expected to be there, I can not conceive of anything that could be done except what was done.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The examiner in an equity proceeding is not necessarily a lawyer.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly not.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. He certainly has no power to pass upon objections.

Mr. WALSH. Not at all.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. And those people were, as I take it, in a somewhat similar position. While they were not permitted to pass upon any objection, yet if there was anything occurring to which objection could be made, was it not required of them to make it?

Mr. WALSH. No; they were not to make any objection at all.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Their attorneys, as I understood, were to control.

Mr. WALSH. No; that is not the case. The Senator makes a mistake. The attorneys were not there at all.

Mr. GEORGE. I hope the Senator from Montana will pardon me at that point while I read from the record itself of July 20, 1925.

Mr. WALSH. From what page is the Senator intending to read?

Mr. GEORGE. On page 4 of the record of July 20, 1925. Present at that meeting were not only the representatives of the contesting candidates, that is, Senator Brookhart and Mr. Steck, but also the counsel of record for both. On page 4 of the record this language occurs:

Mr. PARSONS. My thought in coming down at this time is this, that certain questions will arise with regard to different ballots, but they will all classify themselves into about half a dozen lists, not more than that. I thought that we would stay here at least until most of the questions had arisen, so that arrangements could be made to take our exceptions to all of that class of ballots.

Senator ERNST. You can advise your supervisors as to what objections you would want them to make, and counsel on the other side can take a similar course.

Mr. PARSONS. Yes, that is true.

Senator ERNST. I think that would be very helpful all around.

Mr. PARSONS. I think so.

That was concurred in. Present were not only the counters but counsel for the respective parties. The counsel remained here until the count was well under way. I do not mean until the whole count had been gone through but until such questions as they wished to have their counters make had been raised.

Mr. WALSH. I think, Mr. President, it is perfectly obvious that all of that related to objections that might be taken to particular ballots. The ballots were before the counters, but they were not instructed to make any objections such as the one that is now being urged. They were not competent to make an objection of that character; they had no instructions with respect to that matter. All of this refers to the matter of counting the ballots.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then let me inquire, why did they ascertain the discrepancy?

Mr. WALSH. I was going to come to that. They ascertained the discrepancy because they were called upon to bring down here the poll lists. What did they want the poll lists for?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If it was a part of their duty to ascertain the discrepancy, was it not the duty of the parties knowing that to make the objection at the time?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think so. I think that every question of law was reserved for presentation to the committee; the question as to whether a ballot should be counted for Steck or for Brookhart as well as the question whether the official count should be taken or the count of the ballots.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. BAYARD. Does it not appear, as a matter of fact, in this record that during a great part of the actual count of the ballots when they came down here Mr. Brookhart was represented by Mr. Cook? Was Mr. Cook not Mr. Brookhart's political manager; and is it not fair to assume that Mr. Cook, as Mr. Brookhart's political manager, knew the value of errors, if any, or of mistakes, if any, or anything to be done of that character, as political manager for Mr. Brookhart?

Mr. WALSH. I simply say that I do not know of any time at which this question could be raised except when it was raised.

All this, Mr. President, goes to the question of waiver, either by stipulation or by the act of Mr. Brookhart or his representative.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question before he leaves that branch of the discussion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. GOFF. Do I understand the Senator to contend, in view of this preliminary understanding between the parties represented by their counsel and their supervisors, and in view of the fact that the state of the recount was from day to day reported to the attorneys, that it was not their duty at that time to raise these questions of law before the committee?

Mr. WALSH. I would think that that was not in accordance with the understanding at all. A precinct is encountered where there is a discrepancy between the number of names on the poll list and the number of ballots in the boxes. The committee, we all understand, was scattered all over the United States. I think it is an absurd idea that the proceedings should stop there, that the committee should be assembled and the question be presented as to whether or not the particular ballots should be counted.

Mr. GOFF. I did not say—

Mr. WALSH. Let me proceed. Let us go back again to the analogy of this to a chancery proceeding. An objection is made to testimony before the examiner or the master; it is insisted that certain testimony that is offered is entirely incompetent. If it were an election contest, and it were insisted that the number of ballots in the box should not go down on the work sheet at all for either candidate, because with respect to them the official count must be taken, would the proceedings stop and would the parties go into court and present that matter to the court in order to secure an adjudication of that question? Not at all.

Mr. GOFF. The parties could do so.

Mr. WALSH. But it would be contrary to the usual practice, and I insist that it was contrary to the understanding here that anything should be done, because the committee was not at hand so that the matter could be presented to them at all; they were scattered all over the United States.

Mr. GOFF. That, of course, assumes, does it not, that somebody representing the committee could have been brought to the city or that the committee could have been brought together for the purpose of rendering the count more accurate?

Mr. WALSH. I think the understanding was perfectly clear that the facts should be noted and that the questions involved should be presented to the committee when they should reassemble.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, will the Senator indulge me just a moment more?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BAYARD. It appears from the record that there were some 1,068 precincts, I think, where the ballots were over or short in the count; and it appears that in the early part of the proceedings evidence of such matters came out, and during that time Mr. Cook, who was representing Senator Brookhart at the recount here in Washington, who was, as I have said, his political manager during his campaign in the election of 1924, was present. Is it not fair to assume that Mr. Cook would have had sufficient knowledge of the election laws of Iowa after the first over or short precinct was demonstrated at once to have said, "Hereafter the first thing we will do is to count the number of ballots in the sack, and the next thing we will do will be to go to the poll lists and see if the number of names on the poll lists does not correspond with the number of ballots; and if they do not correspond, we will seal them up and turn them back to the committee for inspection and proof?" Would not that have been the rational thing to do?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think so.

Mr. BAYARD. It is done in election contests in the States, is it not?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think so. I do not think that would have been a reasonable thing to expect of any of them.

Mr. BAYARD. If Mr. Cook had been ignorant of the matter, perhaps, that is so.

Mr. WALSH. I think the reasonable thing is just exactly what they did; note the fact, and report the fact to the committee, along with other facts which they noted.

Mr. BAYARD. And go on counting votes which they knew, from their contended point of view, would be absolutely futile?

Mr. WALSH. They did not know whether that view would be taken by the committee or not. They, therefore, reported all the facts, so that if the committee ruled that the ballots in the box controlled it would not be necessary to go back very far.

Mr. BAYARD. But, having counted those votes, allocating them to one or the other candidate would involve a different proposition. If they had merely counted the number of votes in the sack and the number of names upon the poll lists and found a discrepancy in the over or short precincts after the first discrepancy, from that time on they were on their guard and Mr. Cook, an experienced politician, and, as I think well charged with information on the Iowa laws, from that time on could have said, "From now on in every one of these precincts we will open the sack, we will go to the poll lists, see how many names of voters appear thereon, see how many ballots are in the sack, and if they do not agree, we will make a note on the sack and the committee will say whether we shall count these ballots for the one or the other party."

Mr. WALSH. They did not know whether the committee were willing to do that.

Mr. BAYARD. They could have said, "We will take this back to the committee." The committee was accessible.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think that was a reasonable thing to expect.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator from Montana, I take it, is insisting that in such a case the official count should be accepted. Did it not appear also that there was a discrepancy between the poll list and the official count?

Mr. WALSH. I am so told.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. In that case, why should we go back to the official count rather than take the ballots which were counted?

Mr. WALSH. Because you can not impeach the official count except by the ballots.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The official count is impeached by an examination of the ballots in the same way that the Senator says this count is impeached.

Mr. WALSH. No; we have got to accept the official count until it is overturned by the contestee.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Everybody, as I understood, consented that the official count was not accurate; that it was, for the purpose of this case, contended by both parties to the contest, that the official count was not accurate; and they found the official count just as much at variance with the poll lists as they did the count which was made by the supervisors.

Mr. WALSH. The result of that will be that we can not depend upon either and the case of the contestant has not been made.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The result of that, it seems to me, is that we ought to accept what the parties themselves at the time did accept, and that was the ballots which they counted.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, that would end the whole controversy. If there is anything in this record which shows that the parties did agree to accept the count of the ballots in the boxes, regardless of whether they conformed to the poll lists or not, that ends the controversy. If I have wasted two hours and a half of the time of the Senate in talking about this matter in the face of such an agreement, I really feel like apologizing to the Senate; but I said in the beginning that I find nowhere in the record any such agreement.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Perhaps I did not express myself as I intended to do. It, at least, appears here that the parties themselves counted about 900,000 votes to which no exception was made; exceptions were made to about 8,000 others, and those exceptions were thrashed out before the committee.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The parties to this contest are not children; they are not imbeciles; they are men of high standing and character and, it seems to me, ought to be responsible for the result of their own acts. When they go to work deliberately and make this count and no objection is made to it, and when it appears that any other theory for disposing of this case is admitted to be wrong, then why should not they accept that which they themselves did and which they would not have done if they had not believed it was done for some purpose?

Mr. WALSH. Of course, so far as the Senator from New Mexico is concerned, I have wasted this time, because I started out with the proposition that they were obliged to have a recount anyway. As the case was conducted, the count would have to go on, whether eventually the count was to determine the matter or whether the official count with respect to particular precincts was to determine it.

Take Winterset precinct, where there were 194 votes short. What about that? They went on and counted the votes just exactly the same.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No.

Mr. WALSH. Of course they did.

Mr. JONES of Mexico. I am advised differently. I understand that as to that precinct they agreed not to count the ballots.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, no; they counted them.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That they agreed to take the official count as to that precinct?

Mr. WALSH. They counted them just the same, and the count showed—

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Of course, they physically counted them.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But the count did not go into the tabulation.

Mr. LENROOT. It will be found in the record on page 248.

Mr. GEORGE. No; it did not go into the tabulation.

Mr. LENROOT. It went into the record, not the tabulation.

Mr. WALSH. They determined just how many votes went for Steck and how many for Brookhart?

Mr. GEORGE. It did not go into the tabulation. No votes were taken out of that package and put either with the good votes or the contested votes.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly, it did not go into the tabulation; everybody agrees to that; but they went on and counted the votes just exactly the same and reported what the facts were, and then both parties agreed that in view of this discrepancy the official count was to be taken.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But as to all the others when they made their count that count went into the tabulation.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. And the ballots which thus were counted and went into the tabulation were then thrown into a common receptacle, and unquestionably with the idea that as to those ballots there was no longer any question from any source or for any reason.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. That was because Mr. Steck's representatives would not agree with reference to those other four precincts to the same rule that was applied to the Winterset precinct; but the work sheet is in the record, and was submitted to the committee—

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. And the committee decided that that was the thing to do?

Mr. LENROOT. They decided that they would not take the official count, and would accept the recount in those precincts.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes; so objection, then, as I understand, was made to four precincts?

Mr. LENROOT. That is right.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. And no objection was made to any other precinct. Now, Mr. President, we are getting at the facts of this case. I should like to know of the Senator from Montana what he has to say in answer to that proposition—that here, regarding this very question, objection was made to the count in four precincts, but was not made as to the count in all those hundreds of other precincts where it might have been made on the same ground.

Mr. WALSH. Quite so; quite so.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Now, then, having made objection to four precincts and not making the objection to the other precincts, would not any person in the trial of an ordinary proceeding say that they waived any objection upon that ground to any other precinct?

Mr. WALSH. I do not think that question presents itself at all. We are urging that with respect to these four precincts the official count be taken, that Mr. Brookhart is elected, and we do not need an agreement as to them.

Mr. GEORGE. But, Mr. President, let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that there are 68 other precincts stated here in the majority report which completely reverse that if you take the official count.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; that is to say, if the 68 precincts are picked out—

Mr. GEORGE. No; not taken at random.

Mr. WALSH. Taken at random out of 1,068; and if you take those 68 precincts, then the advantage is with Mr. Steck.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; and if you take these four—

Mr. WALSH. Pardon me—but why pick 68 precincts at random out of the 1,068? If you are going out of those 4 precincts, of course you are obliged to take the whole 1,068.

I yield now to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. I am just getting to that. Does not the question, therefore, come to whether you shall go to the official count in the 1,068 precincts? It is not fair to take one where the official count would favor Mr. Brookhart and another where the official count would favor Mr. Steck, so you go to the whole.

Mr. WALSH. Quite so.

Mr. GEORGE. Admittedly here they confined every semblance of an objection that could be said to have been raised at all by counsel in this case, even in December and January of this year, to an objection to only four precincts.

Mr. WALSH. The facts with relation to the four precincts are reported to us by the committee. The exact figures are given here in the record.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that; and I understand the Senator now to concede that it would not be fair to Mr. Steck or in accordance with the truth of the case to take those four because they might happen by going back to the official count to give Mr. Brookhart the advantage, any more than it would be to take the 68.

Mr. WALSH. If you go back to the 1,068, the result is exactly the same.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; but let me bring this to the Senator's attention: I, myself, repeatedly insisted that if they wanted to raise that objection they should point out to us every precinct in which there was a variance, and I do not see how else we could have heard the case.

Mr. WALSH. We have the facts here with relation to the 1,068, if that question is raised.

Now, Mr. President, assuming—if I may be permitted to proceed—that there has been no waiver, what is the duty of the Senate in the premises, there being this substantial discrepancy between the number of ballots in the box and the number of names on the poll list, as indicated?

In the case of Bear Grove precinct, Guthrie County, the number of names on the poll list was 256, and the number of ballots in the box is 236.

In the case of Estherville Township, Emmet County, second ward of the city of Estherville, there are 20 ballots less in the box than names on the poll list, the total number of names on the poll list being 772.

The Winterset precinct has been referred to.

In the case of Emmet County, Estherville Township, second ward, city of Estherville, there are 10 ballots more found in the box than there are names on the poll list.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator will observe that that is the same precinct which the Senator first gave. That is the case where they sent on some 30 ballots and made an excess.

Mr. WALSH. I recall; they were originally 20 short, and they sent on afterwards 30 more and made it 10 in excess.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield just a moment?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. The Senator referred to Guthrie County, Bear Grove Township. He noted that there were 20 missing ballots at that precinct. I desire to call attention to the fact that the official count gave Senator Brookhart 1,047 votes.

Mr. WALSH. I was going to refer to that.

Mr. STEPHENS. Senator Brookhart is short just exactly 20 votes in that precinct, if you will observe the two counts, because this number is 126 instead of 136.

Mr. WALSH. Then in the case of Jackson Township, second precinct, Lee County, there are 10 names more in the box than on the poll list; and in the case of Center Township, Wapello County, there are 602 ballots in the box and 624 names on the poll list—a difference of 22.

Mr. LENROOT. I think in that case it should be a difference of only 1—602 ballots and 23 “no votes,” I think, in that case.

Mr. WALSH. Quite right; yes.

Now, Mr. President, let us see what significance is given to the poll lists in the State of Iowa. I read from the Compiled Code of Iowa of 1919, and in that respect I assume that the existing law is practically the same. I have not had it at my command.

Section 444 reads as follows:

Any voter entitled to receive a ballot under the provisions of this chapter shall be allowed to enter the space inclosed by the guard rail. One of the judges shall give him one, and only one, ballot, on the back of which such judge shall indorse his initials in such manner that they may be seen when the ballot is properly folded, and the voter's name shall immediately be checked on the registry list. The name of each person, when a ballot is delivered to him, shall be entered by each of the clerks of election in the poll book kept by him in the place provided therefor.

There are two judges of election, as I understand, and each of them puts down the name of the voter when the ballot is given to him.

The next section, 445, is as follows:

On receipt of the ballot the voter shall, without leaving the inclosed space, retire alone to one of the voting booths and without delay mark his ballot, and, before leaving the voting booth, shall fold the same in such manner as to conceal the marks thereon, and deliver the same to one of the judges of election, but the number of the voter on the poll books or register lists shall not be indorsed on the back of his ballot. One of the judges of election shall thereupon, in the presence of the voter, deposit such ballot in the ballot box, but no ballot without the official indorsement shall be allowed to be deposited therein. The voter shall quit said inclosed space as soon as he has voted. Any voter who, after receiving an official ballot, decides not to vote, shall, before retiring from within the guard rail, surrender to the election officers the official ballot which has been given him, and such fact shall be noted on each of the poll lists. A refusal to surrender such ballot shall subject the person so offending to immediate arrest and the penalties provided in this chapter. No voter shall vote or offer to vote any ballot except such as he has received from the judges of election in charge of the ballots. No person shall take or remove any ballot from the polling place before the close of the poll. No voter shall be allowed to occupy a voting booth already occupied by another nor remain within said inclosed space more than 10 minutes, nor to occupy a voting booth more than five minutes, in case all of said voting booths are in use and other voters waiting to occupy the same, nor to again enter the inclosed space after having voted; nor shall more than two voters in excess of the whole number of voting booths provided be allowed at any one time in such inclosed space, except by the authority of the election officers to keep order and enforce the law.

Now, observe, Mr. President: He is handed the ballot. Each of the clerks enters his name on the poll list. He goes within the inclosed space, and if he changes his mind and does not desire to vote, he comes back, and he is obliged under the penalty of the law to deliver up the ballot that he got, so that there can be no discrepancy between the number of ballots in the box and the number of names on the poll list if the law is carried out, except the fact be noted upon the poll list that the voter gave up his ballot.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, of course, I understand that there should be an agreement between the number of ballots and the number of names on the poll list; but it appears in this case that there are about a thousand of the precincts in that State where there is a discrepancy. Those thousand precincts constitute a very, very considerable portion of the precincts in the State. How could a contest be effectually carried on in the State of Iowa involving a miscount by the judges of election if as a matter of fact there is a variance of 1 or 2 or 3 votes in a precinct? Does not the Senator agree that it would be impossible in such case to obtain any evidence of any character to explain why that discrepancy occurred?

The Senator just a while ago referred to one precinct where the discrepancy is one ballot. How could the count of that precinct ever be contested, in the courts of Iowa or anywhere else?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if it were shown that the ballots had been most carefully preserved, and perfect proof had been made that there was no opportunity of tampering with the thing at all, and the one vote did not make any difference in the result, as a matter of course, you could not.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But suppose the one vote did make a difference.

Mr. WALSH. Then you could not determine which was correct, and the official count would have to control. You could not tell then whether it happened that one ballot, instead of being put in the box, slipped down on the floor and did not get into the box, or whether, in some way or other, they had duplicated a name on the poll list. You could not tell which was the case, and accordingly the official count would have to be taken.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then, in the absence of some proof of fraud—

Mr. WALSH. Not at all; that is just the point I am going to make. It does not necessarily involve fraud at all. It may easily be a mistake. It may be a mistake in the poll list, or it may be a mistake in getting the ballot into the box.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But suppose it occurs in this way: That the official count shows one less than the number of ballots in the box. In that case would you accept the official count, when the number of ballots in the box actually was greater?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly you would accept the official count, because you would not know whether the one was put in as a duplicate ballot by some one, or whether in some way or other there was a mistake in the poll list.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then, is not this the effect, that you have to accept all the mistakes of the election judges in such case, in the absence of proof of fraud, and not take a count of the ballots?

Mr. WALSH. Let us dismiss the matter of fraud. Let us say it is a mistake. The question is, Was the mistake made by the clerks in copying the poll list, or was the mistake made by the voter in putting two ballots into the box instead of one?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. One thing, it seems to me, is perfectly established by the official count, that the number of ballots which got into the box are there, and what the clerks may have done with the poll list is quite another thing.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, may I correct a statement I made just a moment ago with reference to Wapello County, Center Township? I find by computation that the Senator was correct, and I was not. There was a shortage of 22 ballots. That 22 votes is included in the 624. There was a shortage of 22. I thought that 22 ballots were not included in the 624, but they are included. So it makes a shortage of 22 ballots.

Mr. GOFF. May I ask the Senator from Montana a question?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. GOFF. Do I understand the Senator to contend that if there is an official count, and the official count has been made, and there is no question as to the custody of the ballots, and a recount is ordered, if the recount disagrees with the official count, and there is a question of discrepancy between the poll lists and the ballots in the box, the official count is the superior count, and should be taken, in such a state of facts?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; because you could not tell which is controlling, the ballots in the box or the names on the poll list.

Mr. GOFF. Then the Senator from Montana would contend that the first count, of necessity, was more accurate than the second count?

Mr. WALSH. No; I do not contend anything of the kind. I simply contend that the official count is not impeached.

Mr. GOFF. And the official count becomes better evidence than the ballots themselves, which initially were the actual source of the official count.

Mr. WALSH. Better than the ballots, because you do not know whether all the ballots are there or not.

Mr. GOFF. But I assumed that in my question.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, yes; you assumed that, but you must not assume it if they do not correspond with the number of names on the poll list, because the number of names on the poll list is as good evidence concerning the number of ballots there ought to be in the box as the ballots that are in the box themselves.

Mr. GEORGE. That is just the point; the Senator now says they are as good evidence concerning the number of ballots there ought to be in the box.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I would like to hear an explanation on the part of those who are maintaining that the ballots are the primary proof when you come to a recount. I am perfectly willing to admit that when the supervisors of elections, when confronted with a discrepancy between the poll list and the ballots in the box, have not turned aside to do anything else, but have counted the ballots, in that particular count the ballots should control; but if 6 or 8 or 10 months afterwards those ballots are ordered to be sent elsewhere, how can it still be maintained that the ballots are the primary proof unless it is established that the ballots have not been disturbed and that the same number of ballots is in the box?

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the judges of election in each precinct seal up the ballots, presumably, string them on a wire, twist the wire around, seal up the wire, and send them to the county auditor by messenger. We have heard about frauds in elections. The messenger who carries them to the county seat may have tampered with the ballots en route. They go to the county auditor's office. We have heard about the tampering with returns in the county auditor's office. They are transported from there to Washington. The evidence is quite clear that they could not have been disturbed coming from Iowa to Washington, but they are in the custody of the auditor in Iowa. Now, the question arises, not at the very time the count is being made but six months after, after that course was pursued, as to whether the poll lists mean anything at all or not. That is the question here.

The attention of the Senate was called by the Senator from Georgia to section 466, showing that, of course, some error might occur in the poll lists. It provides:

When the poll is closed the judges of election shall forthwith and without adjournment canvass the vote and ascertain the result of it, comparing the poll lists and correcting errors therein.

That is to say, it is contemplated that errors may occur. What do they do to correct those errors? One poll list is checked against the other poll list and if any one judge has put a name down twice it is disclosed by the other poll list. If one man has the name down as "John Jones," when it ought to have been "John Smith," the poll lists are changed accordingly until the two conform. That is the duty of the judges before they do anything else. I called attention to the statute of my State, and of the State of Wisconsin, where it is provided that the poll lists must be changed so that they shall conform. If they do not, one of them must be wrong.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, after the judges have made a comparison between the poll lists, do they then compare the number of ballots in the box with the number of names on the poll lists under the Iowa law?

Mr. WALSH. There is no specific provision in the Iowa law with respect to that, as there is in the Wisconsin law and in the Montana law.

Mr. BAYARD. There is no check, then, as to the number of ballots in the box and the number of names on the poll list under the Iowa law?

Mr. WALSH. There is a perfect check, because the judges are obliged to report every ballot.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator there?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. There is a requirement in the Iowa law that if there is an excess of ballots over the names on the poll list—

Mr. WALSH. I am going to call attention to that.

Mr. GEORGE. They are to report that?

Mr. WALSH. I shall refer to that next.

Mr. GEORGE. I think it is perfectly manifest why that provision is made as to an excess and as to why there is no provision with reference to any shortage.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Does it not appear here that the judges did not do what the Senator says the law required them to do, namely, find out whether there was a discrepancy between the number of ballots and the poll list? It does appear here that there is a discrepancy between the so-called official count and the poll list.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; there is.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Therefore, the judges of election did not do that thing at the time.

Mr. WALSH. It is perfectly obvious that mistakes were made in all these proceedings. The question is, where were the mistakes made? The Senator from Georgia insists that the mistakes must have been made in the poll list. I insist that there is no more probability of that than there is that the mistakes were made in the number of ballots that were in the box. Indeed, I insist that because one poll list is checked against the other poll list, the probability of the poll list being correct is greater than the probability of the number of ballots in the box being correct.

It is indicated that, regardless of all the care that is taken, errors may creep into the poll lists. But the law also recognizes that errors may occur in relation to the number of ballots in the box, because—

Mr. GEORGE. Right on that point—

Mr. WALSH. Let me call attention to the statute first. It provides:

If the ballots for any officer exceed the number of the voters on the poll lists such fact shall be certified, with the number of the excess, in the return, and if the vote of the precinct where the error occurred would change the result as to a county officer, if the person appearing to be elected were deprived of so many votes, then the election shall be set aside as to him in that precinct, and a new election ordered therein; but no person residing in another precinct at the time of the general election shall be allowed to vote at such special election.

So that regardless of all the care that is taken to see that the number of votes in the box corresponds with the number of names on the poll list, it is recognized that error may occur in the poll list, and error may occur in the number of ballots in the box.

Mr. GEORGE. Only in the case of overage.

Mr. WALSH. That is all; that is all that is provided for.

Mr. GEORGE. Let us consider that for just a moment, if it will not interrupt the Senator.

Where there are more ballots in the box than names on the poll list, it is possible to check and discover the error. Therefore the law of Iowa recognizes what is to be done, even to the extent of invalidating the whole election and holding a new election, if there is an overage, because each ballot in the box must bear the mark of the election judge. Therefore, if there are more ballots in the box than names on the poll list, you would reject any ballot that did not bear the judge's mark. You would make every reasonable effort to reconcile it. But finally, if there were more ballots in the box bearing the mark of the election judge than names on the poll list, and that was a material and determining question in the election, even the law of Iowa would go so far as to require a new election for that particular office. But not one word is said about what is to be done if there is a shortage in the box. Why? Because under no conceivable rule, unless there happened to be a witness who observed an actual fraud being perpetrated, would there be any way to check it.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, it would not be known how the extra man whose ballot did not get into the box had voted.

Mr. GEORGE. Not unless somebody was able to positively testify about an actual fraud.

Mr. WALSH. That is an improbability.

Mr. GEORGE. Which, of course, would rarely occur. Therefore, under the law of Iowa, it seems to me perfectly clear that the State of Iowa does not recognize the poll book as being controlling, if there happen to be a few less ballots in the box than names on the poll list, but it does recognize the contrary of that proposition as being very material, and, as I tried to point out yesterday—and I want to direct the Senator's attention to it now—there is provision made in the law for the placing of every man's name on the poll list when he gets his ballot, but there is also a provision in the law that if he spoils that ballot he may come back for another. There is even a provision that he may get three ballots or more if he spoils any.

Mr. WALSH. The spoiled ballots are returned.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes. There is an additional provision in the Iowa law that certain ballots given over to the voter, and whose name presumably has been placed on the list, are never returned by the judges of election. They never enter the package which they are required to seal, but some of them actually go back to the public printer.

Mr. WALSH. No; not the public printer. They go back to the officer who sent them, and that is the county auditor.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me put that in the Record. They go back to the officer or authority charged with their printing and distribution—not to the public printer. I merely called him that.

Mr. WALSH. I suppose probably there is some reason for the law which requires the poll lists to be kept, but according to the contention of my esteemed friend, the Senator from Georgia, we are utterly to disregard the poll lists and they mean nothing at all. It does not make a bit of difference whether the number of ballots in the box as returned here is greater or less than the number of names on the poll lists. That makes no difference. We are utterly to disregard the poll lists. That is the argument that is made here. But how did the committee act with reference to the matter?

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WALSH. I will yield in just a moment. Under the supervision of the committee the stipulation appearing at page 54 was entered into to the effect:

That there shall be subpoenaed and transmitted to the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate of the United States all paper ballots from each and every precinct of the State of Iowa where such ballots were employed in their original packages as are now in possession of the several county auditors, together with all registration books, poll books, tally sheets, and other books and documents of every kind and character whatsoever used or employed in connection with the general election held on the 4th day of November A. D. 1924 aforesaid.

The committee issued a subpoena commanding the auditors to send to the Senate of the United States the poll lists prepared in accordance therewith. What did they want them for?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will pardon me, but it ought to be stated as a fact, which is a fact from actual verification, that in Iowa the poll lists and the tally sheets on which the managers count out the election are kept in one specially prepared book. They are not separately kept as in most States. Even the certificates of the election judges all go into the one book. They are all included in one book. It is not a matter of great importance, but the fact is that that seems to be the practice, whether so required by the law, because the poll books were in that condition.

Mr. WALSH. Still the committee felt it necessary specifically to require the production of the poll sheets, and yet when they got here we are told that they have no significance whatever.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no; I do not think the Senator should state it that way.

Mr. WALSH. I would be very glad to have the Senator express what the committee had in mind.

Mr. GEORGE. It never has been my contention that they had no significance whatever. They are undoubtedly kept for the purpose of preventing repeating and to catch up as much fraud as possible, if any were attempted.

Mr. WALSH. I am not speaking of the significance they had in Iowa. I am asking what significance they had here.

Mr. GEORGE. They have the significance here of being a part of the record. We simply took the position, justified, as I think, by the law of Iowa, that in the event of an irreconcilable difference between the mere poll list and the ballots in the box, the ballots are the higher and better evidence, not that they have not any significance but that they are not to be considered as any other document bearing on the election.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, I ask the Senator if he will yield to me now?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GOFF. In this connection would it be too diverting for the Senator from Montana to state by what legal principle, assuming the absence of fraud, he considers the poll list better evidence than the ballots in the box?

Mr. WALSH. I was just going to try to state that. In view of the requirements of the Iowa law to the effect that the name of the voter, as he gets his ballot, must be entered by two clerks, and that after the voting is completed these poll lists must be checked against each other, I insist that they are better evidence of the number of people who voted at that election than the ballots, which come here six or eight months after an election, passing through the channels to which I have heretofore adverted.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WALSH. In just a moment. There is only one of two conclusions to be drawn from the situation, either that the clerks entered upon the poll lists the names of more men than voted, or else in some way or other some of the ballots that were in the box have since disappeared, or else that they never were, for some reason or other, entered in the books.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not know whether the Senator is aware of the fact or not, but in Iowa the law requires that they shall put in a separate envelope spoiled ballots, disputed ballots, and ballots that are not considered to have been legally cast.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; attention has just been called to the law.

Mr. CARAWAY. Such ballots account for many of the discrepancies; but what I want to call to the attention of the Senator is that there were more votes brought down here cast for the office of United States Senator than the officials in Iowa counted for that office, so that instead of deciding the question upon more votes the Senator will have to decide it upon about 7,000 less votes than he has before him on the books of the official count. In other words, they recognize that there were certain ballots that had been so segregated that were not entitled to be included under legal ballots, and according to Mr. Brookhart's sworn testimony there are nearly 7,000 fewer than came before the committee.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President—

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. GOFF. Before the Senator from Arkansas interrupted the Senator from Montana I desired to ask the Senator from Montana this question: As I understand the Senator's contention, in the event of a conflict between the official count and the poll books the poll books, because they have been checked by two clerks, would be the better evidence as to the number of ballots in the box. If there should develop further a conflict between the recount and the official count, would the Senator then contend that the poll books would be the best evidence of election?

Mr. WALSH. If the official count gave a certain number of votes as being the total number of votes, and there was a different number on the poll list and a still different number in the box, I should say that it would be impossible to say which would be the better proof—the number of ballots in the box or the number of names on the poll list—and the proof by the official return would not be overcome.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, in order that I may understand the Senator, and I want to get his point, may I state that I understand the Senator to take the position finally that the poll book—

Mr. WALSH. I think "finally" is the same as "firstly."

Mr. GEORGE. His position is that the poll books are the better evidence; that is, better than the ballots. I understand the Senator to take the position either, firstly or finally—I meant nothing by "finally," because I meant only to wave aside the preliminaries upon which the Senator had proceeded up to that point only. I understand the Senator's position to be that the poll lists are better evidence of the number of people who voted than are the ballots.

Mr. WALSH. I was about to say that after these ballots had passed through these various channels—

Mr. GEORGE. We will narrow it down to the present time and as assuming all we know about it, whatever it is, the Senator contends that now the poll books are better evidence than the ballots in the boxes or the number of people who voted in the election.

Mr. WALSH. I think so.

Mr. GEORGE. That is the Senator's position?

Mr. WALSH. I think so, and I was about to say why I think so. It is because the only way the discrepancy can be reconciled is that the judges of election put down on the poll books the names of more voters than actually deposited ballots in the box. The learned Senator from Georgia on yesterday argued that that was the reasonable explanation of the matter; that they put more names down than voted. But let me call attention to the fact.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, is not that a reasonable presumption in view of the fact—

Mr. WALSH. I am going to discuss the reasonableness of it right now.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Is it not the reasonable presumption in view of the fact that the election judges in Iowa found fewer ballots than appeared on the poll lists, and now upon a recount here we find fewer ballots than appear upon the poll lists? Therefore, is it not a reasonable thing to presume that there were more names upon the poll lists than ballots which actually went into the ballot box?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; that is a point I am going to discuss right now. In the Bear Grove precinct, Bear Grove Township, Guthrie County, the number of names on the poll list was 256. The number of ballots that came here was 236. That is to say, there was a discrepancy of 20 votes in 256. In other words, for every 12½ names that those two clerks put down on their poll list, they put on an additional name. Does any Senator think that is sensible? They might in 256 votes have put down 5 additional. Bear in mind, both of them put down exactly the same excess number. The poll lists, if they followed the law, checked against each other, but two of them, for every twelfth name, put an extra name on the poll list. We could imagine that they made a mistake of 1 or 2 or possibly 3, and both of them made that same mistake, but according to the contention of those who insist the count of the ballots in the boxes after they came here must be taken, we have to figure that the clerks put on an extra name for every 12 names.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, may I suggest in that connection that there were found exactly 20 ballots short, and that the recount showed that Senator Brookhart would have received exactly 20 fewer votes than the judges of the election gave him when they made the count.

Mr. WALSH. What does the recount give Senator Brookhart in that precinct?

Mr. STEPHENS. One hundred and twenty-seven.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I have it here before me—127 as against 147, exactly the same number.

There is another circumstance in connection with this matter, Mr. President, that leads me to the conclusion that the number of names on the poll list is better evidence of the number of ballots that were actually cast, than the number of ballots in the boxes as the boxes traveled through the various channels and came here to the Secretary of the Senate.

With respect to the three precincts where the shortage occurs it happens that, counting the ballots as they came here as against the official count, Steck wins one vote and Brookhart loses 21. Take Estherville, in Emmet County, Steck gains 41 votes by the recount over the official count, and Brookhart loses 25 votes. Take Wapello County, Center Township, Steck gains 15 votes and Brookhart loses 29 votes, making an aggregate gain for Steck by the recount over the official count of 67 votes and a loss to Brookhart of 75 votes, making a difference of 142 votes.

But that is not all, Mr. President. If we take the recount in all the precincts in which there is a shortage, the official count gives Brookhart 1,083 votes more than the count of the ballots as they came here to this body. It is a remarkably significant thing that in every one of these precincts in which a discrepancy occurs between the ballots in the boxes as they came here and the poll lists Steck wins and Brookhart loses. The significance of that—

Mr. GEORGE. I want to call attention to the fact that I do not think the statement of the Senator is a fair one.

Mr. WALSH. Very well. We will have to take the figures. If the Senator will kindly turn to pages 245 to 251, in reference to Bear Grove precinct—

Mr. GEORGE. I understood the Senator to refer to all the precincts in which there was a variance.

Mr. WALSH. No; I said that in the 1,068 precincts in which there was a variance between the number of names on the poll list and the number of ballots in the boxes the recount gives Brookhart 1,083 votes less than the official count gives him.

Mr. GEORGE. No, Mr. President, the Senator is wrong about that.

Mr. WALSH. I have the figures here somewhere.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is quite wrong about that, because exactly the contrary is true; that in the 1,068 precincts, in which there was a variance, Senator Brookhart on the recount here gained 994 votes.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator from Georgia turn to page 28 of the report containing the views of the minority. I there find these figures:

Recount by supervisors of machines plus paper ballots in certain counties where machines were used, 129,027 for Steck and 124,719 for Brookhart.

Official count in 1,068 precincts where ballots are missing—

That is, where there is a discrepancy—

Steck, 207,784; Brookhart, 201,626.

Mr. GEORGE. That is the official count; that is not the recount.

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir; that is the official count.

In addition to that, the recount is given as follows:

Recount in 789 precincts where number of ballots checked with number of voters, 111,334 for Steck—

That is according to the recount here—

and for Brookhart, 122,931—

Giving Steck a total of 448,145 and Brookhart 449,276.

Brookhart's total vote was, as a matter of fact, as recounted here 450,270 as against 449,276, the difference being 1,073 votes.

Mr. GEORGE. No; the Senator has that confused. Those are Senator STEPHENS's figures.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. No; I did not make the figures; the tabulator, Mr. Turner, made them.

Mr. GEORGE. But the Senator from Mississippi used them.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Turner, the tabulator made them.

Mr. GEORGE. Those are the figures given by the Senator from Mississippi. That table shows our count so far as the machines are concerned, and our count so far as the precincts in which the ballots exactly tallied with the names on the poll lists or the number of names on the poll list are concerned. It shows the official vote in 1,068 precincts in which there was a discrepancy between the names on the poll list and the official count.

But the facts are that the recount in those same 1,068 precincts gave to Senator Brookhart 994 votes more than he got in those same precincts according to the official count had in Iowa.

I may call the Senator's attention further to the fact that in the machine precincts and in the precincts where there was no variance between the poll lists and the ballots recounted, there was an actual gain by both candidates.

Mr. WALSH. I have not analyzed those figures particularly; I gave them as I found them here; but the fact is that in every one of the precincts concerning which controversy arises, the three precincts where there was a smaller number, invariably the advantage accrues to Steck, the total amounting to 142 votes, which more than cancels the 76 majority which remains of the 1,420, after Brookhart gets credit for the 1,344 votes, if he shall be given credit for them by the Senate.

Mr. President, I have taken very much more time than I expected to take in the discussion of this question. I feel like saying that it is a matter of profound gratification that Senators have evinced a disposition on both sides of the Chamber to inform themselves as fully as they possibly can with respect to the points at issue and to decide the case, as I am trying to do, purely upon the right and justice of it, as it presents itself to them from the showing that has been made, without being influenced in any manner whatever by the political considerations, if any there be, that are involved in the contest.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLEASE in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Ernst	Kendrick	Randall
Bayard	Ferris	Keyes	Robinson, Ark.
Bingham	Fess	King	Rackett
Bleame	Fletcher	La Follette	Sheppard
Borah	Frazier	Lenroot	Shipstead
Bratton	George	McKellar	Shortridge
Broussard	Gillett	McMaster	Smith
Bruce	Goff	McNary	Smoot
Butler	Gooding	Mayfield	Standfield
Cameron	Hale	Metcalf	Stephens
Capper	Harrell	Moses	Swanson
Caraway	Harris	Neely	Trammell
Copeland	Harrison	Norris	Tygon
Curtis	Heflin	Nye	Wadsworth
Dale	Howell	Oddie	Walsh
Dill	Johnson	Overman	Warren
Edge	Jones, N. Mex.	Phelps	Williams
Edwards	Jones, Wash.	Hittman	Willis

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the motion to recommit the resolution.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, does the Senator from Connecticut desire to press his motion?

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the motion to recommit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to withdraw the motion to recommit. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. What is the request for unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To withdraw the motion to recommit. The Chair hears no objection, and the motion is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] to the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

SENATOR FROM IOWA

While the doors were closed, on request of Mr. CURTIS the following unanimous-consent agreement was entered into:

Ordered (by unanimous consent), That a vote be had on the Steck-Brookhart resolution (S. Res. 194) and all substitutes, amendments, and motions relating thereto at 5 o'clock p. m. on Monday, April 12, 1926; that beginning at 3 p. m. on said day no Senator be permitted to speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes, and that the Senate at the conclusion of its business to-morrow take a recess until 12 o'clock m. on Monday.

CONVENTION WITH CUBA FOR THE PREVENTION OF LIQUOR SMUGGLING

During the consideration of executive business the following convention was ratified, and, on motion of Mr. BORAH, the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom:

To the Senate:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith a convention between the United States and Cuba, signed at Habana on March 4, 1926, to aid in the prevention of the smuggling of alcoholic liquors into the United States.

For the information of the Senate I transmit also copies of notes exchanged between the American ambassador at Habana and the Secretary of State of Cuba at the time of the signature of the convention.

THE WHITE HOUSE, Washington.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Acting Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to ratification, if his judgment approve thereof, a convention between the United States and the Republic of Cuba to aid in the prevention of the smuggling of alcoholic beverages into the United States, signed at Habana on March 4, 1926.

At the time of the signature of the convention notes were exchanged between the ambassador of the United States at Habana and the Secretary of State of Cuba, stating the understanding between the two Governments that in the event of the adherence by the Government of the United States to the protocol of December 16, 1920, under which the Permanent Court of International Justice has been created at The Hague, the Government of the United States will not be averse to considering a modification of the convention or the making of a separate agreement, providing that claims mentioned in Article IV of that convention which can not be settled in the way indicated in the first paragraph of that article shall be referred to the Permanent Court of International Justice instead of to the Permanent Court of Arbitration.

Copies of these notes are inclosed for the information of the Senate.

Respectfully submitted.

JOSEPH C. GREW.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.
Washington, March 13, 1926.

[Translation]

From the Secretary of State of Cuba to the American Ambassador at Habana

No. 185.

REPUBLIC OF CUBA,
SECRETARIA DE ESTADO,
Habana, March 4, 1926.

MR. AMBASSADOR: In connection with the signing to-day of a convention to avoid difficulties which might arise between our two Governments in connection with the laws in force in the United States on the subject of alcoholic beverages and in pursuance of our previous correspondence on the subject, I have the honor to inform you that the Cuban Government understands that in the event of the adhesion by the United States to the protocol of December 16, 1920, under which the Permanent Court of International Justice has been created at The Hague, the Government of the United States will not be averse to considering a modification of the said convention, or the making of a separate agreement, providing that claims as mentioned in Article IV of that convention which can not be settled in the way indicated in the first paragraph of that article, shall be referred to the Permanent Court of International Justice instead of to the Permanent Court of Arbitration.

My government also understands that in case Cuban vessels are seized by the authorities of the United States under the provisions of Articles II or III of this convention, a notification thereof shall be promptly transmitted to the diplomatic representative of Cuba at Washington, giving the name of the vessel, the place of seizure and a brief statement of the grounds therefor.

I shall be glad to have you confirm these understandings on behalf of your Government.

Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

CARLOS MANUEL DE CÉSPEDES.

No. 615.
HABANA, March 4, 1926.
His Excellency CARLOS MANUEL DE CÉSPEDES,
Secretary of State, Habana.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of to-day's date, in which you were so good as to inform me in connection with the signing this day of the convention between the United States and Cuba to aid in the prevention of the smuggling of intoxicating liquors into the United States that the Government of Cuba understands: (1) That in the event of the adhesion by the Government of the United States to the Protocol of December 16, 1920, under which the Permanent Court of International Justice has been created at The Hague, the Government of the United States will not be averse to considering a modification of the said convention, or the making of a separate agreement, providing that claims mentioned in Article IV of that convention which can not be settled in the way indicated in the first paragraph of that article shall be referred to the Permanent Court of International Justice instead of to the Permanent Court of Arbitration; and (2) that in case Cuban vessels are seized by the authorities of the United States under the provisions of Article II or III of this convention, a notification thereof shall be promptly transmitted to the diplomatic representative of Cuba at Washington, giving the name of the vessel, the place of seizure, and a brief statement of the grounds therefor.

Complying with your request for confirmation of these understandings, I have the honor to state that the Cuban Government's understanding of the attitude of the Government of the United States in this respect is correct, and that in the event of the adhesion by the United States to the protocol of December 16, 1920, under which the Permanent Court of International Justice has been created at The Hague, the Government of the United States will not be averse to considering a modification of the convention this day signed, or the making of a separate agreement, providing for the reference of claims mentioned in Article IV of the convention which can not be settled in the way indicated in the first paragraph of that article, to the Permanent Court of International Justice instead of to the Permanent Court of Arbitration.

I also confirm your understanding regarding the notification that is to be given to the diplomatic representative of the Cuban Government at Washington in case Cuban vessels are seized by the authorities of the United States.

Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurance of my highest consideration.

E. H. CROWDER.

CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE REPUBLIC OF CUBA FOR THE PREVENTION OF SMUGGLING OPERATIONS BETWEEN THEIR RESPECTIVE TERRITORIES

The United States of America and the Republic of Cuba, being desirous of avoiding any difficulties which might arise between them in connection with the laws in force in the United States of America on the subject of alcoholic beverages, have decided to conclude a Convention for that purpose and have appointed, as their respective Plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America, Mister Enoch H. Crowder, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America in Cuba and

The President of the Republic of Cuba, Mister Carlos Manuel de Céspedes y de Quesada, Secretary of State of the Republic of Cuba, Who, having communicated to each other their respective full powers, which were found to be in good and proper form, have agreed to the following articles:

ARTICLE I

The High Contracting Parties declare that it is their firm intention to uphold the principle that three marine miles extending from the coast line outwards and measured from low-water mark constitute the proper limits of territorial waters.

ARTICLE II

The Republic of Cuba agrees:

1. That it will raise no objection to the boarding of private vessels under the Cuban flag outside the limits of territorial waters by the authorities of the United States, its territories or possessions, in order that inquiries may be addressed to those on board and an examination be made of the ship's papers for the purpose of ascertaining whether the vessel or those on board are endeavoring to import or have imported alcoholic beverages into the United States, its territories or possessions, in violation of the laws therein force. When such inquiries and examination show a reasonable ground for suspicion, a search of the vessel may be instituted.

2. If there is reasonable cause for belief that the vessel has committed or is committing or attempting to commit an offense against the laws of the United States, its territories or possessions, prohibiting the importation of alcoholic beverages, the vessel may be seized and taken into a port of the United States, its territories or possessions, for adjudication in accordance with such laws.

3. The rights conferred by this article shall not be exercised at a greater distance from the coast of the United States, its territories or possessions, than can be traversed in one hour by the vessel suspected of endeavoring to commit the offense.

In cases, however, in which the liquor is intended to be conveyed to the United States, its territories or possessions, by a vessel other than the one boarded and searched, it shall be the speed of such other vessel and not the speed of the vessel boarded, which shall determine the distance from the coast at which the right under this article can be exercised.

ARTICLE III

No penalty or forfeiture under the laws of the United States shall be applicable or attach to alcoholic liquors or to vessels or persons by reason of the carriage of such liquors, when such liquors are listed as sea stores or cargo destined for a port foreign to the United States, its territories or possessions, on board Cuban vessels voyaging to or from ports of the United States, its territories or possessions, or passing through the territorial waters thereof, and such carriage shall be as now provided by law with respect to the transit of such liquors through the Panama Canal, provided that such liquors shall be kept under seal continuously, while the vessel on which they are carried remains within said territorial waters and that no part of such liquors shall at any time or place be unladen within the United States, its territories or possessions.

ARTICLE IV

Any claim by a Cuban vessel for compensation on the grounds that it has suffered loss or injury through the improper or unreasonable exercise of the rights conferred by Article II of this Convention or on the ground that it has not been given the benefit of Article III shall be referred for the joint consideration of two persons, one of whom shall be nominated by each of the High Contracting Parties.

Effect shall be given to the recommendations contained in any such joint report. If no joint report can be agreed upon, the claim shall be referred to the Permanent Court of Arbitration at The Hague described in the Convention for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, concluded at The Hague, October 18, 1907. The Arbitral Tribunal shall be constituted in accordance with Article 87 (Chapter IV) and with Article 59 (Chapter III) of the said Convention. The proceedings shall be regulated by so much of Chapter IV of the said Convention and of Chapter III thereof (special regard being had for Articles 70 and 74, but excepting Articles 53 and 54) as the Tribunal may consider to be applicable and to be consistent with the provisions of this agreement.

All sums of money which may be awarded by the Tribunal on account of any claim shall be paid within eighteen months after the date of the final award without interest and without deduction, save as hereafter specified.

Each Government shall bear its own expense. The expenses of the Tribunal shall be defrayed by a ratable deduction of the amount of the sums awarded by it, at a rate of five per centum on such sums, or at such lower rate as may be agreed upon between the two Governments; the deficiency, if any, shall be defrayed in equal moieties by the two Governments.

ARTICLE V

This Convention shall be subject to ratification and shall remain in force for a period of one year from the date of exchange of ratifications.

Three months before the expiration of the said period of one year, either of the High Contracting Parties may give notice of its desire to propose modifications in the terms of the Convention.

If such modifications have not been agreed upon before the expiration of the term of one year mentioned above, the Convention shall lapse.

If no notice is given on either side of the desire to propose modifications, the Convention shall remain in force for another year, and so on automatically, but subject always in respect of each such period of a year to the right on either side to propose as provided above three months before its expiration modifications in the Convention, and to the provision that if such modifications are not agreed upon before the close of the period of one year, the Convention shall lapse.

ARTICLE VI

In the event that either of the High Contracting Parties shall be prevented either by judicial decision or legislative action from giving full effect to the provisions of the present Convention the said Convention shall automatically lapse, and, on such lapse or whenever this Convention shall cease to be in force, each High Contracting Party shall enjoy all the rights which it would have possessed had this Convention not been concluded.

The present Convention shall be duly ratified by the High Contracting Parties in accordance with their respective laws; and the ratifications shall be exchanged at the City of Habana as soon as possible.

In witness whereof the Plenipotentiaries above mentioned have signed the two originals of the present Convention, and have affixed their respective seals thereto.

Done in two copies of the same text and legal force in the English and Spanish languages in the City of Habana, on this fourth day of March, nineteen hundred and twenty-six.

CARLOS MANUEL DE CÉSPEDES

ORDER FOR RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate shall close its business to-day it take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE COPPER-MINING INDUSTRY

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, on January 4 of this year I introduced in the Senate a bill, known as S. 2018, to provide a tariff duty of 6 cents per pound on copper, which seeks to give equitable protection to this great and needed industry. It is the same bill heretofore introduced in the lower House by Hon. W. FRANK JAMES, of Michigan.

I shall appreciate it if my colleagues will not interrupt me during this discourse unless it is absolutely necessary. My remarks will be confined to the copper situation in this country, and with especial reference to the provisions of the bill which I have introduced. The time has come when the deplorable conditions of this great industry must be called to the attention of the Congress of the United States and to all our people.

I ask that a copy of the bill I introduced be inserted in the Record at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McMASTER in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

A bill (S. 2018) to amend the tariff act of 1922, entitled "An act to provide revenue, to regulate, commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes."

Be it enacted, etc., That Title I of the tariff act of 1922 is amended by adding after paragraph 380 the following new paragraph:

"PAR. 380-a. Copper ore of all kinds, copper concentrates, regulus, mattes, cement copper and black or coarse copper, 6 cents per pound on the copper contained therein; old copper, scrap copper, fit only for remanufacture; copper scale, clippings from new copper; blister copper, copper in plates, bars, ingots, or pigs, not manufactured, and copper in any other form not specially provided for, 6 cents per pound; all alloys or combinations of copper not specially provided for, 6 cents per pound on the copper contained therein: Provided, That such duty shall not be applied to the copper contained in copper-bearing ores or mattes unless actually recovered: Provided further, That on all importations of copper-bearing ores and mattes of all kinds the duties shall be estimated at the port of entry and a bond given in double the amount of such estimated duties for the transportation of the ores or mattes by common carriers bonded for the transportation of appraised or unappraised merchandise to properly equipped refineries, sampling or smelting establishments, whether designated as bonded warehouses or otherwise. On the arrival of the ores or mattes at such establishments they shall be sampled according to commercial methods under the supervision of Government officers, who shall be stationed at such establishments, and who shall submit the samples thus obtained to a Government assayer designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall make a proper assay of the sample and report the result to the proper customs officers, and the import entries shall be liquidated thereon. And the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make all necessary regulations to enforce the provisions of this paragraph."

SEC. 2. Paragraphs 1533, 1555, and 1556 of Title II of the tariff act of 1922 are hereby repealed.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, American citizens residing within the copper-mining districts of the United States, and directly dependent for their livelihood upon the copper mined therein, are entitled to all the benefits of economic protection accorded to citizens engaged in the production of lead, zinc, iron, and aluminum, or those citizens engaged in manufacturing and agricultural activities. No protective discrimination is permissible in favor of only one class of industrial citizenship; all are entitled to and should receive equal consideration at the hands of Congress.

The copper miner of our country is entitled to protection from the cheap competitive labor of Africa and South America for the same basic economic reasons that Congress accorded protection to the lead miners of Missouri, Idaho, Utah, Oklahoma, and Montana from the lead mined with cheap labor in foreign lands; and the protection accorded to miners engaged in the production of zinc, aluminum, and iron within our country, against similar metals produced by cheap foreign labor.

A comparative review of economic details existent within the lead, zinc, iron, and aluminum industries prior to protection with those subsequent thereto, denotes how beneficent this policy has been to those of our citizens engaged therein.

An adequate tariff undoubtedly made it possible for the iron industry to salvage the low-grade sand iron ores of Minnesota and the lead and zinc industries to mine the low-grade lead and zinc ores of the Mississippi Valley. Without protection we can visualize certain interests rushing to ship into this country iron products from the world's highest grade iron-ore mines in Brazil, and the products from the high-grade lead and zinc mines of Mexico, Europe, and the Orient.

The recovery of metals from formerly noncommercial grade ores is the very essence of true conservation. With adequate tariff protection the domestic copper-mining industry will be able to work ores of exceptionally low grade when compared with present grade standards, and enormous additional copper poundage reserves now known to exist will be added to the present known commercial copper reserves. The result will be that the copper reserves of this country will be ample to care for all our domestic needs for decades to come. While they are mined new areas will be discovered which will undoubtedly add vast additional reserves sufficient to care for all our future domestic needs for generations to come.

A broad review of the industrial history of our country emphasizes that the protection accorded to practically each minute industrial subdivision thereof has resulted in making our country the one possessing the highest wage scale, and this in turn has developed a quality of citizenship and an aggregate national unity and strength beyond compare in world's history.

The care bestowed in protecting each minute subdivision of our industrial sphere has brought about a uniform solidity and strength in each subdivision. Each subdivision of our aggregate industrial realm possesses a certain parallelism to every other one therein. Each is an aggregate of labor, supply, and capital costs.

In the mining of copper ore we are also confronted with the sequence of labor, supply, and capital costs paralleling identically any and all other subdivisions. Our labor citizenship engaged therein is in need of as beneficent protection as that accorded any other citizen of our country. Likewise, our supply and capital costs must be met just as surely as these are cared for in the other subdivisions of our industrial activities.

Copper is no more a so-called "raw resource" from a cost standpoint than any other product mined, grown, or manufactured within our industrial realm. The specious argument that copper is a "raw resource" and hence should be secured at minimum prices abroad and be imported free of duty can only be advocated by those interests controlling foreign copper reserves; or those persons who are desirous of securing and maintaining maximum domestic manufacturing profits.

It is just as tenable to advocate that all products used in all avenues of our industrial activities be secured from the cheapest possible foreign sources and admitted free of duty. A situation such as this would ruin all our domestic industries through a ruination of each subdivision thereof. Paid propagandists would have you believe that our domestic copper reserves are strictly limited and practically exhausted, and consequently copper from South America and Africa, produced with cheap Indian and negro labor, should be permitted to flood this country. This propaganda is founded on a false premise. Our domestic copper reserves are sufficient to care for our industrial needs for decades to come—just as long proportionally, at least, as the domestic reserves of our highly protected lead, zinc, iron, and aluminum industries. It is not a question of limited copper reserves harassing our domestic copper miner; his menace is competition with foreign copper produced with cheap labor.

The domestic producer of copper is confronted with constantly increasing labor, supply, tax, and capital requirement costs. Yet in the face of constantly increasing costs we find copper selling below its average sale price for the past 30 years. This is a dangerous economic situation in view of the universally higher prices existent to-day for practically all commodities when compared with the average prices for those commodities during the past 30 years; and strikingly so when consideration is given to the facts that copper is one of our essential metals, and that in the whole realm of metal production the annual gross value of copper produced is only exceeded by that of pig iron.

This below-average price of copper has existed for a sufficiently long time, about four years, to establish that this price is not due to domestic overproduction or lack of domestic consumption. This below-average price can be attributed to exterior or foreign factors. Lead, zinc, aluminum, and steel are selling at least 50 per cent higher to-day than their average sale price for the past 30 years. They are accorded protection, and each of them represents a greater world production percentage than does our domestic copper production. Inasmuch as the domestic copper mining industry is not a greater world percentage producer than the foregoing enumerated protected metal industries, it seems fair to assume that the domestic copper miner, upon receiving adequate protection, may expect to enjoy at least the same proportional wholesome economic benefits from his labor as that enjoyed by the citizens dependent upon the protected domestic lead, zinc, iron, and aluminum industries.

Our domestic copper-consuming market is greater than the consuming market of all the rest of the world. Inasmuch as the days of exporting domestic copper are practically over, due to the volume and cheap cost of foreign copper flooding and controlling the foreign market, it is indeed fortunate that the domestic copper miner, upon receiving adequate tariff protection, can be reasonably sure of enjoying wholesome economic prosperity by supplying the vast industrial needs of his own country.

It is evident that the protected domestic lead, zinc, aluminum, and steel industries can care for their increased labor supply, tax, and capital requirement costs due to the greatly enhanced selling price of their product. However, the domestic copper producer is approaching economic ruin due to the converging lines of increased costs and decreased selling price of his product. At the present time it is estimated that about one-third of our domestic copper production is in economic jeopardy due to marketing of copper at cost; with a further decrease in the selling price of copper, say to 13 cents per pound, about 65 per cent of the domestic copper will be marketed at a loss.

The ruin confronting the domestic copper producer will be passed on to the copper miner and all those citizens and communities dependent on the continued mining of copper within our country.

A brief review of certain historical phases of the domestic copper-mining industry is instructive.

About 40 years ago Michigan mined approximately 80 per cent of the domestic copper production. About 30 years ago Montana's copper production exceeded that of Michigan. About 15 years ago Arizona's annual production exceeded that of any other State. This increased domestic production from each of the foregoing States in sequence lowered the price of copper. These respective States could not prevent domestic competition between the States, the result being that each period of increased production furnished its quota of abandoned high-cost copper mines, and the only mines that survived were those possessing exceptional ore grade and ore tonnages. The copper miner who lost his livelihood and home equities in these abandoned high-cost areas, and likewise the business man, engineers, geologists, and operating companies, wandered away from their home areas into these new competitive domestic areas and started anew.

The foregoing domestic competition was fair and our country enjoyed exceptionally cheap copper, due not alone to our then possessing the world's largest and highest-grade copper deposits, but likewise a very low wage, supply, and tax cost, plus the exceptionally high grade of ore mined. Yet with all this readjustment our country retained within its boundaries the personnel of the copper-mining industry—did not suffer an economic loss through this personnel wandering forth to foreign copper areas in order to secure a livelihood.

To-day the domestic copper miner is confronted with a competition never before existent in the history of the domestic copper-mining industry. It, however, is not of local but of foreign origin. If local he would have to bear it, would leave his home and surroundings, and wander forth to these new areas and start anew, his loss being an individual one, while the country as a whole would benefit from an increased supply of low-cost domestic copper.

The domestic copper miner is being rapidly driven away from his home areas. He can not wander off into new high-grade and large-volume domestic copper areas seeking a livelihood, for there are no areas at present within the United States that can anywhere near compete with the volume known to exist in South America and Africa. Surely our total citizenship does not wish to force the domestic copper miner into foreign lands, into the new areas which have recently developed unprecedented volumes and grade of copper ore. Surely you do not want to drive our copper miner and his progeny into these competitive areas and have him labor side by side with the Belgian Congo negro and the Indian miner of the Andes. On the other hand, if you wish to retain him, you must accord him protection, to enable him to meet the competition of the cheaper copper that this cheap labor produces. There is no question but that the copper miner of our country is a very essential economic citizen and that he is entitled to and should receive the same degree of protection accorded citizens engaged in any and all the other subdivisions of our industrial life. It is self-evident that without an adequate supply of domestic copper the foreign producer, whenever he secures control of our domestic copper market, will as surely overcharge the domestic consumer with the same degree of exploitive and calloused thoroughness now demonstrated by foreigners in control of rubber, potash, coffee, and other necessities of our Nation. Foreign nations, as well as their individuals, benefit from this extortion, and in view of their well-known rapacity national necessity demands that we always maintain an ample domestic production of copper.

The destructive nature of the competition, which is rapidly destroying our copper-mining industry, will be evident by analyzing the volume, grade, and economic factors pertaining to certain of these foreign competitive deposits and comparing them with the factors pertaining to our known domestic copper reserves.

Ten years ago there was no real foreign competition confronting the domestic producer of copper. To-day three so-called porphyry-type copper mines in Chile, the areas owned by the Chile, Braden, and Andes Cos., have known copper-ore reserves aggregating 1,075,023,406 tons, averaging 2.07 per cent copper, and containing the enormous total of 44,498,700,000 pounds of copper. In order to convey a comparative idea as to the immensity of this reserve it may be stated that it is one-third larger than all the copper mined within the United States from 1845 to date. The loc of this copper poundage lies 173 miles inland, rail haul, and 4,040 miles, water haul, from New York.

The so-called porphyry-type copper mines in the United States—this type embracing practically all the large and definitely known domestic copper reserves—namely, the areas owned by Utah, Chino, Ray, Inspiration, Nevada Consolidated, and New Cornelia companies, have known copper reserves aggregating 719,505,600 tons, averaging 1.44 per cent copper, same containing the total of 20,704,296,000 pounds of copper. The loc of this domestic copper poundage lies 2,580 miles rail haul from New York, or the combination of 1,011 miles rail haul and 3,800 miles water haul.

In order to present ore tonnages, grade, ownership, and distance statistics in a condensed form, I submit four tables. I ask unanimous consent that these tables may be inserted in the Record without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, a comparison of the foregoing enumerated porphyry ore reserve denotes that the three Chilean mines have known copper poundage reserves two and two-tenths times the known copper poundage reserves embraced within the six United States mines. This means that the Chilean mines can produce two and two-tenths times the amount of copper per annum during an equivalent time period when compared with the possible annual production from the six domestic mines. The six domestic mines did in 1923 produce 499,611,328 pounds of copper, this representing 34 per cent of our total domestic production. The Chilean mines can produce two and two-tenths times this, or an average of 1,100,000,000 pounds of copper per year for the next 40 years.

The average grade of the Chilean ore reserves is about 50 per cent greater than the average of our domestic mines. This denotes a much less mining, milling, and leaching cost for the Chilean copper than our domestic copper. The Chilean copper poundage lies an average of 800 miles nearer New York than the domestic poundage. This denotes that Chilean copper can be laid down in New York at less transportation cost than our domestic copper.

The Chilean copper poundage due to its nearness to tidewater, about one-sixth of the rail distance of the domestic poundage, enjoys a much lower supply transportation cost than our domestic copper. The low cost but efficient Chilean miner of Indian origin receives vastly less for his labor than our domestic copper miner. Surely the Indian of the Andes with his limited civilization, simple wants, lack of educational opportunities, and repressed since the days of Pizarro, is no fit economic companion for our domestic copper miner. No one within our country, outside of those international commercialists striving for tribute through utilization of this cheap Indian labor, would claim otherwise. However, their sleek arguments are overwhelmingly controverted by the well-known and easily ascertainable facts pertaining to the repressive and low-wage conditions besetting the Andean Indian.

The competition of this labor with that of our domestic copper miner must be eliminated through placing an adequate tariff on the product this cheap labor produces; namely, foreign copper. Now the Chilean copper producer can purchase his supplies in the free-trade markets of the world, carry his copper to New York in foreign bottoms, and sell it without import duty in our highly protected domestic market.

It is evident that the Chilean producer can deliver his copper in New York at an average cost price of 6 cents per pound. The 1923 cost per pound for copper delivered in New York for the six foregoing enumerated domestic mines, representing about 34 per cent of the 1923 production, is estimated to be about 10½ cents. Excluding Utah Copper Co., which mined about 40 per cent of the aforementioned group production, the copper cost for the remaining five mines was about 12 cents per pound.

In addition to the menacing flood of cheap Chilean copper, the domestic copper miner is immediately confronted with an enormous production from the Katanga district, Belgian Congo, Africa.

The Union Minière du Haut Katanga reports as of 1924 a reserve of 74,686,600 tons of ore averaging 6.69 per cent copper, same containing a total of 9,993,000,000 pounds of copper. To convey an idea of the immense size of this reserve it may be stated that it about equals Arizona's total production, 15 per cent greater than Montana's total production, and 35 per cent greater than Michigan's total production of copper from 1845 to date. These three States have produced about 80 per cent of all the copper mined within the United States from 1845 to date.

The loci of the Katanga copper reserve lies 1,100 miles, rail haul, to Benguela, on Lobita Bay, west coast of Africa, and 5,800 miles water haul to New York. Assuming the water haul equivalent to 580 rail miles, we find this reserve lies within an equivalent 1,680 rail-mile haul from New York, this rail haul being 800 miles less than the rail haul from the loci of all the United States copper deposits to New York. Through the utilization of foreign bottoms it is evident that Katanga copper can be laid down in New York at less transportation cost than our domestic copper. It should require about two years to build the remaining one-half of rail mileage between the Katanga reserve and Benguela. Certainly no economic factor should intervene and prevent completion of this shorter haul to tidewater when consideration is given to the fact that the value of the definitely known copper reserves exceeds by fifty times the probable cost of rail completion.

In order to emphasize that the Katanga reserve is not a languishing or a possible future competitor, but one of the present, even though they are for the moment handicapped by inefficient plant facilities and a 2,300-mile rail haul to tidewater, it may be stated that it did during 1924 produce 188,250,000 pounds of copper at an average cost of 10.4 cents per pound and with a profit for the year of $5,030,000.

We have no single high-grade copper-ore reserve within the United States or Alaska that can be compared in volume with the Katanga reserve. In fact, the sum total of all our known so-called high-grade copper reserves can not be compared for the reason that they do not contain anywhere the copper poundage of the Katanga reserve. The average grade of all the copper ore mined within the United States for 1925 containing 1,464,165,000 pounds was 1.70 per cent copper. About 78 per cent of our copper was mined from ores averaging 1.4 per cent copper. The remaining 22 per cent was mined from ores averaging 6.7 per cent copper.

The copper areas which furnish most of the high-grade ore are at Bisbee and Jerome, Ariz., and in the Copper River district, Alaska. The Butte district was formerly the largest producing high-grade domestic copper, but for more than a decade the grade of ore mined there has averaged less than 2.5 per cent copper.

The Bisbee, Jerome, and Copper River districts produced in 1923 about 22 per cent of our total production, at an average cost of 9 cents per pound, from ores averaging 6.7 per cent copper. The Bisbee district in 1923 produced about 100,000,000 pounds of copper from smelting ores averaging about 4.6 per cent copper. The Jerome district in 1923 produced about 140,000,000 pounds from ores averaging about 7 per cent copper. The Copper River district in 1923 produced about 84,000,000 pounds from ores averaging 11.6 per cent copper. The total of the above is 324,000,000 pounds of copper from ores averaging 6.7 per cent. This average for the domestic high-grade copper-ore districts is practically identical with the 6.69 per cent average for the Katanga reserve.

The Bisbee, Jerome, and Copper River districts have produced from 1880 to date about 6,000,000,000 pounds of copper. Bisbee having produced about 55 per cent, Jerome about 30 per cent, and the Copper River district about 15 per cent of this total. It required more than 44 years to produce 85 per cent of the foregoing total, and about 20 years for the remaining 15 per cent, or an average of 40 years for the total output.

The foregoing total is only 60 per cent of the Katanga reserve. This conveys to you additional comparative information denoting the immensity of the African reserve.

There is no information available as to the aggregate copper poundage known to exist in the three foregoing high-grade domestic ore districts. They, however, contain large copper reserves, and the adjacent known mineralized areas will undoubtedly continue to develop additional copper reserves for decades to come. They are deep metal-mining districts and excessive cost prohibits detailed ore explorations years in advance.

Costly shafts and underground workings must be run and maintained. Vast sums must be expended for pump installations to care for mine waters; likewise, vast sums to provide hoisting facilities. In addition vast sums must be expended for timber for underground supports and for fuel for pumping mine waters and hoisting ore. Furthermore, it will require the services of skilled mechanics to maintain mine equipment and experienced miners to maintain mine output. It is estimated that the daily production per miner employed will not exceed 2 tons of mined ore and that the mining cost will average about $5 per ton of ore mined.

The menace to our domestic copper-mining industry from the Katanga reserve is not only that of cheap labor and the enormous volume and high grade of the ore reserves but also the unusual stratigraphic position of same. In the Katanga reserve the ore lies at the surface, and its tonnage can be mined with steam or electrically operated ore shovels. The operators do not have to sink costly shafts or run and maintain expensive underground workings; no costly hoisting and pump equipment or maintenance charges therefore have to be met. No timber for mine supports or enormous quantities of power for ore hoisting and pumping mine waters are chargeable against their mine output. Accidents to their employees will be at a minimum, and they will be able to recover all their ore.

The Katanga ore reserve lies on the surface, and their mining problem is solely one of shoveling the ore directly into 50-ton ore cars. One skilled shovel operator can mine at least 1,500 tons of ore per shift, denoting a mined-ore efficiency many times greater than the output of the skilled underground miner within our domestic high-grade ore districts. In addition there are millions of Belgian Congo negroes available at wages that will not exceed 20 cents per day.

The Congo, with its reeking and soul-barrowing memories of enslaved labor, its jungle trails paved with countless sighing souls and trodden by the millions of forced tribute bearers of ivory and rubber in the past, are now to be used to gather copper for export to our domestic market.

One can visualize the malachite green and azurite blue of the Katanga ore shot through with the cuprite red of the straining, sweating, and soul-racked bodies of impressed labor. On the one hand we can see the few palatial continental mansions of the masters and the countless African huts housing their downtrodden labor. In contrast thereto can be seen the hundreds of copper districts within our homeland, peopled by hundreds of thousands of our kin, in comfortable homes and midst surroundings and opportunities befitting our advanced civilization.

Extended argument is surely not necessary to denote that our domestic copper miner can not meet Congo labor competition. Such degrading and minimum cost labor competition can only be checked and eliminated through the medium of an adequate tariff on foreign copper produced by cheap labor.

Due to the vast supply of cheap hydroelectric power available, plus the factors foregoing enumerated, there is no question but that the Katanga reserve can be shovel mined at a cost not to exceed 50 cents per ore ton, or about one-half of 1 cent per pound of copper produced.

The Katanga reserve ore is seemingly an ideal leaching ore. It is estimated that about 95 per cent of the copper is recoverable by this process and should not cost to exceed $3 per ore ton, or 2.3 cents per pound of copper produced. The cost of freight to New York and additional refining and selling should not exceed 2 cents per pound of copper produced. The aggregate of these cost factors denotes that Katanga reserve copper should be laid down in New York at a cost of about 4.8 cents per pound. In view of the foregoing cost factors it is certainly reasonable to assume that Katanga reserve copper will be delivered in New York at a cost not to exceed 6 cents per pound.

Katanga reserve can easily mine and leach 20,000 tons of ore per day and maintain this rate for years to come. This means an annual production of 900,000,000 pounds of copper which can be delivered at New York at a cost not to exceed 6 cents per pound.

It may be stated that Chile Copper Co. does now shovel, mine, and leach at least 20,000 tons of ore per day. In addition to the Chilean and Katanga copper competition the domestic copper-mining industry is confronted with a probable annual average copper production from Peru aggregating 150,000,000 pounds and from Mexico amounting to 150,000,000 pounds, or a total of 300,000,000 pounds of copper per year. It is also believed that within a comparatively short time Northern Rhodesia and the French Congo, Africa, will begin to produce large quantities of copper.

The assumption is tenable that the domestic copper producer can anticipate within the near future a combined competitive production of at least 500,000,000 pounds of copper per year for years to come from Peru, Mexico, northern Rhodesia, and French Congo. It is also believed that large additional known copper reserves exist in Chile and Katanga, the tonnage and grade of which have not yet been published. Furthermore, that there are large undeveloped copper areas in these two sections which upon completion of exploratory work will, it is believed, add vast copper poundages to the known reserves.

It has heretofore been stated that the United States porphyry type deposits did in 1923 furnish 34 per cent of the domestic product at an average cost of 10.5 cents per pound, and the high-grade ore districts furnished 22 per cent at an average cost of 9 cents per pound of the total domestic copper production. The remainder, namely, 44 per cent, aggregating 640,000,000 pounds of copper, has a cost production averaging 13 cents per pound. This remainder came from Montana (Butte district), Michigan (Lake Superior district), Arizona (a remainder of 185,000,000 pounds from Morenci, Globe, Miami Copper Co., Sacramento Hill, and so forth), California, Tennessee, and all the other States and districts within the United States not heretofore mentioned.

Averaging the aforementioned costs, we find that for 1923 the average cost of copper produced within the United States was about 11.5 cents per pound. In analyzing costs for 1923 it was also found that 65 per cent of same was produced at an average cost of about 13 cents per pound. Summarizing the foregoing discussion, we find that the United States copper-mining industry is confronted with an annual copper production of 1,100,000,000 pounds from Chile and 900,000,000 pounds from Katanga, a certain and definite annual total competitive production of 2,000,000,000 pounds of copper; also that this competitive production can be laid down in New York at a cost of 6 cents per pound.

It was also stated that the 1923 domestic copper production, amounting to about 1,500,000,000 pounds, cost 11.5 cents per pound. Furthermore, that 65 per cent of our total domestic production was produced at a cost of 13 cents per pound. Thus it costs 5.5 cents more per pound to produce all our copper, and 7 cents more for 65 per cent thereof within the United States, than it does to produce copper within the Chile and Katanga areas. This difference in cost is easily understood when consideration is given to the many heretofore enumerated economic factors favoring these foreign areas. In view of this difference in cost, amounting to about 6 cents per pound, why is it that the controlling financial factors within the domestic copper industry have not energetically sought and secured a 6-cent duty on import copper?

In analyzing control factors in the domestic copper mining industry we find two closely related domestic corporations controlled and producing a total of 786,000,000 pounds of copper, this representing 53 per cent of the total domestic copper production for the year 1923. These same two domestic corporations controlled 100 per cent of the Chilean copper production for the year 1923. These two corporations also control 92 per cent of the United States porphyry deposit copper poundage discussed heretofore and all the Chilean reserve copper poundage. The cost of these two domestic corporations was an average of 11.5 cents for their 1923 United States production; and these same two corporations control the large copper reserves of Chile and can lay down in New York 1,100,000,000 pounds of copper per year at a cost of 6 cents per pound. With copper selling at 14 cents per pound at New York, it is evident that these two corporations can only make 8.5 cents per pound on their United States output, as against 8 cents per pound profit from their Chilean mines output. Which of these two channels of profit will be followed and developed to its maximum by the undeniably shrewd, able, and far-seeing business men controlling both? It is evident that sound international commercialism would dictate the securing of an 8-cent per pound profit as against one of 8.5 cents.

Furthermore, there may exist a possible corporate ambition within these two corporations that after merging their equities, thereby directly controlling 85 per cent of the known copper reserves of the world, they will be able to dictate the price of copper. Their tendency may also be in the direction that monopolies usually traverse, namely, one of temporarily lowering prices to destroy the weaker competitors; buy out or reach an understanding with those competitors not easily eliminated, and when this is accomplished they can fix a price for copper products circumscribed only by conscience or economic fear. There will be nothing artificial or ephemeral about this probable international copper corporation. They will definitely control ore reserves of vast magnitude and values, with efficient facilities to deliver copper products from mine to consumer in volume and at costs beyond competition. Under these circumstances it is evident that they will completely dominate the mining, marketing, and the sale price of copper and its products.

The domestic copper miner and all the citizens residing within and dependent upon the continued and uninterrupted mining of copper within our domestic copper areas view with alarm this dual control of the copper-mining industry of this country and exterior thereto. Congress does not permit the controllers of the domestic lead, zinc, and aluminum industries of the country to import free of duty unlimited quantities of their respective metals from cheap foreign-labor areas, whether they own or do not own these areas. You do not permit domestic financiers in control of manufacturing plants within Europe or the Orient to ship their cheap controlled products into our home areas free of duty. Neither do you permit the jobbing interest of this country an unlimited right to import free of duty any cheap-labor product from foreign areas.

Is the United States Steel Corporation permitted to import free of duty an unlimited poundage of steel ingots from the cheap-labor areas of Europe or Asia? Would the iron miners of Minnesota, Michigan, Wisconsin, Colorado, and Alabama, the railroad and shipping employees who transport the iron ore to smelting centers, the coal miners who furnish the power and fuel to smelt the iron ore, the employees of the blast furnace and steel ingot centers—would all the foregoing citizens view with complacency the possibility that the rolling mills of the steel corporation be permitted to import duty free an unlimited supply of cheaply produced foreign steel ingots? If a situation such as the foregoing existed, it is a certainty the mining of iron ore in this country would be destroyed. A situation analogous to the foregoing exists within the copper-mining industry of this country. It is of recent origin, yet nevertheless it exists and must be checked promptly if the mining of copper in this country is to remain one of our basic industries.

At the present time the foreign producer of copper can ship an unlimited poundage of copper ingots into this country free of duty. The poundage so imported means an equivalent lessened copper production within our home areas. This cheap foreign-labor copper can be delivered in quantities sufficient to supply all our domestic needs and at a price greatly below our cost of production. This unlimited importation of copper free of duty into this country will destroy our copper-mining industry; in consequence destroy the livelihood of our miners and all those dependent on the continued mining of copper within our domestic copper areas.

Is our country willing to lose the experienced personnel that has taken generations to develop, since the beginning of the copper-mining industry in this country from 1845 to date? If you permit the copper-mining industry of this country to be crushed beneath the juggernaut of personal greed you will find this personnel drifting into these new foreign areas to seek a livelihood. Many of them—executives, engineers, geologists, and skilled miners—have already left our home areas and are using their experience and skill in developing competitive foreign copper areas. It would require many years to replace the experienced personnel we now possess; this personnel which embodies the skill and experience developed during the 80 years we have been mining copper. It is beyond question the most skilled and experienced in the world, and in losing it this country would suffer a distinct economic loss, plus the additional loss of a high quality of citizenship.

The continued importation of cheap foreign-labor copper will destroy our domestic milling, leaching, and copper-smelting industries; great losses will be sustained by the coal, coke, oil, transportation, and supply agencies of our country. Likewise, many communities will be utterly destroyed and many States will suffer large taxation revenue losses in case an unlimited supply of cheap foreign-labor copper is permitted to enter free of duty. These controllers of our domestic and the Chilean copper production also control the brass, copperplate, and copper-wire manufacturing industries of this country. Their viewpoint is seemingly that of a manufacturer, a jobber; not that of a miner. They are desirous of securing so-called "raw copper" at minimum prices, knowing that high profits are available through the manufactured copper products their plants will produce. They also know that their particular manufacturing plants will always have an ample supply of ingot copper through their control of huge ore reserves. They will exercise great care that an ample tariff schedule be maintained as against imported articles manufactured from copper. This control of ore reserves is undoubtedly the shield behind which they will take refuge, emerging therefrom with profits much greater than would be possible from mine operations alone.

Does the buyer of a copper boiler in this country, paying therefor at the rate of a dollar a pound, begrudge the domestic copper miner his wage amounting to a few cents thereof? Will the consumer of electric current in this country receive the benefit of cheap foreign-labor copper that these controllers of our domestic copper-fabricating industry will furnish? No; these controllers may be expected to secure the maximum possible profits out of their manufacturing activities. The selling price of copper to-day is less than its average sale price for the past 30 years. In comparing the price of manufactured copper products used by the consumer with the selling price of copper you will find the tendency ever to increase and is to-day selling higher than its past 30-year average price. Surely Congress will not continue to permit the domestic copper miner's livelihood to be subjected to the international commercial ambitions of any set of men—not grant them continued power to import duty-free copper from their Indian-labor estates of the Andes or the downtrodden areas of central Africa. The domestic consumer of copper will never receive any proportional benefit from this cheap-labor foreign copper; on the other hand, the domestic copper miner will be destroyed. Surely our country wishes to maintain unimpaired and in continuous operation all the developed copper areas within our boundaries and wishes to reestablish livable conditions therein. This in turn will result in increasing our known copper reserves through increased incentive to explore adjacent mineralized areas.

These dual controllers of our domestic and foreign copper production have spent tens of millions of dollars the past decade in foreign lands to secure control of copper-ore tonnages amidst labor and economic conditions to their liking. Yet these same interests during the past decade have hardly spent a dollar within our country for drilling and exploring the hundreds of undeveloped potentially valuable copper-stained outcrops contained within our 220 well-known domestic copper districts, which are located in 19 of our States. Even though they could find new ore areas containing average commercially valuable copper reserves in this country, the cost of the copper therefrom would be much greater than their foreign-owned supply. Hence their manufacturing profits would be decreased. Have these dual controllers of our copper-mining industry and Chile ever evinced an interest in our western civic affairs greater than their demand for cheaper wages, lower taxes, and maximum possible profits? How many model and independent communities have they established, and just how keen has been their desire and energy to give employment to the American miner? Their history has been one of intense commercialism, to secure the maximum possible profit out of the human as well as the ore factors involved.

Is it, therefore, startling, in view of the foregoing phases, that the domestic copper miner views with alarm the power these dual controllers possess? He knows full well that his future can only be made secure by Congress placing an import duty on the cheap foreign-labor copper which these controllers are pouring into our country in ever-increasing volume. This citizen with the blood of pioneers coursing through his veins is ever seeking within our homeland for new copper areas and prospecting and mining within those known. This man of courage, brawn, optimism, and intelligence who descends into dangerous depths to labor and shatter the earth's crust in search of copper, constantly bringing forth the metal that forms the millions of circling bands that carry the tidings of human activities between individuals, communities, and countries, that convey the energy impulses that turn our wheels of commerce and converts night into day. Copper, the metal of rare beauty and utility, essential in nearly every avenue of human endeavor and industry. Surely this man of our own blood and kin who is ever seeking this valuable metal for us is entitled to your most earnest and favorable consideration. Surely you will accord him protection, not make an exception of him, not permit our domestic copper miner to remain isolated and pilloried midst the ever-swelling volume of menacing economic barbs shot out of the Andean heights or the Congo jungles.

We find the independent and purely domestic producer already doing things of necessity so that he can exist. He is becoming increasingly unable to pay essential local taxes, the result being less efficient local school facilities and minimum local civic improvements. The tendency also is to employ the cheap and ignorant foreign laborer rather than our own citizens. Our domestic copper districts are on a 60 per cent producing basis and steadily growing worse. Next year it will be still worse and grow constantly more so unless an import duty on foreign-produced copper is made effective. Everything that the domestic producer of copper purchases in the way of supplies is bought in our highly protected home market. This higher cost for supplies, plus higher labor cost, makes it impossible for him to compete at home or abroad with the low supply and cheap labor cost copper from foreign areas. Is there any way to equalize this inequality, in view of existing governmental policies, other than by placing an import duty on foreign-produced copper?

Commercial efficiency will surely prevail when the shrewd and competent dual controllers of our domestic copper-mining industry and the Chilean copper reserves reach the rim of their anticipated endless long plateaus of maximum manufacturing profits. Whereas yesterday they shipped raw copper ore and unrefined black copper to our domestic smelters and refineries to be converted into electrolytic copper, to-day they are shipping vast quantities of electrolytic copper direct from their Chilean areas; to-morrow they will undoubtedly attempt to utilize the cheap labor and cheaper supplies of their Andean estates and import their copper in fabricated form.

In 1917 Chile imported into this country 4,074,784 pounds of refined copper, representing 0.2 per cent of its total copper importation; and 206,133,975 pounds of copper contained in ore, concentrate, matte, and black copper, representing 99.8 per cent of its total copper importation. In 1923 Chile imported 118,446,874 pounds of refined copper, representing 44 per cent of its total copper importation, and 151,144,975 pounds of copper contained in ore, concentrates, and black copper, representing 56 per cent of its total copper importation. The foregoing shows a 2,200 per cent increase in refined copper imports from Chile in the short space of six years. This denotes a lessened employment of citizens in our domestic smelter and refining plants, a lessened consumption of domestic fuel and power, and in consequence lessened labor employment in these industries; also a decrease in domestic tax revenue through the refining of this copper in Chile instead of in the United States. The foregoing loss to our smelter and refining industries will not alone show a future progressive loss increase, but will undoubtedly continue to develop until the total Chilean copper imported will be in electrolytic form. Chile will naturally expect that her citizens and industries be given the maximum possible benefits from her domestic resources, just as Canada in restricting her pulpwood exports has founded great industries within her areas and increased her manufactured exports of wood pulp, paper, and paper products.

The foregoing losses to our domestic refining and smelting plants and collateral industries further emphasizes the necessity of protecting our copper-mining industry. In protecting it thereby enabling our home areas to supply our home market the total domestic copper consumed will be refined within our country. This means that the citizens dependent on the continued refining of copper within our country will be assured of a continued livelihood and that our refineries will be maintained on an efficient maximum production basis.

Assuming that these dual controllers of our domestic and the Chilean copper production assure us in all earnestness that they will always furnish the domestic consumer with low-price copper products proportional to the low cost of foreign copper contained therein, will they be able to fulfill such a promise when and if made? The Chilean Government will always have the final say as to any and all resources within its boundaries. Through the medium of an export tax on copper it can dictate the commercial value of its copper reserves. If this tax is excessive it means the utter destruction of its export copper industry. Such an event is not anticipated, although it may happen if calloused political factors desire to acquire the industry at a cheap price for their State. If Chile enacts an export tax, the effect will probably be that Chilean copper will be sold at prices to yield the maximum export tax. This tax, plus all the other costs, will increase the price of copper to be ultimately borne by the consumer. A practice similar to the foregoing is effective to-day in the rubber, potash, and coffee monopoly industries; hence it is not unusual and can not be considered as jeopardizing international relations.

The high-class Chilean has been termed the "Yankee of the Andes." He is an able, courageous, and, above all, an intelligent commercialist. A comparatively few families control the political destinies of Chile, and these same families own vast landed estates. They are interested in maintaining taxes on land at a minimum. Governmental expenses must be met, however; hence their effort is directed in securing the money therefor from sources other than a tax on land.

From what sources has Chile secured enormous revenues in the past? A review of the Chilean nitrate industry is instructive. This is a world monopoly controlled by the Chilean Government. Originally in the hands of optimistic foreign individuals it has gradually passed into and is now controlled by the State. It has paid hundreds of millions of dollars into the treasury of the State, and to-day is the great source of revenue the Government of Chile has. With an appetite whetted for decades by foreigners' dollars flowing in from the nitrate-industry monopoly, do you believe that the Chileans will hesitate to secure the maximum return possible out of any other monopoly—for instance, the copper monopoly?

For that matter the exigencies of our Belgian friends in political control of the Katanga copper reserves will undoubtedly also find that an export tax on Katanga copper will be a lucrative source of income, and will welcome the possibility of delivering high-priced copper to us when and if they share in this monopoly.

It may be stated as a fact that the domestic consumer of copper, when dependent on foreigners for copper, can not accept the word or assurance of an individual foreigner, or one of our own citizens, as binding on the governments controlling these reserves. Individuals or corporations possess no delegated powers which governments must respect; hence their promises are mere statements and are unenforceable. It is very certain that the domestic consumer of copper, when solely dependent on foreigners for his supply of copper, will pay whatever is demanded. It also seems certain that the average price will be much higher than he would have had to pay for domestic-produced copper had our copper-mining industry been permitted to survive. Fortunately our domestic copper-mining industry is still functioning, and the foregoing assumed situation will never confront our domestic consumer if we secure at once an import duty on foreign-produced copper, thereby enabling our industry to survive and continue to meet all our domestic needs. It should always be remembered that our own industries are always controllable under the provisions of our laws and their increments of profits taxable to aid our civic institutions. Bearing this in mind, a prosperous domestic copper-mining industry can not be other than beneficial in every possible way to our citizenship and country.

There has been a hectic, feverish stock-exchange activity of the stocks of the corporations controlling the Chilean and Peruvian copper reserves. Their stocks have mounted higher and higher while the stocks of our independent and purely domestic producer of copper are listless. The speculators are anticipating huge profits from these foreign copper areas. Is there a better criterion denoting the huge anticipated profits from these foreign reserves than this stock-market increase? All of this increase is based on the assumption and belief that these foreign areas will undersell the domestic producer of copper, not only abroad but also in our local market, which is greater than all of the rest of the world combined. When this competition reaches its apex our domestic copper-mining industry will be destroyed. When the speculators' profit reaches a maximum, the loss to our copper-mining industry dependents will be complete. It is unbelievable that the citizenship of this country will stand by and permit the sacrifice of the livelihood of some 500,000 citizens directly and indirectly dependent on the continued mining of copper within our home areas, and thereby solidify the speculative profits of those agencies who are planning and anticipating the destruction of our copper-mining industry. When the true situation is known, Congress will accord justice and equity to those citizens through the medium of a tariff on import copper, thereby saving the domestic copper-mining industry and the livelihood, homes, and future of the citizens dependent thereon.

How is it tenable or fair to deny and except the miner of copper production from foreign low-cost copper, when protection has been accorded the domestic miner engaged in the lead, zinc, iron, and aluminum metal industries? It certainly can not be argued that copper is less valuable proportionally in every avenue of our industrial life than any of the foregoing metals. If our industrial body be skeletonized with steel, its helplessness would be manifest without its electrical-nerve system composed of copper. Our industrial body requires copper in addition to steel and other metals in order to function properly, as much so as the human body requires not alone food but moisture and air as well to sustain its activities.

Our country is very active industrially and economic conditions as a whole are excellent. The present domestic consumption of copper per capita is the greatest in our industrial history.

Yet our domestic copper-mining industry is in a state of uncertainty; dependency is the rule, not the exception. The citizens within the domestic copper areas are surcharged with anxiety and fearful of the future. Surely this is a strange economic situation. When the domestic consumption of copper is at its maximum the copper-mining citizens dependent thereon are in the depths of despair.

The cause underlying it all and directly responsible therefor is the tremendous increase in foreign copper production; the ability of the foreigner to produce a volume of copper greater than our own and at vastly less cost. The buyers of copper know this, and during the present transitory stage of cheap foreign copper have hammered the price of domestic copper below its average 30-year price. These buyers will undoubtedly secure still cheaper copper, possibly down to 10 cents per pound, when the ruin of our domestic copper-mining industry will be complete. When domestic competition has been eliminated and domestic mines and plants abandoned, the buyer or consumer of copper will have to pay monopolistic prices for it.

An import duty on copper is the only remedy that will correct the present anomalous existing economic situation besetting our copper-mining industry, and permit the citizens thereof to enjoy prosperity proportional to that enjoyed by our citizens engaged in the protected lead, zinc, iron, and aluminum industries.

An argument advanced by those in favor of copper remaining on the free list is that our future domestic requirements of copper demands that we do not interfere with and thereby interrupt the efficient development of foreign competitive areas. Is this condition peculiar to the domestic copper-mining industry alone? Does not an analogous situation exist in all the other industries of our country? Following this argument to the end means letting down the bars of protection and admitting free of duty every product produced or manufactured throughout the world. The time, and the only time, to permit the unlimited importation of foreign copper duty free is when our domestic copper reserves are definitely and positively known to be exhausted. Our present known reserves will last for decades, and there are a thousand copper-stained hills within our home areas still awaiting detailed exploration. These will be explored and will surely add vast additional copper reserves, as hills in the past have yielded to those of the present, if the domestic prospector, miner, and producer can be protected against the destructive flood of cheap foreign labor copper.

The only incentive to develop our home copper area rests with our own citizens—those dependent thereon. We can not expect foreign copper controllers to aid us in exploring any new domestic copper areas. The driving, urging desire to do so rests with those of our citizens dependent thereon and desirous of maintaining home and progeny midst surroundings dear to their heart, within their homeland and in contact with their own citizenship.

The history of salvaging the low-grade sand and magnetite iron ores of Minnesota and the low-grade lead and zinc ores of our domestic areas afford excellent examples of where a dependent citizenship added vast reserves to our domestic mineral resources. This was done because the cheaper competitive foreign metals were excluded under the wise and beneficent provisions of our tariff law.

The consuming citizens of this country do not need, nor would they expect to receive any benefit from the small additional amount that a satisfied copper miner will receive through the continued production of copper within our home areas any more than they denied the increment of increase to those of our citizens engaged without our present protected industries.

Constant propaganda has been broadcast during the past two years to convey the impression that to-morrow conditions will be better. Germany or some other European nation will soon be able to buy our domestic copper, and so forth. We can not now compete in the European markets with the large volume of low-cost foreign-produced copper, and even if we could for the moment where is the Andes Copper Co. going to sell its 200,000,000 pounds annual output when it adds its quota a few months hence to the ever-swelling Chilean copper stream? Will it market the output in this country or in Europe? Even if Germany increased her per capita consumption by one-half, her additional requirements could be more than satisfied by this new and latest foreign increment of increased production. If the European copper market is so valuable, let the foreign producer of copper sell his product there. The independent and purely domestic copper producer is satisfied with selling his product in his home areas. He is entitled to his home market for his product. Grant him this right as you did citizens engaged in the protected steel, lead, zinc, and aluminum industries.

The argument is advanced that our domestic copper mining industry does not need an import duty on foreign-produced copper, for the reason that our domestic industry must export copper in order to mine at a profit. Our domestic copper producer can not compete with the cheap-cost foreign-produced copper which has come into the world's market the past few years. Their enormous reserves and cheaper costs of foreign copper make it impossible for the domestic producer to retain former markets if the foreign producer is in need thereof. The result has been a decrease in our exports and a lessening of our domestic capacity production. If our domestic producers could compete, they certainly would not be selling two-thirds of their production, either locally or abroad, very nearly at cost. Good business would dictate that they retain this poundage in the hope that the future would afford a reasonable profit. However, these high-cost domestic producers must retain their personnel, keep their mines in repair, and pay taxes. All this overhead must be met and they are striving to secure it from ore reserves. If they should suspend all mine operations, they would endanger their equities. Hence, they are continuing operations hoping that something will transpire to relieve their dilemma. Their hope the past four years has been that the price of copper would advance to a point where they could regain their losses and continue profitable operations. However, their hopes have not been realized and they are desperately striving to hold their equities intact. Their plight is growing constantly worse, and the only certain relief for them is to secure control of their home market by excluding the low-cost foreign-produced copper.

A review of our copper-export statistics of 1923 with those of a few years ago is interesting, and the following detail is submitted:

In 1913 we produced 1,224,500,000 pounds of copper; our domestic consumption was 812,000,000 pounds, or 67 per cent thereof. This left 412,000,000 pounds of domestic copper, or 33 per cent, available for export.

In 1923 we produced 1,435,000,000 pounds of copper; our domestic consumption was 1,300,000,000 pounds, or 93 per cent thereof. This left 135,000,000 pounds of domestic copper, or 7 per cent, available for export.

An analysis of the foregoing shows that in this 10-year period our total production increased 17 per cent; our domestic consumption increased 60 per cent; and that our copper exports decreased 67 per cent. This analysis denotes that our domestic consumption is approaching and nearly equaling our domestic production and that our copper exports are decreasing and approaching a minimum. The foregoing is somewhat indicative of the change that has taken place within our copper industry the past decade.

During this decade the enormous areas of South America and Africa have been developed, and their rapidly mounting copper production has already destroyed our control of the foreign copper market. This stream of foreign low-cost copper is increasing rapidly and will not alone control all the foreign markets, but our own as well, unless an import duty on foreign copper is made effective.

An analysis of existing costs denotes that the foreign-produced copper can be delivered at New York at 6 cents per pound, whereas our domestic cost is about 12 cents per pound. This 6 cents profit differential in favor of foreign-produced copper plus the enormous foreign reserves indicates positively that domestic copper can not compete with the foreign product either at home or abroad. The export statistics quoted foregoing are corroborative of the foregoing statement and prove that our days are over as a world's copper competitor.

The domestic copper-mining industry must rely on a protected home market in disposing of its products, just as the protected lead, zinc, iron, and aluminum industries must do in disposing of their metal product. In so doing our copper-mining industry may expect to secure the same degree of wholesome prosperity that these industries enjoy.

Copper is one of the metals of vital necessity in caring for our industrial needs. Certainly it will be beneficial to our Nation to retain any surplus in excess of our industrial necessities; once exported it will be lost to us forever.

In consequence, it may be stated that no commercial necessity will exist necessitating our domestic producers to export copper in order to mine at a profit when an adequate tariff is made effective. That adequate profits will be available to those engaged in the domestic copper-mining industry; also place it on a fundamentally solid basis through control of its home market; likewise hold in reserve for future national necessities our former exports thereof.

Further discussing the contention that reasonable profits are not available to the domestic copper producer through solely supplying the copper necessities of our country, a metal industry, namely, the iron industry, affords instructive parallel example as to probable profits available. It will be remembered that our country produces about 60 per cent of the steel production of the world and about 50 per cent of the world's copper production. The gross value of pig iron produced in 1923 was more than five times greater than the gross value of electrolytic copper produced during that year. Our domestic steel industry is not an exporter of steel ingots, is accorded rigid tariff protection, and is one of our continuing highly prosperous metal industries. The United States Steel Corporation controls about 60 per cent of the iron production of this country and is not alone one of the richest and most powerful of our domestic corporations but also one of the greatest in the world. Its major earnings have been solely secured by supplying a portion of the iron necessities of our home areas, said iron being mined solely from domestic iron-ore deposits. The Steel Corporation is not an exporter of steel ingots. It can not compete abroad with the cheap-labor iron products from foreign areas. Nevertheless, it has enjoyed unexampled prosperity in the past and does now secure excellent earnings through solely selling its products within our home market. Likewise the employees of the Steel Corporation and the domestic communities in which it operates have enjoyed and do now enjoy exceptional prosperity. The annual gross earnings of the Steel Corporation alone about equals the total gross value of our annual domestic copper production.

If our generous citizenship is willing to reward the Steel Corporation for efficient services in the iron industry by according it a sum about equal to the gross value of our domestic copper production, it is reasonable to assume that they will grant the copper producer an equivalent proportional reward which he will be entitled to for rendering efficient service in supplying the vital copper necessities of our country. It is self-evident that through securing this proportional reward the domestic copper producer will enjoy unusual prosperity. When the domestic copper producer is prosperous it means a prosperous and contented copper miner and prosperity for all the others dependent on the copper-mining industry.

To digress for a moment, attention will be directed to a fundamental difference between the policy of the United States Steel Corporation and the crystallizing policy of the incipient International Copper Corporation. The financiers who formulated and made effective the Steel Corporation did this on the premise of securing iron for the corporation rolling mills solely within our home iron areas. The political, judicial, and therefore the brilliant industrial history of the corporation would have been vastly different had it attempted to secure steel ingots for its rolling mills from the cheap labor areas of foreign lands. Hence an international copper corporation can find no optimistic precedent applicable to their ambitious international maximum-profit attempt through securing cheap, foreign-labor copper ingots for their domestic rolling mills upon reviewing the industrial history of the Steel Corporation. It can not expect the same degree of immunity accorded the Steel Corporation which, although unusually prosperous and a virtual monopoly, nevertheless, has rendered service to our country through securing its total iron supply within our home areas and thereby aided in developing our domestic iron industry and maintaining domestic citizenship and communities.

Assume that a state of war exists and that we are dependent on South America and Africa for our supply of copper. Even though the nationals controlling this foreign copper permitted exportation thereof, it is probable that the enemy, through submarines and aerial activity, would prevent delivery of copper to our ports. If such a condition confronted us, where could we secure an ample supply of copper to care for our war necessities? We could secure some copper by requisitioning what might be termed nonurgent electrical, telephone, and industrial poundage. Whatever poundage was so seized would surely lower the war efficiency of the foregoing industries. The only efficient recourse would be to try and secure sufficient copper from our domestic copper areas, cost what it may. In striving to do this you would have hurriedly to create a personnel in lieu of our existing one embodying 80 years of experience.

You would have to manufacture new hoists, pumps, compressors, and an infinite detail of mechanical accessories; sink shafts, run underground workings, build connecting railroads, new milling plants, smelters, and refineries. Years would be required to re-create our supposedly destroyed copper industry to enable it to meet our war necessities. Hundreds of millions of dollars plus years of time would be spent in the foregoing effort to rehabilitate our copper industry. Our building of aircraft during the World War affords an instructive parallel example. It is undeniable that a continuance of our domestic copper-mining industry unimpaired and efficiently equipped will be of incalculable aid to our national defense if war should ever overwhelm us.

Our domestic copper-mining industry can only be maintained on a constant thoroughly maximum efficient national defense basis by preventing foreigners importing an unlimited poundage of copper duty free, the continuing effect of same being the certain and utter destruction of our domestic copper-mining industry. Congress has, through the medium of a protective tariff, saved the economic lives of nearly all the industrial brotherhood within our Nation. It prevented the economic life of our iron miner from being destroyed by the iron machete of cheap foreign labor areas. It prevented the economic skull of our lead miner from being crushed by lead billets wielded by foreign economic foes. Why, then, not accord equivalent justice to their brother, the copper miner, and grant him protection—save his economic life from the copper arrow of the Andes and the copper spear of the Kongo?

Each economic child of our country is entitled to equivalent care, opportunity, and protection. Equal devotion should be bestowed on each unit of our economic progeny. In protecting the copper miner you will not alone accord justice and equity but likewise comply with the economic law that has made our country the mightiest and the most contented industrial Nation in the whole recorded cycle of human activities. The miners within the copper areas of our country dependent upon the continued and uninterrupted mining of copper have wives, children, communities, and States within their keeping. They have ambitions to care for their proportionate burdens of home and national welfare—just as desirous of living self-sustaining, independent, useful, and patriotic lives as did their eastern forbears or those of their brothers engaged in all the protected subdivisions of our industrial activities.

They plead with you to heed their cry for protection of all they hold dear in life. In granting them protection you are aiding the progeny of the hardy pioneers who initiated the copper industry within our country nearly a century ago midst the hardships and dangers of Keweenaw Peninsula. You will also save the livelihood and future of the descendants of those pioneers who established and maintained the outposts that initiated and developed our western areas. In aiding these citizens you will also provide for a continuance of those agencies that have in the past brought forth into our channels of commerce inestimable values of copper and associated metals. Aiding them means an uninterrupted replenishing of our copper necessities not alone in time of peace but in war as well. In aiding them you will give stimulus and aid to create wealth within a thousand of our unexplored hills. The unfolding of treasure therein will afford livelihood, fortune, and happiness to hundreds of thousands of our citizens of the present and the generations to come.

The protection so accorded will emphasize the minute care you give to every subdivision of our industrial life, that the continuing wisdom of unfolding within the mantle of protection each and everyone thereof is deemed not only essential nationally but likewise is an equable distribution of justice. You will in the years to come realize, feel, and cherish a degree of patriotic happiness most satisfying to mind and heart that through according protection to these sons of pioneers you retained this citizenship and their progeny within our country. You will realize that you followed the path of justice and patriotism when you saved the copper-mining industry within our country and all those communities dependent thereon. You will realize that compliance with the ages-old saying, "Our first duty is to care for our own," was not only a parental legislative duty but likewise yielded undreamed of compensation to our Nation for the care and protection so bestowed.

Permit the copper miner to reenergize the dying copper industry of his homeland; do not refuse his plea for protection and thereby send him forth to foreign areas to seek a livelihood; do not condemn him and his progeny to labor in strange lands with aliens of varying types and intelligence.

Heed his cry for justice and equity! Grant him this, as you have millions of his brothers in all the other avenues that traverse our industrial life.

RECESS

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, in obedience to the agreement entered into earlier in the session to-day, I move that the Senate take a recess, the recess being until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate, pursuant to the previous order, took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, April 10, 1926, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate April 9 (legislative day of April 5), 1926

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

Aubrey Boyles, of Alabama, to be United States attorney, southern district of Alabama. A reappointment, his term having expired.

APPOINTMENTS, BY TRANSFER, IN THE REGULAR ARMY
QUARTERMASTER CORPS

Col. David Lamme Stone, Infantry, with rank from July 1, 1920.

CORPS OF ENGINEERS

Maj. Eugene Reybold, Coast Artillery Corps, with rank from July 1, 1920.

FIELD ARTILLERY

First. Lieut. Lowell Meeker Riley, Infantry, with rank as prescribed in the act of June 30, 1922.

PROMOTION IN THE REGULAR ARMY

TO BE MAJOR

Capt. Carl Halla, Finance Department, from April 2, 1926.

POSTMASTERS

ALABAMA

Henry H. Farrar to be postmaster at Blocton, Ala., in place of H. H. Farrar. Incumbent's commission expired February 15, 1926.

Frank M. Johnson to be postmaster at Haleyville, Ala., in place of F. M. Johnson. Incumbent's commission expires April 11, 1926.

George C. Adams to be postmaster at Ragland, Ala., in place of G. C. Adams. Incumbent's commission expired March 2, 1926.

ARKANSAS

Bevie I. Abbott to be postmaster at Hampton, Ark. Office became presidential July 1, 1925.

Jesse L. Russell to be postmaster at Harrison, Ark., in place of J. W. Slover, resigned.

Henry L. Thompson to be postmaster at Huntsville, Ark., in place of J. T. Harper, removed.

CALIFORNIA

Samuel N. Frost to be postmaster at Holtville, Calif., in place of S. N. Frost. Incumbent's commission expired March 22, 1926.

George M. Eaby to be postmaster at La Habra, Calif., in place of G. M. Eaby. Incumbent's commission expired February 22, 1926.

CONNECTICUT

Helen G. Miller to be postmaster at Coscob, Conn., in place of Alfred Pultz. Incumbent's commission expired December 21, 1925.

HAWAII

Frank Cox to be postmaster at Waikea, Hawaii, in place of Frank Cox. Incumbent's commission expires April 10, 1926.

Elizabeth H. Travis to be postmaster at Waipahu, Hawaii, in place of E. H. Travis. Incumbent's commission expired March 7, 1926.

ILLINOIS

Louis E. Ude to be postmaster at Carmi, Ill., in place of L. E. Ude. Incumbent's commission expires April 13, 1926.

Fred More to be postmaster at Charleston, Ill., in place of Fred More. Incumbent's commission expires April 13, 1926.

Pauline E. Carnahan to be postmaster at Hindsboro, Ill., in place of F. S. Cox. Incumbent's commission expired January 21, 1926.

Robert A. Blackmon to be postmaster at Lacon, Ill., in place of R. A. Blackmon. Incumbent's commission expires April 13, 1926.

George H. Townsend to be postmaster at Onarga, Ill., in place of G. H. Townsend. Incumbent's commission expires April 13, 1926.

Homer F. Kelly to be postmaster at Roseville, Ill., in place of H. F. Kelly. Incumbent's commission expires April 13, 1926.

Frank E. Walters to be postmaster at Seaton, Ill., in place of F. E. Walters. Incumbent's commission expired March 31, 1926.

INDIANA

Lawrence O'Connor to be postmaster at Troy, Ind., in place of Lawrence O'Connor. Incumbent's commission expired December 22, 1925.

IOWA

John L. Gallagher to be postmaster at Eddyville, Iowa, in place of J. L. Gallagher. Incumbent's commission expires April 13, 1926.

Frederick W. Steele to be postmaster at Walker, Iowa, in place of F. W. Steele. Incumbent's commission expires April 13, 1926.

KANSAS

Charles N. Shafer to be postmaster at Fredonia, Kans., in place of C. N. Shafer. Incumbent's commission expires April 11, 1926.

KENTUCKY

James H. Thompson to be postmaster at Ewing, Ky., in place of J. H. Thompson. Incumbent's commission expires April 13, 1926.

Herbert C. Hall to be postmaster at Hardinsburg, Ky., in place of H. C. Hall. Incumbent's commission expires April 16, 1926.

LOUISIANA

James R. Coplen to be postmaster at Sulphur, La., in place of Frank Granger. Incumbent's commission expired February 14, 1926.

Nathan R. Funderburk to be postmaster at Wisner, La., in place of N. R. Funderburk. Incumbent's commission expired March 2, 1926.

MAINE

Earle H. Roberts to be postmaster at Fort Kent, Me., in place of E. H. Roberts. Incumbent's commission expires April 11, 1926.

Ivory J. Bradbury to be postmaster at Hollis Center, Me., in place of I. J. Bradbury. Incumbent's commission expires April 11, 1926.

Thomas H. Phelan to be postmaster at Sabattus, Me., in place of W. F. Huen. Incumbent's commission expired October 5, 1925.

MARYLAND

August W. Clark to be postmaster at Lutherville, Md., in place of D. H. Hastings, deceased.

MASSACHUSETTS

Raymond C. Hazeltine to be postmaster at Cheimsford, Mass., in place of R. C. Hazeltine. Incumbent's commission expires April 13, 1926.

James R. Tetler to be postmaster at Lawrence, Mass., in place of J. R. Tetler. Incumbent's commission expires April 14, 1926.

Delano E. Chase to be postmaster at Linwood, Mass., in place of D. E. Chase. Incumbent's commission expires April 13, 1926.

Myron M. White to be postmaster at South Duxbury, Mass., in place of M. M. White. Incumbent's commission expires April 13, 1926.

Sara H. Jones to be postmaster at West Barnstable, Mass., in place of S. H. Jones. Incumbent's commission expires April 11, 1926.

George B. Waterman to be postmaster at Williamstown, Mass., in place of G. B. Waterman. Incumbent's commission expires April 13, 1926.

MICHIGAN

Henry M. Cosler to be postmaster at Bear Lake, Mich., in place of H. M. Cosler. Incumbent's commission expires April 14, 1926.

Benjamin F. Scamehorn to be postmaster at Bloomingdale, Mich., in place of B. F. Scamehorn. Incumbent's commission expires April 14, 1926.

Fred W. Cutler to be postmaster at Fairgrove, Mich., in place of G. B. McIntyre. Incumbent's commission expired February 10, 1926.

Jesse M. Green to be postmaster at Roscommon, Mich., in place of J. M. Green. Incumbent's commission expires April 14, 1926.

John M. Klipp to be postmaster at Watervliet, Mich., in place of J. M. Klipp. Incumbent's commission expires April 14, 1926.

MINNESOTA

Ingebright A. Hanson to be postmaster at Frost, Minn., in place of I. A. Hanson. Incumbent's commission expires April 11, 1926.

Robert L. Bresnan to be postmaster at Madison Lake, Minn., in place of R. L. Bresnan. Incumbent's commission expires April 11, 1926.

Merton E. Cain to be postmaster at Carlton, Minn., in place of M. E. Gillespie, resigned.

MISSISSIPPI

Robert W. Kyzar to be postmaster at Columbia, Miss., in place of R. B. Hathorn. Incumbent's commission expired February 28, 1926.

Henry P. Patton to be postmaster at Sardis, Miss., in place of H. P. Patton. Incumbent's commission expires April 13, 1926.

Kathleen J. Martin to be postmaster at Louisa, Miss. Office became presidential October 1, 1923.

Taylor E. Dunn to be postmaster at University, Miss., in place of J. W. Bell, Jr., removed.

MISSOURI

Mayme E. Prather to be postmaster at Advance, Mo., in place of M. E. Prather. Incumbent's commission expires April 11, 1926.

Elan J. Nienstedt to be postmaster at Blodget, Mo., in place of E. J. Nienstedt. Incumbent's commission expires April 11, 1926.

Charles T. Lease to be postmaster at Forest City, Mo., in place of C. T. Lease. Incumbent's commission expires April 11, 1926.

Robert E. Ward to be postmaster at Liberty, Mo., in place of R. E. Ward. Incumbent's commission expires April 11, 1926.

Lorenzo T. McKinney to be postmaster at Marcelline, Mo., in place of L. T. McKinney. Incumbent's commission expires April 11, 1926.

John J. Sleight to be postmaster at Montgomery City, Mo., in place of J. J. Sleight. Incumbent's commission expired March 13, 1926.

Lena B. Porter to be postmaster at Novelty, Mo., in place of L. B. Porter. Incumbent's commission expires April 11, 1926.

W. Arthur Smith to be postmaster at Purdin, Mo., in place of W. A. Smith. Incumbent's commission expires April 11, 1926.

MONTANA

Mary J. Tasa to be postmaster at Flaxville, Mont., in place of M. J. Tasa. Incumbent's commission expires April 13, 1926.

Leon E. Phillips to be postmaster at Highwood, Mont., in place of L. E. Phillips. Incumbent's commission expires April 13, 1926.

Rose M. Sargent to be postmaster at Nashua, Mont., in place of R. M. Sargent. Incumbent's commission expires April 13, 1926.

Letta Conser to be postmaster at Plevna, Mont., in place of Letta Conser. Incumbent's commission expires April 13, 1926.

Marie I. Moler to be postmaster at Reedpoint, Mont., in place of M. I. Moler. Incumbent's commission expires April 13, 1926.

Blanche E. Breckenridge to be postmaster at Grassrange, Mont., in place of G. B. Laird, removed.

NEBRASKA

Fred H. Herrlein to be postmaster at Deshler, Nebr., in place of F. H. Herrlein. Incumbent's commission expires April 14, 1926.

Herbert H. Ottens to be postmaster at Dunbar, Nebr., in place of F. C. Easley. Incumbent's commission expired January 23, 1926.

John T. Bierbower to be postmaster at Giltner, Nebr., in place of J. T. Bierbower. Incumbent's commission expires April 14, 1926.

Allen A. Strong to be postmaster at Gordon, Nebr., in place of A. A. Strong. Incumbent's commission expires April 14, 1926.

Harold Hjelmfelt to be postmaster at Holdrege, Nebr., in place of Harold Hjelmfelt. Incumbent's commission expires April 14, 1926.

Henry E. Schemmel to be postmaster at Hooper, Nebr., in place of H. E. Schemmel. Incumbent's commission expired February 6, 1926.

Howard L. Sergeant to be postmaster at Juniata, Nebr., in place of H. L. Sergeant. Incumbent's commission expired January 23, 1926.

NEVADA

George H. Reinmund to be postmaster at Ruth, Nev., in place of H. M. Willis, removed.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Archie W. Johnson to be postmaster at Bartlett, N. H., in place of C. H. George. Incumbent's commission expired December 21, 1925.

NEW YORK

Henry Leonhardt to be postmaster at Alexandria Bay, N. Y., in place of W. H. Marshall. Incumbent's commission expired February 16, 1926.

C. Homer Hook to be postmaster at Greenville, N. Y., in place of C. H. Hook. Incumbent's commission expires April 13, 1926.

John B. Read to be postmaster at Poland, N. Y., in place of J. B. Read. Incumbent's commission expires April 13, 1926.

Earl B. Templer to be postmaster at Valley Falls, N. Y., in place of E. B. Templer. Incumbent's commission expires April 11, 1926.

NORTH CAROLINA

John W. Chapin to be postmaster at Aurora, N. C., in place of J. W. Chapin. Incumbent's commission expired February 10, 1926.

Luadan V. Rhyne to be postmaster at Dallas, N. C., in place of W. C. Hoffman. Incumbent's commission expired November 9, 1925.

George T. Whitaker to be postmaster at Franklinton, N. C., in place of G. T. Whitaker. Incumbent's commission expired February 3, 1926.

Charles R. Grant to be postmaster at Mebane, N. C., in place of C. R. Grant. Incumbent's commission expires April 11, 1926.

James L. Sheek to be postmaster at Mocksville, N. C., in place of J. L. Sheek. Incumbent's commission expires April 14, 1926.

William B. Hemphill to be postmaster at Biltmore, N. C., in place of L. D. Maney, resigned.

NORTH DAKOTA

Victoria Quesnel to be postmaster at Bathgate, N. Dak., in place of Victoria Quesnel. Incumbent's commission expires April 11, 1926.

James W. Pratten to be postmaster at Milton, N. Dak., in place of J. W. Pratten. Incumbent's commission expires April 11, 1926.

OHIO

Faye W. Helmick to be postmaster at Baltimore, Ohio, in place of F. W. Helmick. Incumbent's commission expired October 20, 1925.

Helen M. Roley to be postmaster at Basil, Ohio, in place of H. M. Roley. Incumbent's commission expired February 17, 1926.

Louis A. Conklin to be postmaster at Forest, Ohio, in place of L. A. Conklin. Incumbent's commission expired March 23, 1926.

Mae E. Douds to be postmaster at Hudson, Ohio, in place of M. E. Douds. Incumbent's commission expired December 19, 1925.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, April 9, 1926

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name, Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation but deliver us from evil for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory for ever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RADIO SPEECH OF MR. TINCHE

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech delivered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHE] over the radio a few days ago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech delivered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHE]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I insert a speech made over the radio by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHE], which is as follows:

At this stage of the Congress preceding an election, in the past it has always been possible to know the issues upon which the campaign for the election of a new Congress would be made. I am frank to say to you that no such issues are drawn for the fall campaigns; so of necessity a Republican speaker to-night must indulge in what under ordinary circumstances would be termed bragging or boasting of the things the Republican Party has stood for and accomplished.

True, the elections will be held, but what are the issues? Our Democratic friends have two organizations—one the national committee and the other the national congressional committee. The head of the national congressional committee has said that the issue will be the tariff, but it will not. About half of the Democratic Members of Congress this past winter have declared for a protective tariff. True, our friend, Mr. OLDFIELD, the Democratic spokesman for the Democratic congressional committee and its chairman, says the tariff should be revised downward, but he has furnished no schedule, and every speech he has made on this subject has disclosed that there will be no serious contention over the tariff in the next campaign. In fact, the only document the Republican Party would need, if the tariff were to be made an issue, would be a reprint of Mr. OLDFIELD's predictions at the time the present law was enacted. It will be remembered that at that time conditions were not good. Labor was unemployed; industry and commerce were at their lowest ebb.

The predictions made by Mr. OLDFIELD at that time were that, instead of 4,000,000 idle men, we would have 8,000,000 if we passed the tariff law, that we would destroy commerce, and that the tariff law would not raise any revenue, and would not open our mills. On each and every prediction it has been proven that he was wrong; so I say that if the tariff were made an issue, Mr. OLDFIELD's, and his Democratic colleagues' predictions at the time the law was passed, would make our Democratic friends look so ridiculous as compared with the facts that the issue would be a joke.

Clem Shaver has recently spoken. He is the chairman of the Democratic National Committee, and, naturally, we would look to him as the man that would have the last word in outlining the issues by which the "outs" would tackle the "ins" for possession of the reins of government in the coming election. He says the issues will be: "Presidential intimidation and coercion"; second, the record of the Department of Justice, with reference to a law suit, to wit: the Aluminum Co.; and third, "the wisdom of the Democrats of the Congress" in forcing sixty millions more of tax-reduction than Mr. Coolidge favored.

These arguments may constitute the issues. However, there is some dissension in the Democratic ranks on this subject. The World-Herald of Omaha, owned by former Senator Hitchcock, I am informed, commenting editorially on March 30, concerning Mr. Shaver's platform, as I have just outlined, says:

"Is it merely Mr. Shaver's astute idea that the Democratic Party shall pussy foot to a victory, negative and undeserved, on the high crimes and misdemeanors of its opponents?"

Continuing, the World-Herald further says:

"The Democratic Party used to stand for something. It used to have ideas, however wild and woolly. It used to have high courage and unselfish devotion. It used to fight to preserve this as a democratic Republic and against its conversion into a plutocratic Republic. And in those days the Democratic Party, whether adorned with the laurels of victory or the willows of defeat, was a positive and wholesome influence in the land. Its members believed in it, were proud of it, and exerted themselves to rear their sons in its faith."

Concluding, the World-Herald says:

"We do not find, we are frank and grieved to say, much that is reminiscent of that Democratic Party in the campaign suggestions so cautiously put forward by Chairman Clem Shaver. And we doubt if Grover Cleveland or William J. Bryan or Woodrow Wilson would have, either."

Coming, as this does, from perhaps the greatest Democratic newspaper of the West, I am sure this radio audience will agree with me that there is not at present much more harmony in the Democratic Party to-day than there was at the time of the adjournment of the convention or unpleasantness in New York in the summer of 1924. However, let us see if there is anything to the issues put forth by Mr. Shaver, for he is the chosen leader.

First, "presidential intimidation and coercion"—a new rôle for President Coolidge, so far as the public is concerned. There is just about as much danger of the American people convicting Calvin Coolidge of being an intimidator and coercer as there is of the American people convicting him of being a reckless spendthrift. He was chosen by the voters as the head of the executive branch of our Government. The people are not going to rise in holy indignation over the fact that he may have told some board or commission what he thought they ought to do. The people elected Coolidge. He appoints the boards and commissions.

Second, with reference to the aluminum controversy; aluminum is mighty cheap. In fact, you can buy an aluminum pan now about as cheap as we used to buy tin before, under a protective system, we manufactured it in America. I imagine that Attorney General Sargent will take care of the Department of Justice in a way that is satisfactory to the people of this country.

The third "issue" is "the wisdom of the Democrats of the Congress" in forcing sixty millions more of tax reduction than Mr. Coolidge favored. I would say this would be a fine issue. In the Sixty-eighth Congress our Democratic friends caucused and fought the tax reduction bill and made it an issue in the fall elections of 1924. We who were running on the Republican ticket and who had supported the so-called Mellon plan as against the Democratic caucus plan were criticized for having voted to reduce the surtaxes to take the tax off the rich. Our Democratic friends in that campaign attempted to make an economic question a political one. Having failed, they come back to the Sixty-ninth Congress and do actually go along on a tax-reduction plan, wherein the Congress goes further than the Treasury Department recommended. We reduced the surtax, instead of to 25 per cent to 20 per cent, and other taxes accordingly. Secretary Mellon is cautious. He takes no chances on a deficiency. Personally I learned in the Sixty-seventh Congress that if he made any mistakes on estimates, those mistakes would not cause a deficiency. He is trying to run the Government in the way that the very best business men run their own business. But let us see how they get a political issue out of this. Can our Democratic friends say, "You should give us the Congress because between the election of 1924 and this election we have changed our position so completely that we have gone even beyond the recommendations of Secretary Mellon, whom we condemned so vigorously in that campaign for recommending the reduction of the surtax to 25 per cent"? Can they be heard to say that "as a premium for our inconsistency you must give us the control of the American Congress"?

Am against this chaos in the Democratic ranks, the members of the Republican Party still believe in it. We are proud of it. We are proud of its leaders, proud of its past, and are still rearing our sons in its faith.

The facts are that what the Republican Party was in the beginning it is to-day, in principle, leadership, and policy. Remember, it has never announced a principle for which it does not now stand. It has never declared a policy which it does not to-day support. In the beginning the party responded to the inspiring leadership of the man of the common people of Illinois, Lincoln. To-day we marshal under the safe leadership of a son of a Vermont farmer, who possesses in full measure the sturdy virtues which characterized the first Republican President.

In June, 1924, we entered into a written agreement with the people in the form of a platform adopted at Cleveland. Very soon the first session of Congress convened to carry out that written agreement which was ratified at the November, 1924, election by the people, will adjourn. We invite an examination of that agreement, and make the prophecy that when in the very near future we do adjourn, we will at that time have carried out the terms of the agreement. The fruits of Republicanism are reflected in the progress, prosperity, and strength of the Nation.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bill and joint resolutions of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

S. 3108. An act to amend section 2 of the act of June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. L. p. 653), as amended by the act of March 3, 1925 (43 Stat. L. p. 1127), entitled "An act to provide for the protection of forest lands, for the reforestation of denuded areas, for the extension of national forests, and for other purposes, in order to promote the continuous production of timber on lands chiefly suitable therefor";

S. J. Res. 78. Joint resolution for the amendment of the plant quarantine act of August 20, 1912, to allow the States to quarantine against the shipment therein or through of plants, plant products, and other articles found to be diseased or infested when not covered by a quarantine established by the Secretary of Agriculture, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 37. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with Territories and other possessions of the United States under the provisions of sections 3, 4, and 5 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the protection of forest lands, for the reforestation of denuded areas, for the extension of national forests, and for other purposes, in order to promote the continuous production of timber on lands chiefly suitable therefor."

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 186. An act authorizing the payment of tuition of Crow Indian children attending Montana State public schools;

H. R. 185. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to acquire land and erect a monument on the site of the battle with the Sioux Indians in which the commands of Major Reno and Major Benteen were engaged;

H. R. 200. An act to amend section 99 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, and the amendment to said act approved July 17, 1916 (39 Stat. L. ch. 248);

H. R. 1827. An act for the relief of Frank Rector;

H. R. 3921. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to enter into an agreement with the Clarendon Community Sewerage Co., granting it a right of way for a trunk-line sewer through the Fort Myer Military Reservation and across the military highways in Arlington County, Va., and to connect with the sewer line serving such reservation;

H. R. 8129. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to cooperate with the States of Idaho, Montana, Oregon, and Washington in allocation of the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries, and for other purposes, and authorizing an appropriation therefor;

H. R. 8184. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to purchase certain land in California to be added to the Calumilla Indian Reservation, and authorizing an appropriation of funds therefor;

H. R. 9455. An act to dedicate as a public thoroughfare a narrow strip of land owned by the United States in Bardstown, Ky.;

PENSIONS

Mr. FULLER, chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, by direction of that committee, reported bill S. 1609 (Rept. 797), an act to increase the pensions of those who have lost limbs or have been totally disabled in the same, or have become totally blind in the military or naval service of the United States, which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

RIVERS AND HARBORS

Mr. SOSNOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I, with others of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, may have until to-morrow night at 12 o'clock to file minority views on the river and harbor bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to file minority views on the river and harbor bill at any time before to-morrow night at 12 o'clock. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

JEFFERSONIAN DEMOCRACY

Mr. HAWES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on Jefferson and local self-government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. Speaker, the world is in constant change. Men and women change, plant life changes; even the type of horses, cattle, and poultry changes.

This is true of art, of literature, of science. And yet through all human, animal, or plant existence there is a sameness—a fundamental which does not change.

Always the unalterable, the big thing, the primary thing, is fixed by a rule or conviction which carries it on, with new clothes or new words or new forms; but, under many variations, it remains the same.

There are no new forms of government to-day or new theories of government. The republic is not new; the monarchy, the despotism, the democracy, the oligarchy, even the soviet, had all been tried under various names long before Columbus discovered America.

It is a fascinating study, the rise and fall of governments, the experiments and failures, the rise to points of perfection and the fall that comes with decay.

We will always have those who are leaners, those who want something done for them by some one else; who distrust their own strength; who seek guidance from another and are only content when they find a strong arm to support them.

We have those who are restless unless they stand alone without aid or support; those who want to carry their own full load and maintain their own full share in the affairs of men; they want to share in government, to be a part of it, to carry their load, and take their share in both work and responsibility.

In the history of our country first came men and women of the pioneer type, who either sought freedom or brought it with them. They came from various nations, had different forms of religion, were from various walks of life, and foreign custom had produced in them different methods of approaching the same object.

Some were cavaliers, with horse and gun and fine traditions; some were debentured servants filling a period of penal servitude; some came because they could not in their own land follow their religious convictions without molestation; some came for wealth, some for freedom, some for power.

And so when they met to write the new American Constitution there was conflict of opinion, but necessity forced compromise and final agreement.

General Washington, who had successfully led their armies, was made first President by the united voices of all. Adams followed, and then again the thoughts of men divided.

Parties grew into political organizations with contending theories.

The fundamental things, the foundation theories, at various periods were frequently lost in some grave crisis of the day, or because of unusual economic conditions, or because of war, or the rise, for a period, of an opportunist who set aside the fundamental for an achievement of the hour.

War always forces a concentration of governmental effort, a consolidation of power and resources. It has always temporarily taken from the States certain control, and has placed it in the hands of a few.

After each war these powers have been returned slowly and only after pressure, and have never been distributed back to the original basis without a struggle.

Most of the concentration of power originally grew up during a war or immediately after a war, when men's minds were diverted from the fundamentals by the emergency of the hour and when expediency ruled at the expense of principle.

But through all the periods of our history there have been clear lines of demarcation and in times of peace easily recognized.

At the very outset two schools of political thought became emphasized respectively under the leadership of two men, and throughout our national existence they will always be known as the Hamiltonian and Jeffersonian theories of governmental administration.

These divergent opinions were not originated by these men; they were not new inventions. Neither leader discovered a new theory; but they became the early outstanding champions of two theories which have conflicted in the thoughts and convictions of men since the first records of tribal government.

The Hamilton theory first appeared in the assertion of the inherited right of the chief and was combated by the claim of the tribesmen to the right to elect the chief.

Then came the assertion of the divine right of the king, which was combated by the right of suffrage to select the ruler.

One theory was that the supreme power of government came from above; the other that it came from the bottom, from the foundation, from the mass, from the people, where supreme power was found.

From these grew the conflict of a central power placed in the hands of a few, combated by those who advocated a diversified power placed in the hands of the many, and answering first to local sentiment and local opinion, and yielding to central power only when it clearly became a thing which local power could not control.

We call the two forms to-day "centralized power" and "local self-government."

JEFFERSON AND HAMILTON

The gripping story of Jefferson and Hamilton is told by our great historian, Claude Bowers, in his book, "Jefferson and Hamilton." He has painted the portrait of that day. I wish everyone could read his masterful and comprehensive history of this period.

These two men were contrasts in appearance, in philosophy, in method, in attainment.

Hamilton, born in poverty, of obscure parentage, advocated an aristocracy.

Jefferson, born in affluence, of distinguished parentage, fought for a democracy.

One advocated class and the things he did not possess in youth; the other had the very things which Hamilton sought, but he opposed the class rule of aristocracy.

A strange beginning, a sharp contrast in early environment, produced exactly divergent results. The poor boy became the leader of the movement for aristocracy; the boy of affluence, the leader of the masses.

They were both great men and each served his country honestly, industriously, and patriotically.

Hamilton was concerned with finances; Jefferson with men, liberty, and individual independence.

The Hamiltonians proposed that our President should be elected for life; that governors of States should be appointed by the President; that Senators should be elected for life.

Jefferson opposed such theories because he saw in them the dangers of class oppression.

Both of these great leaders respected property rights, and the rights of property were safe in the hands of either.

Hamilton, born in the West Indies, in youth was denied the luxury that comes with wealth, and had early fixed in his mind the propriety of rule by the exalted few. He believed in the aristocracy of wealth.

Jefferson, surrounded during his early life by men of substance—property owners and men of financial stability—had the other viewpoint. To him property and invested capital was just as sacred as it was to Hamilton, but he did not put it upon a pedestal that obscured his vision of a broader, more liberal government; that took into consideration the lives and the necessities of the average man.

Jefferson won each contest from Hamilton. The privileged few—the special interests—went down in defeat before the Jeffersonian doctrine of equality under the law, special privilege to none, and equal opportunity for all.

There came a period when the followers of Hamilton again rallied and sought to put special privilege in control of our National Government, but from the Middle West arose a new national figure.

He came from the banks of the Mississippi River. Of indomitable will and iron courage, Andrew Jackson again defeated the forces of special privilege. It was he who took to the eastern seacoast the political philosophy of the Central West.

"Old Hickory" dealt mighty blows in his day, each intended to help preserve and perpetuate the philosophy of Jefferson—that the Government be left in the hands of the people.

Distracted for a while by the tragedy of the Civil War men's minds were diverted from the fundamental struggle between those who believed in the rule of the majority and those who believed in the rule of the appointed few.

After the war special interests fastened upon the people the burden of the tariff tax, and it has remained ever since a burden, beneficial to special manufacturers of the East and combated since the earliest days of the great Central West.

Before discussion of the present-day renewal of the struggles between centralization and decentralization it is well to know something of the man Jefferson.

JEFFERSON

He was born in Virginia 183 years ago. His birthday is April 13.

He served the public for 35 years. He was learned in the law, as was disclosed by the reform code he prepared for Virginia, by his diplomatic correspondence with France, and by his dispatches as Secretary of State.

Tall, of courteous bearing, amiable but persistent, he was a practical philosopher, translating his philosophy into law.

His hobby was agriculture. He introduced rice and cotton, and imported the best breeds of horses, cattle, sheep, and swine. He scoured the world in search of cereals and agricultural products that might be transplanted and utilized in America. He studied and experimented with the things that grow that his beloved United States might compete in agriculture with the nations of the earth.

He kept accurate account of his experiments, not for his personal profit, because he gave to all without cost the benefit of his experience and advice.

He it was who visualized the farms and ranches of the Mississippi Valley which now feed the Nation.

As a member of the Virginia State Legislature, as a Member of Congress, as ambassador to France, as Secretary of State, as President of the United States, he brought to the solution of each problem a trained and philosophic mind.

He resigned from Congress to become a member of the Virginia Legislature.

It has been said that the Code Napoleon was drafted to insure order; the code of Thomas Jefferson was drawn not only to secure order but to insure liberty.

By legislative enactment he abolished estates held in fee tail. Prior to this enactment not an acre or a slave could be alienated to pay the debt which might hang like a millstone about the neck of an incompetent and extravagant proprietor.

He abolished the law of primogeniture, which devised the entire property to the eldest son, leaving the mother and sisters dependent upon this son's bounty, and leaving the younger brothers to be pensioners or adventurers.

He forced the passage of a bill to enable tenants entail to convey their lands in fee simple. This was a final and effective blow to "land" aristocracy.

He separated church from State and gave to America and, incidentally, to the world, the new written doctrine of religious freedom.

He proclaimed—

that all men shall be free to profess, and by argument to maintain, their opinions in matters of religion, and that the same shall in no wise enlarge or affect their civil capacities.

To-day, when a man goes in peace to the house of God, or stays away or contributes to its support or fails to contribute and worships in his own manner and upon the day he chooses and under the guidance of men selected by him, he should know that the first clear and distinct declaration upon this subject was made by Jefferson.

This principle has been repeated in the constitutions of practically all of our 48 States.

He it was who first saw that a democracy could only survive if its people were intelligent, well-informed, and virtuous, and that ignorance was not only the greatest foe of virtue but the greatest foe of liberty.

In presenting his bill for the establishment of free educational institutions he pointed the way for the great public-school system of this country. Love of country and patriotism follow education, and these after all create the foundation upon which successful government rests.

In his bill for diffusion of knowledge in 1779 he said:

It is generally true that people will be happiest where laws are best administered, and that laws will be wisely formed and honestly administered in proportion as those who form and administer them are wise and honest.

Whence it becomes expedient for promoting public happiness that those persons whom nature hath endowed with genius and virtue should be rendered by liberal education worthy to receive and able to guard the sacred deposit of the rights and liberties of their fellow citizens.

And that they should be called to that charge without regard to wealth, birth, or other accidental circumstances.

But the indigence of the greater number disabling them from so educating at their own expense those of their children whom nature hath fitly formed and disposed to become useful instruments for the public, it is better that such should be sought for and educated at the common expense of all than that the happiness of all should be confined to the weak or wicked.

His appeal was irresistible because it reached both the reason and conscience of men. His was ever the philosophy of freedom.

He said:

All men are created equal. Equal in the sight of God, they must be equal before the courts of men.

Speech should be free; education free; a free ballot; a free press; a free conscience; a free church; and, above all, men must be free.

He struck down special privilege, tyranny, and despotism wherever it appeared.

He was the first to advocate modern methods of punishment of crime on a sound and humane basis.

He signed the resolution of the Virginia Legislature transferring all the western territory belonging to that State to the Government of the United States.

This northwest territory is now the heart of the Union.

He was the great American continental expansionist. When he became President the western boundary of the United States was the Mississippi River. We touched the Gulf of Mexico at no point. When he left the Presidency the United States extended to the Rockies, the mouth of the Mississippi River was ours, Lewis and Clark had penetrated the wilderness to the Pacific coast, and Americans were placing their fur posts on the Columbia River.

As our territory extended it carried with it an expansion of the philosophy of Jefferson, and the new States wrote his theories into their constitutions.

His fight for a liberal educational system was undertaken by all of these States. His was the inspiration that brought it about. A free popular education, one of the tenets of his political creed, found its place in legislative enactment wherever the gospel of "the aristocracy of intellect" found its way.

He demanded freedom for not only the white man but for the negro. He wrote a condemnation of slavery in the original draft of the Declaration of Independence, which, however, was removed before final adoption.

He prepared an amendment for the emancipation of all slaves born in the State of Virginia, which provided for their education in farming and mechanical arts and subsequent colonization in some suitable place where they could be supplied with tools and implements of agriculture.

He deplored the evil effects of slavery on the manners and morals of his community.

He introduced a bill in Congress excluding slavery from the whole territory of the United States between the Alleghenies and the Mississippi, south as well as north of the Ohio.

He made the first move to prevent the extension of slavery in the territory of the Louisiana Purchase. It was the first movement to stop slavery west of the Mississippi. His plan for the government of the western territory provided, among other things, that slavery should cease to exist in the year 1800.

The free-schools system now being enjoyed by citizens of negro blood will some day, through its enlightening processes, cause them to exercise their freedom of political thought by voting for men because of their qualifications and by voting for parties because of their principles.

JEFFERSONIAN PHILOSOPHY

Jefferson condensed his theory of government into brief limit; in fact, it was carried in but several long paragraphs. For convenience, I shall state it in shorter sentences:

Equal and exact justice to all men, of whatever state or persuasion, religious or political.

Peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations; entangling alliances with none.

Support of State governments in all their rights as the most competent administration for our domestic concerns and the bulwark against antirepublican tendencies.

The preservation of the General Government in its whole constitutional vigor as the sheet anchor to our peace at home and safety abroad.

Absolute acquiescence in the decisions of the majority, the vital principle of republics from which there is no appeal but to force, the vital principle and immediate parent of despotism.

A well-disciplined militia our best reliance in peace and for the first moments of war till regulars may relieve them.

The supremacy of the civil over the military authority.

Economy in the public expense that labor may be lightly burdened.

The honest payment of our debts and sacred preservation of the public faith.

Encouragement of agriculture and of commerce, its handmaiden.

The diffusion of information and the arraignment of all abuses at the bar of public reason.

Freedom of religion; freedom of the press; freedom of person under the protection of the habeas corpus; and trial by juries impartially selected.

These principles formed the bright constellation which has gone before us and guided our steps through a large revolution and reformation. The wisdom of sages and the blood of our heroes have been devoted to their attainment.

They should be the creed of our political faith, the text of civil instruction, the touchstone by which to try the services of those we trust.

And should we wander from them in moments of error or alarm, let us hasten to retrace our steps and to regain the road which alone leads to peace, liberty, and safety.

This is the political philosophy of the Democratic Party.

When we wander from this philosophy, seeking false theories and new issues, we usually break down some great fundamental and with it hundreds of precedents, usually leading to centralization which leads to monarchy.

Jefferson thoroughly understood the extent and limitations of the Federal power.

He was a strong advocate of the improvements of our rivers by the National Government.

He advocated the expenditure of Federal funds in the building of roads, canals, and in the improvement of our rivers. These he considered to be within the proper functions of Federal authority. On these were carried the mail and they brought into contact the citizens of various States. They were essentially national enterprises.

Much of the philosophy of Jefferson may be found in our Declaration of Independence. This carried the inspiration of a bugle call. It purified the atmosphere. It put an end to hesitation. It is the Bible of American democracy. It proclaimed the inalienable rights of all to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

He was absent in France when the Federal Constitution was written, but he approved it; and it is not true that he opposed a strong Constitution.

He was one of those, however, who demanded that it should be improved by the addition of the first ten amendments, called the American Bill of Rights.

It was contended by Hamilton that these additions were unnecessary.

The great advocate of centralized power was mistaken, as later developments showed. They have, more than any other portions of the Constitution, preserved the just rights of property and the sacred rights of liberty.

It was the political school of Jefferson which demanded that they should be placed in the written law. They form part of the Jeffersonian philosophy and are an essential part of the creed of Democracy:

- (1) Religious liberty.
 - (2) Freedom of speech.
 - (3) Freedom of the press.
 - (4) The right of peaceful assembly.
 - (5) The right of petition for redress of grievances.
 - (6) The right of State militia to bear arms.
 - (7) No soldier shall be quartered in time of peace in a house without consent of the owner.
 - (8) No unreasonable search and seizure.
 - (9) No arrest except upon probable cause, (10) supported by oath or affirmation (11) describing the place, (12) and the person or things to be seized.
 - (13) Capital offenses must be found by a grand-jury indictment.
 - (14) No person shall for the same offense be twice put in jeopardy, or (15) compelled to testify against himself, (16) nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.
 - (17) No private property taken for public use without just compensation.
 - (18) In criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy a speedy (19) and public trial (20) by an impartial jury (21) in the district wherein the crime is committed; (22) to be informed of the nature of the accusation; (23) to be confronted by witnesses; (24) to have compulsory service for obtaining witnesses (25) and the assistance of counsel for his defense; (26) the right of trial by jury where the sum exceeds $20.
 - (27) Excessive bail shall not be required (28) nor excessive fines imposed (29) nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted.
- History constantly repeats itself. Fundamentals enter into view in different form, led by different men; but the great causes are the same, the motives that actuate men are the same.
- He fought and protested against the alien and sedition acts as violative of the freedom of the press and freedom of speech.
- His Kentucky resolutions were not for disunion but decentralization.
- His fight against the judiciary in his day was not in opposition to its constitutional power but in opposition to tyranny and the usurpation of power.

He opposed the sedition acts, where, as an author describes it—

Men were indicted, fined, and imprisoned for such criticism of the Executive as nowadays would be thought tame and comical; for saying that Adams was hardly in the infancy of political blunder or for expressing the pious wish, as a New Jersey Democrat did, that the wadding of a cannon fired in honor of John Adams might lodge in the seat of his breeches.

In our day, in the year 1926, the advance of the monarchist and the encroachment of centralized power is even greater than in the day of Jefferson.

We find, as I stated in a recent speech in Congress, that these modern king worshippers, these disciples of monarchy, following the old Hamiltonian theory of rule by the few, these leaners on government, are proposing national laws, all leading toward centralization.

They want one power to think for them, educate them, pray for them, marry them, divorce them, take care of their children, support them in old age, and then bury them.

They want to standardize men, women, and children, just as we standardize our domestic animals and poultry.

They oppose individual selection and individual initiative with "bloc control" and "bloc dictation."

They do not understand local government for local affairs, general government for general affairs.

When the State treasury is low or the local purse depleted, they run to the National Treasury for relief.

What the State requires they want the Nation to give. They have no scruples in asking aid from the taxpayers in other States while refusing to support additional tax burdens in their own State. They are willing to take, but unwilling to give.

The Jeffersonian philosophy denied the right of the majority to destroy the minority, but these leaners on central power have no regard for the rights of the minority.

They would destroy without consideration the rights of all those with whom they are in disagreement.

The Hamiltonian theory of centralization of power is assuming its modern phase in the creation of Federal bureaus and giving to the chiefs of these bureaus the power to write regulations, which as a matter of fact become laws.

Centralization constantly brings into existence new boards or bureaus, which are given discretionary power to make their own rules and regulations regarding business of all kinds.

These regulations and rules are not the product of the minds of Congress and the President, but are usually written and prepared by some department head.

Centralization is destroying individualism. It is preparing the way for a race of weaklings and mollycoddles. It is the inevitable result of the Hamiltonian theory.

The natural growth of the machinery of the Central Government is enormous. This is true, irrespective of the constantly developing bureaucratic system. The increasing additions to Federal power and to Federal Government machinery go on without noise, without publicity; the advance is insidious.

Jefferson would never admit that national officials were more efficient than State officials or that they were more honest or capable.

We must have more of the Jeffersonian simplicity; more of economy in government; less bureaucracy; less duplication of State laws by national laws; less of the impertinent interference in the privacy of homes and the control of domestic affairs by law.

The century-old battle still goes on. The form is changed, but the issue is the same.

In true Jeffersonian democracy there is civilization; there is progress; there is liberty; there is the undisputed right to pursue happiness.

Forces are at work to change the form of our Government; to change its spirit.

The broad lines of the fight to-day are the same as they were in the days of Jefferson. The political issues are the same now as they were then.

The followers of Hamilton and monarchy and the followers of Jefferson and democracy will always be pitted against each other in the political arena.

And what does the philosophy of Jefferson give? The fullest individual freedom consistent with the requirements of society. Equality under the law, and before the law equal and exact justice. Special privileges to none; equal opportunity to all. Faith in local institutions and government; the integrity of the home; local law resting upon local approval for the control of the intimate things of life. The undisturbed pursuit of happiness unless that pursuit interferes with or curtails the happiness of others.

The battles between Jefferson and Hamilton were the battles of giants.

The triumph of Jeffersonian principles preserved a Republic of equality.

His Declaration of Independence was an arraignment of monarchy and everything pertaining to monarchy.

His separation of church and State, establishment of schools, his statute of religious liberty, abolishment of primogeniture and entail were each deadly thrusts at the principle of monarchy.

Just 25 years ago I stood on the front porch of Jefferson's home at Monticello. I was surrounded by Jeffersonian pilgrims who had traveled 900 miles from Missouri to visit this shrine.

I made a statement as a young man. I repeat it now without change as one who has crossed the divide to middle life:

We would have every citizen to read and understand his immortal work, the Declaration of Independence.

We would have the people know that some of its simple lines contain the wisdom of the ages.

We would have them know that when the spirit which dictated those lines, and the spirit which threw off the tyrannical yoke of the Old World, is dead, then, too, will die this Republic.

We would have them view political questions as Thomas Jefferson did.

We would have them know that conditions change, but principles never change; that the great party of Jefferson is not, nor ever will be, dependent for its existence upon a condition, but that the principles upon which it rests are like the rocks of this mountain—eternal and everlasting.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday, April 20, after the disposition of formal business, the House may resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of conservation and reforestation, that matter having been referred to the minority and majority leaders who are willing that it should be done.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not quite understand the request. That was not the request the Chair understood the gentleman to make. The gentleman is asking that the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DAVEY. Well, I am not particular about that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not entertain that request.

Mr. DAVEY. Then I ask that the House, after the disposition of formal matters, consider the question of conservation and reforestation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that on Tuesday, April 20, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, the House may consider the subject of conservation and reforestation. Is there objection?

Mr. TILSON. It is simply for discussion?

Mr. DAVEY. Simply for discussion.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman should include in his request that it shall not interfere with conference reports.

Mr. DAVEY. I will include that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is this to be general debate?

Mr. DAVEY. It is simply a discussion of conservation and reforestation.

Mr. RANKIN. For how much time?

Mr. DAVEY. As long as the House wants to discuss it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. For the whole afternoon?

Mr. DAVEY. As long as the House wishes to discuss the matter.

Mr. EDWARDS. How is the time to be controlled?

Mr. DAVEY. I was going to ask that the time be equally divided, one half to be controlled by myself and the other by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF].

Mr. EDWARDS. But both gentlemen are for reforestation.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Does the gentleman know anybody that is opposed to it?

Mr. RANKIN. If you are going to unload on the Government a lot of cut-over land owned by timber barons on which the States will lose the taxes, I shall be glad to control the time for opposition.

Mr. DAVEY. I think there will be no trouble in the gentleman's getting what time he wants.

Mr. JONES. I am perfectly willing that discussion shall be had, but I do not believe that it should be in the control of anybody. Why not have it open without any control?

Mr. DAVEY. Some one will have to control it.

Mr. WOODRUFF. It will be necessary for some one to control the time.

Mr. JONES. Is there any particular measure upon which this discussion is to be had?

Mr. DAVEY. It is the general subject of conservation and reforestation, and that will be the second day of the week which has been proclaimed by the President as forest week.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Is there any bill relating to that before the House?

Mr. DAVEY. There is no bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DAVEY] or the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] or any other Member asking unanimous consent for time to discuss the proposition.

But it seems to me that it is not necessary to take the whole day for that purpose, unless there are other Members who desire time. If the gentleman will limit his request to a couple of hours, or something like that, I shall not object.

Mr. DAVEY. Can not the time be limited by those who desire to talk?

Mr. RANKIN. I have heard from only two who are clamoring to talk.

Mr. DAVEY. The gentleman from Mississippi might like to discuss it.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the Committee on Roads has been undertaking for the past two weeks to get time for the consideration of the bill providing for national aid to roads, and we have a resolution pending before the Committee on Rules now.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I can inform the gentleman that they will have an opportunity to consider the road proposition in a few days; probably by the middle of next week.

Mr. ALMON. I would not want this to interfere with that.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand it the program now is about next Thursday.

Mr. TILSON. We hope that that bill will be reached by next Thursday.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I am going to object, unless the gentleman from Ohio will limit his request to two hours and a half or three hours.

Mr. DAVEY. I would hate to have the time limited in that way.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman can either do that or I shall object.

Mr. DAVEY. Nobody knows how many wish to talk yet.

Mr. RANKIN. I know that the gentleman from Ohio wants to talk, but he surely does not want to talk for three hours.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard to the request of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman be willing to limit that to three hours?

Mr. RANKIN. I just explained to the gentleman that I would not object if he would limit it to three hours.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Speaker, I accept that modification.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that on Tuesday, April 20, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of formal matters on the Speaker's desk, and such conference reports as may reach the House, it shall be in order to discuss the subject of conservation and reforestation for not to exceed three hours. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVEY. Mr. Speaker, the time is to be equally divided? The SPEAKER. The Chair has heard no request to that effect.

Mr. DAVEY. I make that request, that the time be divided equally between the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] and myself.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman further asks unanimous consent that the time for three hours be divided equally between the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] and himself. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems to me, if this is going to be a general proposition, the time should be divided equally between the leader of the minority and the leader of the majority instead of two individual Members of the House. This is to be a general field day, as I understand it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It is conservation week, I understand.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I have no objection to that arrangement.

Mr. DAVEY. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio further modifies his request that the time be equally divided between the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know which end I am going to control.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman could take his choice.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am very much of a conservationist.

Mr. TILSON. So am I.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GARRETT-WADSWORTH CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record upon the subject of the Garrett-Wadsworth constitutional amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on the subject of the Garrett-Wadsworth constitutional amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, under leave given to extend my remarks on the Garrett-Wadsworth amendment to the Constitution (H. J. Res. 15), I desire to reproduce in brief the substance of my statement made at a hearing before the Committee on the Judiciary on March 1, 1926.

By request of the organizations at the instance of which the hearing was held, I spoke for a few minutes before the committee. In doing so I avoided as far as possible repeating the arguments against the amendment which I have heretofore made in the House, and sought to take up the least possible time, as the organizations had been allotted too little time in which to present their opposition.

I requested the privilege of correcting any errors in the transcript of my statement, but through what is said to have been an oversight the opportunity was not afforded me. As the result, my statement was reported so inaccurately that the hearings give little idea of what I said. I have not attempted to reproduce the more or less irrelevant and unsympathetic interruptions to which I was subjected, as they have been revised so as to make this quite difficult.

STATEMENT OF HON. GEORGE HUDDLESTON, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF ALABAMA

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I have expressed my views on this amendment in a speech in the House, a copy of which speech I have recently sent to each member of the committee.

I shall not reiterate anything I said in my speech. I did not attempt to cover the field, and I think of one or two things in addition.

The first is that the clause which lies nearest to its heart is the clause which permits a change in the Constitution. It is more vital and more fundamental than any other provision of the Constitution. For, by dealing with that clause, we may fix it so that the Constitution is absolutely rigid and may never be amended, or we may fix it so that it may be amended lightly and without sufficient thought. In other words, through that clause we reach toward every other clause in the whole Constitution, and that can not be said about any other clause of the Constitution.

I can not go into that in detail. I merely want to bring the thought that unnecessary meddling with the Constitution becomes a more serious offense when we deal with an amendment to this particular clause, than if we were undertaking to deal with any other section.

Of course, it is foolish to be talking about an amendment to the Constitution, unless it is of importance, unless it has a very important and substantial effect on the Constitution. Let us, therefore, consider just what effect this amendment will have. Now, it can have only either one or both of two effects:

First, to make the Constitution harder to amend and, second, to assure that amendments will be adopted more in harmony with the will of the people. I think it is possible that both of those purposes have something to do with the support which this amendment has.

Mr. GARRETT disclaims any desire to make it more difficult to amend the Constitution, and I accept his statement as 100 per cent accurate. However, there is no doubt in my mind that much of the support for this amendment comes from those who do not want the Constitution changed and who feel that certain changes which have been made in it were inadvisably made. I believe that the recoil which has come from the adoption of the last four amendments is responsible for fully nine-tenths of the sentiment which is supporting this amendment.

I want to say this, that anyone who is familiar with the history of the efforts to amend the Constitution is, it seems to me, bound to conclude that it is not too easy to amend. I do not see any escape from the thought that if any change along that line is needed, it is to make it easier to amend. When we consider the thousands of efforts to amend the Constitution, coming down through the generations, so few of which succeeded, it becomes evident at once by this that the Constitution is not unduly easy to amend.

We have had thousands of efforts to amend the Constitution, and they have succeeded in only a very few instances, and in those particular instances it was under great stress, and in certain instances the proposal was supported by an influenced public opinion, such as the adoption of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments, which could hardly otherwise have been adopted.

So that I say, first, that the Constitution is too hard to amend; it needs numerous amendments. It would be the height of folly to make it more difficult to amend the Constitution. That is my own personal reaction to the situation.

I was dealing with the psychology in this proposal and the support which it receives. I think it is due largely to the resentment which has arisen in the country over the adoption of certain amendments, and I want to call the attention of the committee to this point, that if those amendments were improperly adopted, it is a gross injustice to those who object to those amendments to make it more difficult to amend the Constitution in the future. Let us be specific and take the prohibition amendment. There is a strong body of sentiment that favors the repeal of that amendment. It is unjust to that body of sentiment to make it harder to withdraw that amendment from the Constitution than it was to adopt it.

The proposed amendment, if adopted, will make it harder to amend the Constitution in two ways: First, it will cause delay through the requirement that members of the legislatures which ratify must be elected after the submission of the amendment. If an amendment should be submitted shortly after the election of legislators in those States in which they hold office for four years, no action for ratification could be taken until their successors had assembled, which might be as long as five or six years. It forces that the action shall be too deliberate.

Second, it makes amendment more difficult by giving legal effect to a rejection which it has not heretofore had. Under the present practice a rejection means nothing in particular. It is ratification only that counts. A majority of the legislatures may reject, with the effect that the amendment remains submitted and in the same situation as though no action had been taken by the legislatures. Its situation is such that it may be ratified at any subsequent time even by the legislatures which had previously rejected it. The Garrett amendment introduces the practice of making rejection effective, which is a new departure. Under it, if more than one-fourth of the legislatures reject, the amendment is forever killed, and its ratification by all of the remaining States and a recantation of the States which rejected it can not operate to revive it.

In short, the amendment delays ratification, though it does not delay rejection. It gives an opportunity, by the use even of unfair means, to build up a public sentiment against a proposed amendment or to destroy the wholesome sentiment which demanded it. Furthermore, it gives a positive power to destroy an amendment to a very small minority of the States.

It is, of course, unnecessary for me to comment upon an extremely unfair aspect of the amendment, which is that it requires that legislatures which ratify must be elected after the amendment is submitted, whereas no such condition is attached to legislatures which reject. Legislatures that may have been elected prior to the submission of the amendment are eligible to reject but can not ratify. In this aspect the amendment is wholly one-sided as against ratification, and is manifestly unfair.

The amendment is also unfair in that under certain conditions an appeal to a popular vote may be taken from a legislature which ratifies an amendment, yet no such appeal is permitted from legislatures which reject an amendment. In short, those who favor the amendment are manifestly unwilling to give as fair opportunity for ratification as they are for rejection. It is obvious that rejection is what they want and not ratification.

Now, let me proceed to the next thought that Mr. GARRETT expressed in his speech in the House—that it will make amendments to the Constitution more democratic. That he proposes to do in two ways—first, by requiring that one branch of the legislature which ratifies shall have been elected after the submission of the amendment, it being the thought that the people will have some opportunity to instruct their representatives in the legislature as to whether they desire the amendment adopted. The second way in which this is to be accomplished is by authorizing the States to hold a referendum in the case of ratification.

I believe in being thoroughgoing, if we are going to be democratic. And may I say that I am in hearty accord with anything which is going to be really democratic and which would democratize the adoption of amendments, and I would suggest, if the committee proposes to do anything along that line, that it do something that is real and substantial. If you want to make action upon amendments to the Constitution democratic, why do you not eliminate the State legislatures and require that a referendum be held for ratification or rejection, as the case may be, within a certain time after the amendment is submitted? If you really want the people to have a voice in the adoption of amendments, if that is your sincere and earnest desire, having reached the conclusion that it is best for the public welfare for us to do that, then let us do the thing in a direct fashion, not by gestures, and not by pretense and shams. Let us do it in a real fashion by providing that every amendment to the Constitution shall be submitted to a popular referendum at the next Federal election held in the State, and the sentiment of the State realized in that fashion. But just for the purpose of making a gesture toward democracy, is it possible we are going to undertake to deal with this clause so near to the heart of the Constitution?

Mr. MICHENER. Does the gentleman favor such an amendment?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes; I do. I am a real democrat. I believe that the Constitution belongs to the people of the United States and that they have a right to amend it, under reasonable regulations and provisions. I am enough of a real, sure-enough, old-fashioned American and democrat to believe it is right to do it that way, and I would favor it. It is in line with that I made my speech, to which I referred. I introduced an amendment doing that very thing.

PRODUCTION OF SULPHUR ON THE PUBLIC DOMAIN

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 3186, to promote the production of sulphur on the public domain, and consider the same at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 3186, to promote the production of sulphur on the public domain, and consider the same at this time. Is there objection?

Mr. SNEEL. Mr. Speaker, what is the situation in respect to the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that there is a practically identical bill on the calendar reported from the Committee on Public Lands. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant to any qualified applicant a prospecting permit which shall give the exclusive right to prospect for sulphur in lands belonging to the United States located in the State of Louisiana for a period of not exceeding two years: Provided, That the area to be included in such a permit shall be not exceeding 640 acres of land in reasonably compact form.

SEC. 2. Upon showing to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that valuable deposits of sulphur have been discovered by the permittee within the area covered by his permit, and that the land is chiefly valuable therefor, the permittee shall be entitled to a lease for any or all of the land embraced in the prospecting permit, at a royalty of 5 per cent of the quantity or gross value of the output of sulphur at the point of shipment to market, such lease to be taken in compact form by legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys; or if the land be not surveyed, by survey executed at the cost of the permittee in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That where any person having been granted an oil and gas permit makes a discovery of sulphur in lands covered by said permit, he shall have the same privilege of leasing not to exceed 640 acres of said land under the same terms and conditions as are given a sulphur permittee under the provisions of this section.

SEC. 3. Lands known to contain valuable deposits of sulphur and not covered by permits or leases shall be held subject to lease by the Secretary of the Interior through advertisement, competitive bidding, or such other methods as he may by general regulations adopt and in such areas as he shall fix, not exceeding 640 acres; all leases to be conditioned upon the payment by the lessee of such royalty as may be fixed in the lease and the payment in advance of a rental of 50 cents per acre per annum, the rental paid for any one year to be credited against the royalties accruing for that year.

SEC. 4. Prospecting permits or leases may be issued in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of this act for deposits of sulphur in public lands also containing coal or other minerals on condition that such other deposits be reserved to the United States for disposal under applicable laws.

SEC. 5. The general provisions of section 1 and sections 26 to 38, inclusive, of the act of February 25, 1920, entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain," are made applicable to permits and leases under this act, the first and thirty-seventh sections thereof being amended to include deposits of sulphur, and section 27 being amended so as to prohibit any person, association, or corporation from taking or holding more than three sulphur permits or leases in any one State during the life of such permits or leases.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TILSON. Is the bill on the House Calendar or the Union Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, a similar bill is on the Union Calendar, reported unanimously by the Committee on the Public Lands. It has the approval of the department, and the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands is here. I ask him to make a little explanation.

Mr. SNELL. I understand the gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to call it up now.

The SPEAKER. Yes. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, I understand the chairman wants to offer an amendment to clarify the language.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes. The bill is confined to the State of Louisiana, but there is some question as to whether or not the language in the Senate bill confines it to the State of Louisiana. I have an amendment which will do that.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman does not contemplate taking much time?

Mr. LAZARO. No.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire the bill to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. LAZARO. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SINNOTT: Page 3, after line 20, add a new section, to be known as section 6, to read as follows:

"That the provisions of this act shall apply only to the State of Louisiana."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate bill was passed was ordered to be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, House bill 9725 will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the consideration of bills brought to the House by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce they may be considered immediately after the naval aviation bill now pending, under Calendar Wednesday rules, so far as they relate to debate, except that in the case of Senate bill 41 there may be three hours' general debate instead of two hours.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that bills heretofore made in order by the House, reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, be considered under the Calendar Wednesday rules, with the exception of Senate bill 41, on which the general debate shall be limited to three hours instead of two hours. Is there objection?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understand the bills will be considered in the order in which they came in the statement of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON]?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. When is it proposed to take up these bills?

Mr. TILSON. Following the conclusion of the naval aviation bill.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does the gentleman expect to have a session to-morrow?

Mr. TILSON. Until we see what progress is made with the naval aviation bill to-day I can not make any promises as to to-morrow.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Of course, it is not expected that there will be any displacement of the regular business on Monday?

Mr. TILSON. That has already been displaced by the order of the House in case these bills are called up.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. May I ask whether it is the intention of the gentleman to so operate?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I wanted to get some idea as to when we shall get these bills up. I am enlightened now. I understand the gentleman's statement is that if the two days allowed shall include any part of Monday they shall have the right of way on that day?

Mr. TILSON. Yes; the right of way on the floor of the House. I so understand it.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. Has the gentleman from Connecticut in mind any time when the private bills shall be considered?

Mr. TILSON. Yes. I intend to ask that next Friday, a week from to-day, Friday evening, be set apart for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar that are not objected to.

Mr. MILLER. When does the gentleman think that will be?

Mr. TILSON. It is my intention next week, but I will say that other gentlemen in the House have as much information on that subject as I have.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON]?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Thursday, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of formal matters, including conference reports, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] may have leave to address the House for one hour on the subject of the general claims bill, which is being considered by the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that next Thursday, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of formal matters, including conference reports, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] may have leave to address the House for one hour on the subject of the general claims bill. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] yesterday was so kind as to let me have 30 minutes on minor matters, and I shall not object to his having one hour on a very important matter like the claims bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ALMON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, why not postpone that until Friday? On Thursday we expect to get up the roads bill.

Mr. TILSON. The roads bill will have the right of way after the gentleman from Massachusetts has finished.

Mr. ALMON. All right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AIRCRAFT IN THE NAVY AND MARINE CORPS

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9690.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9690, with Mr. LEHLBACH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 9690, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9690) to authorize the construction and procurement of aircraft and aircraft equipment in the Navy and Marine Corps and to adjust and define the status of the operating personnel in connection therewith.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STEPHENS].

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in the consideration of H. R. 9690, the distinguished chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee [Mr. BUTLER] and the ranking minority member of the committee [Mr. VINSON of Georgia] covered the principal questions in the entire bill. There is hardly anything more that can be said in addition to the facts that were presented by these two gentlemen. However, I might call the attention of the committee, although it is a repetition, to the number of planes that will be constructed during this five-year period, so that at the end of this period there will be 1,000 planes in the service. The addition has been made regular each year, so that at the end of this five-year period we shall have 1,000 planes. At the present time, or at the end of June 30, 1927, we shall have 638 planes. The amount that was appropriated for this particular purpose in the last appropriation bill was something like $17,000,000. The amount to be appropriated for this five-year period would be $85,000,000, so there is no actual increase in the annual appropriation that would be necessary to carry on our naval program, even though this five-year program were not adopted, and there are a number of us, perhaps all of us, who think that the five-year program is a program of economy rather than a program of expense.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I want to get this clear before the House. Do I understand the gentleman to state that if this bill is enacted into law it will not be an increased burden on the Treasury over what we are doing now?

Mr. STEPHENS. That is what I mean to state. It will not be an increase over the burden we now have relative to the building and furnishing of airplanes, although there might be a little increase in personnel.

Mr. RAMSEYER. How much of an increase?

Mr. STEPHENS. Well, I will say that when we get 1,000 airplanes it will require more men to manipulate and have charge of them than will be required for 600. I am not sure whether that would even add an additional expense, because it would not add an additional number of men we would have to take into the service. It would not increase the total number of men in the service.

Mr. RAMSEYER. What is the gentleman's best judgment and the judgment of the committee as to whether, after you get this program started, it will increase the burden on the Treasury?

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman permit me to answer that?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. We had a ship program which we submitted to the House and sent to the President two years ago. It is building very slowly and it may not be finished for several years. Certainly until that great program of eight ships is completed there will be no requests for any additional men. We expect this program to be provided for, as we stated yesterday, out of the present personnel of the Navy. We do not ask to have the number increased at the Naval Academy so we may have more officers. We expect to have the affairs of the Navy Department so arranged that we need not ask the Government for any more money to support and sustain the whole naval service.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEPHENS. I will.

Mr. LAZARO. Could the gentleman tell us what is being done to encourage the young men who had experience in flying in the World War, and who have gone out of the service, to come back into the service if they desire to come back so that we will have a personnel made up of experienced men?

Mr. STEPHENS. Well, I will say to the gentleman that I do not know of any particular plan to carry out the idea the gentleman has just suggested, but it will increase the number of enlisted men to become aviators and pilots and it will give them an opportunity if they are qualified, but the matter of age might be against them.

The proposed five-year building program for naval aviation marks the transition from the development stage to the production stage in postwar naval aircraft. We remember that during the World War the Navy's efforts by joint agreement were concentrated on the training of its flyers and the operation of coastal patrol-type airplanes; that is, large flying boats, against submarines and in conjunction with convoy and patrol work.

As a result of this policy the Navy found itself at the close of the war without adequate fleet aviation. There were on hand a large number of training planes and large flying boats but these were of limited use with the fleet. The postwar demobilization deprived the Navy of many of its trained officers and enlisted men and it became necessary to build up and train new personnel. The aircraft on hand were utilized to this end and were adapted to fleet use as far as possible by basing them on tenders capable of operating with the fleet. At first the converted mine layer Shawmut was used for this purpose, but she was later replaced by the Wright, originally designed as a kite balloon tender and later modified as a combined kite balloon and seaplane tender.

Since 1919 these large flying-boat squadrons have been operating with the fleet and have performed useful service. They ordinarily leave with the fleet for winter exercises in Caribbean waters and they have flown back and forth to Panama and have operated in the joint exercises in Hawaii. The work these planes have done has gone unsung, but they have flown to the far corners of the earth over wide stretches of rough water. They have cooperated with the fleet in the control of gunfire, torpedo recovery, scouting, and bombing for the fleet.

One of the immediate requirements of the fleet was torpedo planes, and to this end some of the war-time planes were modified and adapted. These torpedo planes were likewise based on the Wright, and cruised with the scouting plane squadrons to Cuba and return.

On the basis of this work, new and improved torpedo planes were laid out, and this forms a basis of design for the modern torpedo planes. In this work, the Navy, in its desire to carry on its work economically, developed the three-purpose airplane, a combined scouting and torpedo airplane, in which, if bombs or torpedoes are not carried, the useful load is made up of gasoline, thus increasing the cruising range. Conversely, for bombing and torpedo plane work, a smaller amount of gasoline is carried and the military load makes up the useful load. As a result of this intensive development, which required the development of new engines and new accessories, the Navy now has ready for production a three-purpose airplane, which, in our knowledge, is not excelled.

As a further method of economy the Navy substituted the three-purpose plane for the old patrol planes as they became worn out, and operated them as patrol planes, so that they have really been used as four-purpose planes. They are particularly satisfactory for the reason that they are convertible from land to seaplanes and can be used on carriers or from tenders or from shore bases or for operation over the sea.

In the interim, the Navy did not cease its development work in the patrol types, the final development being the PN-9's used on the west coast-Hawaiian flight. These airplanes hold the world's endurance and distance seaplane records and are remarkable in that the proportion of useful load to full load carried by them is not excelled anywhere. This achievement was made possible by the development of new lightweight engines and the incorporation of reduction gears for improved efficiency. This, in itself, constitutes a distinct achievement. The development has been brought on with a small number of airplanes, and this country is now in a position to go into production on this type in quantity provided for in every detail.

With the formation of the Navy Bureau of Aeronautics a definite policy was outlined by the General Board of the Navy and approved by the Secretary of the Navy in 1922. This policy called for intensive development of fleet aviation, taking first that portion of fleet aviation which may be classified as Air Service; that is, airplanes operated from combatant ships for the control of gunfire and for short-range scouting. The weight and space limitations for aircraft on board men-of-war already built made this problem very difficult. It required the development of new air-cooled engines in order to eliminate the cooling-system weight required for water-cooled engines. This work was taken in hand and pushed to the point where the Navy is now operating with the fleet a large number of shipboard airplanes of the type required. These were brought through in the smallest number possible as a development proposition. They do not represent what the Navy can do, but they represent an achievement which has not been excelled abroad.

These shipboard airplanes are seaplanes, and in order that they might be launched from men-of-war the catapult was developed. This work was pushed with such energy that many of the battleships and all the light cruisers are now completely equipped, and they have catapulted their airplanes with complete success in the different parts of the world. So perfect has the technique become that the fleet is accustomed to launching the aircraft from the catapults on signal in salvos, just as guns are fired in salvos. The whole development of the shipboard airplane, together with its catapult, is one of outstanding merit. New and improved airplanes and catapults have been brought through, and the Navy is now ready to go into production on both of these.

During the war foreign navies had large aircraft carriers operating with the fleet. Our agreement to subordinate our efforts along these lines to carrying out antisubmarine measures delayed the development of carriers for our Navy. At the close of the war we had none. The collier Jupiter was converted into the experimental carrier Langley, and on board this ship all the intricate mechanism that goes with handling aircraft from carriers, together with the development of suitable types of airplanes for this purpose, was carried out. On the basis of the information attained the Lexington and Saratoga have been designed. When completed these will be the most complex and at the same time the most wonderful machines afloat. They are scheduled for completion at the end of this year or at the beginning of the next year. The Navy has prosecuted the development of its airplanes for the carriers to the point where it is now ready to go into production, and in fact has already ordered aircraft for the purpose. When the carriers and their airplanes are completed and the squadrons organized we can feel sure that our naval air force will not be surpassed in quality.

Under the agreement between the Army and the Navy, as laid down by the joint board and approved by the executive departments, the Navy is charged with the responsibility of operating coastal patrol-type airplanes from certain shore bases and outlying possessions.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does the gentleman consider the Lexington and Saratoga the ideal type of carriers and the last word in airplane carriers?

Mr. STEPHENS. I do.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does the gentleman know that the Lexington and Saratoga are vessels of large tonnage?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The latest development in airplane carriers suggests vessels of less tonnage and greater speed, so that in the event of the destruction of any one carrier the entire aviation of the fleet is not lost, and I doubt whether any other country will follow the United States in adopting vessels of such large tonnage and cost as the Lexington and Saratoga as airplane carriers. So by the time they are commissioned they will have become obsolete.

Mr. STEPHENS. I do not agree with the gentleman. I will say, as I said before, that at the present time both of these carriers have everything that has been invented for the enlargement, advancement, and performance of airplane carriers. There is no doubt that there may be new plans and new ideas, but those new ideas have not been carried out. This new plan of a smaller carrier is an idea and it has not been given practical demonstration. It might be better and it might not, but at the present time these two carriers are the latest word in airplane carriers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUTLER. I anticipate, Mr. Chairman, that I am going to be short on time. Would it be in order, in Committee of the Whole, to entertain a request from me a little later that we may have 10 or 15 minutes additional time?

The CHAIRMAN. The time having been fixed in the House, the committee could not vary it at all.

Mr. BUTLER. Then somebody will have to be robbed of time at the end. However, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. In connection with the gentleman's most recent statement, in answer to the gentleman from New York, it might also be added that these aircraft carriers of ours have all of the speed that is anticipated for any aircraft carrier in the world?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But, if the gentleman will permit, they have no greater speed than the fastest cruiser.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I think the gentleman will agree that if they have a speed that is as great as the fastest cruiser it would be ample?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, no.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Under an agreement with what board was that arrangement made?

Mr. STEPHENS. Under the agreement between the Army and the Navy, as laid down by the joint board and approved by the executive departments, the Navy is charged with the responsibility of operating coastal patrol type airplanes from certain shore bases and outlying possessions.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I find from a statement I have here that they have failed to arrive at a satisfactory coordination of aircraft both at Panama and Hawaii. They failed to arrive at any satisfactory agreement on any vital point.

Mr. STEPHENS. Does the gentleman refer to the coastal patrol?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I refer to the operation and maintenance of aviation installations along the coastal limits of continental United States.

Mr. STEPHENS. There has been an agreement as to coastal patrol so that the Navy has charge of the coastal patrol and that which goes out over the sea. The Army has the interior.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. That is what I wanted to bring out. Various statements have been made about what these boards have settled. I understood the gentleman to say definitely that this policy had been established, and I wanted to show that they had accomplished something.

Mr. STEPHENS. From all the information I have and from all the information that has come before our committee, I will say there is an agreement and has been an agreement between the Army and the Navy as laid down by the joint board and approved by the executive departments that the Navy is charged with the responsibility of operating coastal patrol type airplanes from certain shore bases and outlying possessions.

This is distinctly and unmistakably a naval function. It requires the operation of aircraft over the sea in conjunction with naval vessels. It is of paramount importance that the command of such activities be in the hands of the Navy. The Navy is prepared to build the airplanes required for this purpose, but to date has not done so partly because it was not fully prepared to standardize on the types and partly because no funds have been available. At present, I am advised there is no duplication of effort in coast defense. The Navy is charged with responsibility over coast-defense aircraft employed for operation over the sea. The Army is charged with the local defense of shore bases involving operations over the land. This is, it seems, a sound adjustment and should be allowed to continue.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. May I say to the gentleman I wish it were settled, but the information I have, which is only two days old, is quite to the contrary, and I will read it in my time.

Mr. STEPHENS. I will say to the gentleman it is settled at this particular time.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I hope so.

Mr. STEPHENS. But it might come up again.

Since 1922 the Navy has had a complete plan covering the kind and number of aircraft required for its peace-time strength. It has been anxious to undertake a building program contemplating the construction within a period of five years of the total number of airplanes required. It was not until recently, however, that it has been in a position to standardize upon the airplanes of each type necessary for the service. As a result of the intensive development work which has been quietly undertaken, it is now in a position to go ahead. The Navy has developed the quality of aircraft to the point where we are now ready to obtain them in quantity. It has expended its funds in the past in the endeavor to maintain the quantity at a minimum while improving the quality. The wisdom of this policy is apparent when we remember that had we purchased large quantities of aircraft which were entirely satisfactory for service when ordered they would have been worn out or obsolescent by this time. Instead, funds have been devoted to development with the result that for the first time we are in a position to go ahead with a constructive program looking toward equipping our fleet with the total number of aircraft required on a peace-time basis.

The development period has been a difficult one for the aircraft industry. It has required complete readjustment to meet the new conditions. It involved deflation and reduction of the total facilities available. During this reconstruction period those firms which had the engineering talent and business judgment to meet the crisis have survived. Through limited production orders the Navy had tided the best part of the industry over the crisis. The industry in return has contributed its engineering ability to the advance of the art. It is of the utmost importance that in purchasing our new aircraft we do not go so rapidly that we will have to build up facilities in excess of our normal requirements and go through the cycle or deflation again. The five-year building program outlined will make it possible to stabilize the industry. It is so designed that it will not require any expansion of existing facilities, but, on the contrary, is designed to meet the existing facilities. A continuing program of this kind looking to the purchase of the material required at a reasonable rate will maintain the existing facilities at a reasonable rate of production and bring stability to the situation. It is agreed by all that a well-organized and healthful aircraft industry is a primary essential to national defense. Such a stable industry is capable of tremendous and rapid expansion in time of emergency. It is of the very greatest importance that this industry be stable and be reasonably well assured of its future. This five-year building program is justified when we remember that in addition we will obtain for our money better aircraft than are known to exist elsewhere, and equip our Navy with the latest and best material. We can visualize what the building program means in national defense.

The program itself is a very modest one. It calls for the construction of only such airplanes as are absolutely necessary to the fleet. We are still deficient in our carrier tonnage. The program does not call for aircraft for any ships not yet authorized. It does not even cover some ships already authorized but for which funds are not yet appropriated. It does not provide coastal patrol type airplanes normally required for the defense of the continental limits of this country. It is, however, a constructive, sound, well-developed, continuing program designed to meet the minimum needs of this country for adequate fleet aviation. It comes at a time when the Navy is fully prepared to standardize on types and go into quantity production. It is therefore well timed, not only from the viewpoint of economy but also from the viewpoint of the industry and the service to be supplied.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee—

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to state publicly that it is my purpose to yield first to the members of the Naval Affairs Committee.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think it is a matter of hearing those in opposition—

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, they can not take the gentleman from Texas off his feet in this way.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] has the floor.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield so that I may submit a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. LANHAM. I am afraid I have not the time.

Mr. BUTLER. I know I made a mistake, but I wanted to make it plain that I must yield first to those who sit with me on the committee.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think it is a question of hearing the opposition.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, there has been, as you all know, very much discussion in this country in the last year or two concerning our air forces, and this agitation has served at least the function and purpose of accentuating the importance of proper defense by air. Those of you with whom it has been my pleasure to serve in the House of Representatives are familiar with the interest which I have manifested in the helium project and in its growth and development.

I am grateful that in this five-year program of the Committee on Naval Affairs, reflecting as I assume it does the sentiments of those in charge in our Navy Department, the lighter-than-air field, though new, has not been overlooked. Unfortunately, a siege of the flu prevented me from attending the hearings on this measure and there expressing my approval of this recognition of lighter-than-air flying, and I am grateful that I have now been accorded, through the courtesy of my colleague from Georgia, an opportunity to say something concerning it.

I assume, gentlemen, that this measure is entirely in accord and in keeping with the economy program of the administration, or it would not now be brought in; at any rate, it presents from the attitude of the Navy a comprehensive program for the next five years; quite in contrast with the hit-or-miss policy of seeking year by year to suit ourselves expediently to any condition that may arise. This is a definite, concrete program that has a definite, distinct aim.

It has been now less than a year since the disaster to the Shenandoah, which filled the whole country with grief. By reason of the fact that that great ship, "The Daughter of the Stars," met such an ill fate on that last voyage, there arose in this country a class of people who decided hastily within their own minds that the Government should abolish lighter-than-air flying. If we did not pause to reflect, that might seem a reasonable conclusion. But just a little later we had a submarine catastrophe. The loss of life was more than twice as great in the submarine disaster as in the accident which befell the ill-fated Shenandoah. And yet, we shall continue to build submarines. Every year in each American city of considerable size we have more fatalities from auto traffic than we had in the Shenandoah, and yet I think there is no city in the country which will discontinue the use of automobiles. Hardly a year passes without our headlines proclaiming some dire mine disaster with great loss of life, which causes us all to mourn, and yet I think in spite of these things we will continue the operation of our mines. The cowboy does not stop riding because one broncho happens to throw him.

But I do think, gentlemen, that perhaps we have not paused fittingly to pay our tribute of respect to the memory of Commander Zachary Lansdowne and his brave comrades who perished with him. [Applause.] It was my pleasure to know him, and to know also the second officer in command, Capt. Lewis Hancock, of my own good State, and I want to say a word or two at this time as a tribute to the memory of those heroic souls who passed with their ship.

It is not for this generation to give to these honored dead their full meed of praise. The work of the pioneer toward the world's welfare and advancement can be estimated and determined only after the lapse of time has shown the priceless value of that work. We give to-day to the sturdy fathers who blazed the trail for American civilization a praise more just and adequate than it was possible for their contemporaries to accord them.

Lighter-than-air flying is a new and developing industry, even in this country of ours, which is a favored nation because it has a practical monopoly of the known sources of helium supply. And it may be said that our lamented dead of this disaster were as truly American pioneers as were the men who felled the forests and built their rude cabins in the hazardous struggles of the early days. As pioneers in their important field, Commander Lansdowne and his comrades have but planted the seed; generations yet unborn will reap the harvest. And when for commercial transportation in times of peace and for defense and offense in times of war the multitudes shall know and recognize the great possible utility of the helium-filled dirigible, then, and not until then, may the people appreciate and properly respect the brave men who perished on that ill-fated craft. To that day of the consummation of their hopes and ours we look forward with confidence. They were sky pilots of a new school, pointing out to us a new duty and a new glory. Our best tribute to their memory is to take up the task where they left off and carry on to successful and triumphant completion. In this field America may be preeminent, and to-day the call comes to us from the grave to make it so. Let us not prove recreant to the trust. [Applause.]

I am glad to report that in my home city, Fort Worth, where one of the few mooring masts of this country stands, the city where the only real helium-production plant in the world exists, and to which the Shenandoah came on more than one occasion as a visitor, our Armistice Day celebration on the 11th of November last was in honor of the dead of the Shenandoah. [Applause.] We had as our distinguished guest on that occasion Commander Rosendahl, also a Texan, who has been assigned to command the Los Angeles. I am glad to say that through the patriotic spirit of the boys who fought in the great struggle across the sea, who realized the importance in warfare as well as in peace of lighter-than-air craft, we have placed at that mooring mast a bronze tablet bearing the name of each of the crew who perished on that fateful day. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. LANHAM. I wish I had time, gentlemen, to recite briefly the history of this wonderful helium project. This country, as you know, has a practical monopoly of all known sources of supply of this element, most valuable both in peace and in war.

Perhaps it finds its useful field especially with reference to the Navy, and it may be said in this regard that if it had not been for helium it is likely that everyone aboard the Shenandoah would have gone to his death at the time of that accident. Let me bring it to your attention that the loss of most of those who perished was caused by the control car coming loose from the bag which held the gas, and when the ship broke in three pieces the helium held these parts aloft and brought their occupants safely to the ground, while those who were in the car that was severed from the envelope were sent hurtling to their death.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. What is the difference in the cost of helium now and when it was first discovered?

Mr. LANHAM. Up to 1917, the time of our entrance into the World War, the minimum price for the extraction of one single cubic foot of helium was $1,500. We are now getting it for about 3 cents. Think of the progress! Why should we stand back in America, with this wonderful opportunity which no other nation has, and refuse to build these two great dirigibles when England, with practically no helium, is now engaged in the construction of two?

I should like to read in this connection a clipping taken a short time ago from the Washington Post in order to show you how the importance of helium is recognized by those who have it in scant volume, if at all. This is from the Washington Post of December 6 last:

BIG HELIUM SOURCE BOUGHT BY CANADA—WELLS NEAR TORONTO TURNED OVER TO UNIVERSITY FOR RESEARCH WORK

TORONTO, ONTARIO, December 5.—Premier Ferguson, of Ontario, made official announcement to-day that a deposit of helium had been discovered at Inglewood, in Peel County, about 40 miles northwest of Toronto. Three wells there have been purchased by the Government, which has for some time been extracting gas from them in cooperation with the University of Toronto.

"The Province has taken over the helium rights at Inglewood," said Premier Ferguson, "and I am informed that they have the highest content of this gas of any in the British Empire. The wells have been turned over to the University of Toronto for research work."

The premier said strict secrecy had been maintained because of the "tremendous importance of the find."

And yet, gentlemen, the helium which has been found in Canada—and a little in Italy and some in Czechoslovakia—is of little consequence in volume compared with that which we have discovered in this country. We have practically a monopoly of the known sources of supply.

Now, what are the functions of the helium-filled dirigible with reference to the Navy, and what are its advantages in addition to its safety? It is necessary at sea, for the purpose of reconnaissance and scouting, to have some agent that will have a long radius of operation. An airplane can not go very far over the water without returning to its base for fuel, but a dirigible, which stays above the ground by reason of the fact that the gas which keeps it aloft is lighter than air, has a long cruising radius. The cruising radius of the Shenandoah was almost 4,000 miles. That would have been almost enough in the contemplated polar flight to have taken it from Spitzbergen across the North Pole to Nome and back to Spitzbergen without refueling. By reason of the lessons we have learned, we now know that it is possible to increase the radius while increasing also the efficiency of the ship. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COYLE].

Mr. COYLE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in the presentation of the five-year program as recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs the opportunity has been asked to present the program in so far as it applies to lighter-than-air or airships and their use.

On page 589 of the hearings I get in his quiet, modest, but fearless way, from Lieutenant Commander Rosendahl, the senior of the 29 survivors of the Shenandoah, a text that is at once an inspiration and a guide. He says:

The survivors of the Shenandoah have suffered no weakening of our enthusiasm for rigid airships, nor have we lost any of our confidence in them.

Here I find the true American spirit, the dauntless spirit of 1776 and 1812 alive in the land, a spirit worthy of the finest traditions of a great land whose white sails have dotted the seven seas and whose silvered airships in your time and mine may cruise the seven heavens of the air.

A fine type of a gentleman, unafraid, was Rosendahl, and he and his like—Steele, of the Los Angeles, and Moffett, their chief—were enthusiastic for airships because of what they knew of their usefulness in national defense.

Many of us on the Atlantic seaboard can remember back to those days of the roaring nineties, when cruisers had to be assigned to patrol the New England and Jersey coast because fear of Cervera's squadron was causing a falling off in sea-shore-resort business. Few of us realize that when history repeats itself once more a fleet of airships with 3,000 miles cruising radius will probably establish contact with an enemy fleet 2,000 miles or more from shore and report their disposition and numbers by wireless to our main defensive fleet.

For a fleet to be able to choose its time and scene of action is, if not half the battle, at least a large part of the battle. Strategic scouting well ahead of the location of a defensive fleet is an immense advantage, and one airship for this purpose is as effective as three fast cruisers on account of wider vision. It is for this purpose the airship, as we now know it, would principally be used, though Commander Fulton in his testimony has stated that he believes the command and tactical control of the fleet in the presence of an enemy and during battle may shortly be exercised by an admiral from a rigid airship as flagship.

Admiral Jones, president of the General Board of the Navy, testified, and I think most intelligently, that in his opinion it was not wise to discontinue any part of the proven adjuncts of the fleet in order to continue the development of the rigid airship, whose use and possibilities had been neither proven nor disproven.

I have been privileged to be present at several great beginnings and can cite for the House that it is but 25 years since, as a student at the Naval War College in Newport in the summer of 1900, one of the conventions agreed upon was that wireless telegraphy should be assumed to be good for 30 miles, because while the newly discovered method of transmission of electrical impulse was then but a laboratory experiment it was thought that before any war came it would be developed to be good for 30 miles. Two years later Navy testing proved the best equipment available was good for 110 miles, and with continued experimentation in the Navy planes can both send and receive continuous messages, the former within 30 miles and the latter within a fairly unlimited distance. This new science has been encouraged and aided at all points in its development, and the Navy has talked from an airplane to a submarine and return.

If I read history rightly, the development will be just as rapid in the air as "on the air," provided the Navy is allowed to proceed. By the time the hour of need arrives the now distant strategic points in the Pacific or Atlantic can all be watched by rigid airships on their station—a far-flung line of scouts under control of the very voice of the commander in chief.

The fact, as it was in the radio, is proven; the engineering principles are proven; and, more than any other nation, we have the elements—material and personal—known and proven. By the faith and courage in the eyes of Rosendahl, Fulton and Steele, Weyerbacher and Rogers give them the word to go ahead, then—

* * * Instant to foreshadowed need,
The eternal balance swings,
That winged men the fates may breed
So soon as fate hath wings.

Two airships are proposed, both to use helium, and following the general lines of the Shenandoah, as later improved in the Los Angeles. The design will include a built-in control car instead of a suspended one; a heavy armament of guns; and a method of launching and hooking on of planes that is well developed.

Ships 750 feet long, with a diameter of 125 feet, and 6,000,000 cubic feet capacity, will carry a military load of 60 long tons for 7,000 miles at 50 knots speed or 4,600 miles at 70 knots.

The helium contained in the inner fabric cells is noninflammable. This fabric can be readily patched in the air. Between this inner fabric and the outer are the duralumin structural members or girders. The helium lifts only 92 per cent of what hydrogen lifts, but the duralumin has nearly the strength of steel with but one-third of its weight.

This development of the rigid airship is at about the point comparable with the airplane at the start of the war in Europe; a very little in advance of the old wireless telegraphy days in radio. There are at least three reasons why the Navy should go ahead:

First. Because we have, as a nation, at our disposal more information concerning them and the only trained personnel in being and the only supply of helium, the noninflammable gas.

Second. Because of their immense usefulness should we ever be forced to defend our coast; immense use to the Navy, the first line of defense, for the outposts of that line. The plane is as yet the scout for use within the theater of action close to the fleet, the tactical scout, but the airship is the strategic scout, out 3,000 miles and back; the eyes, magnified 1,000 times. This arm of the service has, by mutual consent, been assigned to and accepted by the Navy, because all have recognized that it is adapted to meet certain of the Navy's needs but none of the Army's.

Third. Because of the probable commercial development along parallel lines in quick passenger and express transportation. One hears talk of New York to Chicago between twilight and dawn in the comfortable express sleepers of the "Air Transport (Ltd.)," because the congestion of traffic is already there, but I venture to predict that Panama to New York may come first if the Navy continues development. You may question whether the traffic is there, and I will answer that. At another great beginning I was an interested onlooker, and that was when the Republic of Panama was born and the canal became a possibility. In that day many people said, "Why, there is no demand for a canal through the Isthmus and but few ships touching there." Who could foresee the procession of shipping through that canal within the first and second decade after its completion?

Provide an airship on a two-day schedule from Panama to New York, and how many seafaring travelers from Australia and the west coast will take that short cut to New York to make a steamer a week earlier, perhaps, to London or Paris? The travel that is there now is but a tenth of that which is to come in the near future. Travel facilities induce travel, just as business begets business, and there are many more horseshoes worn out in this country than in the days when there were but two ways of travel—afloat and horseback.

Those of you who were listening in on the radio some 18 months ago and heard Graham McNamee, with the War Industries Board, on the Los Angeles render his description of Pennsylvania's wooded hills and fertile valleys, as the vessel circled over the east Atlantic States, will accept without question not the possibilities of the future but the accomplishments of the present. Airships hovering in place over the passes of the north Pacific can now report to Pearl Harbor, 2,000 miles away, with a running comment on events.

A word in conclusion advanced for the maintenance of an air force as an integral part of the Navy. So far as we can see at present the prime function of the Navy Air Service is as the well-trained coordinated eyes of the fleet. When passengers and cargo are carried in the air to the exclusion of the surface craft we may come to air battleships, transports, and so forth, but for even the farseeing the main reliance is yet on the battle fleet, whose very continued existence can keep the commerce moving in necessary volume. To-day the eyes are a well-coordinated part of the defensive body; to separate or combine them with the Army would be equivalent to bandaging the eyes of your champion against a seeing adversary in the prize ring and then telling him how to parry the other boxer's attack, talking from the ringside. In ancient mythology this was suggested, and you remember how the three gray women combined all their eyes in one to increase the power of that one and how easy it was for a "slick" young Perseus to grab that eye while it was being "bossed" by all three but possessed by none.

By illogical consolidation we lose coordination! [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC].

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the House of Representatives is to-day considering the first bill for the Navy in either branch of Congress which deals wholly with the subject of lighter and heavier than air craft. In order that the Record may show the progress that has been made on this subject within the last few years I desire to say that on February 10, 1921, the late Frederick Hicks, then a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, in a speech on this floor recommended that Congress appropriate $5,000,000 for aircraft instead of $500,000. On that day I rose and interrupted Mr. Hicks and asked him if it would not be possible to get some kind of demonstration to determine whether or not a ship could be sunk when struck by a bomb dropped from the air. I think that is the first mention that was ever printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which relates to this subject.

To-day we are considering a piece of legislation which, if enacted into law, will appropriate more than $100,000,000 for lighter and heavier than air machines. It is the beginning of a policy which, in my opinion, will gradually cause the people of the United States to recognize that aircraft is our first line of defense both in the Army and the Navy.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I am quite sure the gentleman would consider that if we have a program of this kind for the Navy there is certainly every bit as great reason why we should have a similar one for the Army.

Mr. McCLINTIC. If this is the policy to be adopted by the United States Congress it would not be right to discriminate against one branch of our national defense in favor of another. There are a great many who believe that we should have an unified air service. There are others who are in favor of a separate corps. In fact, I would be in favor of a separate corps in the Navy. Why? Because in 10 years from now aircraft will be ten times more important in the Navy than any other bureau.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I am quite sure the gentleman means there should be a coordinated program of construction for each service, so that there will be a proper development of our defense in each branch of the service.

Mr. McCLINTIC. And at the same time do away with a lot of duplication.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman has stated that more than $100,000,000 is carried in this bill. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WAINWRIGHT] is a distinguished member of the Committee on Military Affairs, and he talks of his bill coming in; but there is no provision made in either bill for coordination or to overcome the overlapping and duplication going on to-day.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I would be in favor, if it could be worked out, of some kind of a plan that would prevent the kind of duplication that causes us to waste a lot of money; but a majority of the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs have decided on this plan, and, therefore, I am going to support the legislation. The first portion of this bill deals with the subject of heavier-than-air ships. The original bill, as printed, called only for an appropriation of $5,000,000 for the construction of ships of this kind. The committee, after listening to expert testimony, decided it would be wise to authorize the construction of two large dirigibles, and for that reason the bill was amended in such a way as to bring this subject to the attention of the House in its present form. I have been interested in the subject of heavier-than-air craft for quite a while. I believe it was some time last January that I made a speech on the floor in which I called attention to the fact that, in my opinion, the time was not far off when we would build dirigibles sufficiently large to carry airplanes and, in addition, other kinds of military loads.

I recommended that this subject be given the proper attention so that we could have dirigibles sufficiently large to bring this about. I shall print in the Record a short paragraph from that speech on that day:

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe that far more efficiency can be secured for the Navy if we will appropriate sufficient money to construct airplane carriers to navigate the air, for it has already been demonstrated that planes can be launched and reattach themselves to ships of this type. Therefore, I believe it will be only a few years until we shall construct great dirigibles sufficiently large to carry just as many planes as these airplane carriers will take care of when completed.

On February 1, 1921, the Washington Post printed an editorial calling attention to what could be expected if the large, heavier-than-air ships were constructed and used as airplane carriers, and this article was inserted in the Record by me in a speech under date of February 3, 1925. There are some who take the position that the dirigible, on account of its vulnerability, would not be suitable for this purpose. However, the hearings developed that a ship having a capacity of 6,000,000 cubic feet could be hit 200 times by machine-gun bullets without doing any material damage.

Why? Because holes that are only an inch or two wide can be patched very quickly when we have separate gas containers, and inasmuch as they can be patched without bringing any disorder to the ship, it is nearly impossible to bring one down by hitting it with machine-gun bullets.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. McCLINTIC. In a minute.

In addition to that, the smoothness of the riding of these big ships is such that you can mount machine guns at points of advantage so that they can play on all of the territory, thereby enabling them to have a straightaway target at any approaching airplane that might come to destroy them; and while it may be possible at some time to bring down a dirigible, yet the chances are that if a dirigible is properly safeguarded by giving it the right kind of defense it will be able to ride through and take care of itself in a proper way.

Now I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I wish to say that in my opinion the gentleman from Oklahoma has won a gallant fight to show the value of aviation warfare. Was not the gentleman rather startled in reading the quotation from Admiral Moffett, referred to yesterday in the address of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], given on page 7158, to note his progress?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes. I am glad the gentleman from New York interrupted me. I want to say that as a rule, when a new idea is presented, a majority of those interested in the subject are not willing to accept it. For instance, during the Civil War, when the Navy was called upon to build an iron ship to combat the Merrimac, some of the experts said, "Any darn fool knows that iron will not float," and it took a lot of pressure to bring about the construction of the Monitor.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They were all officials in the Navy who said that, were they not?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I believe so. That was also true with respect to long-range guns during the World War. And when it was said that a battleship could be sunk by dropping a bomb on it through the air they laughed. I said several years ago that as long as this Nation had an adequate air defense no hostile army can be brought across the sea and landed on our shores. They laughed at me then. Now all recognized experts acknowledge that that is true. Consequently, we must take those facts into consideration. As we progress and demonstrate these new ideas it brings about a change of opinion, and the Navy is just like the Army or any other branch of the Government, in that when we show them a situation and prove it some of the doubting ones come to our way of thinking and support legislation of this kind. I am very glad that we do not now have any opposition from this source and that the General Board in the Navy is willing to accept the situation in such a way as to recommend to this Government that we have an aircraft policy, so that we can go on and build up this branch of national defense in the proper way.

Now, the General Board of the Navy presented a report to the Committee on Naval Affairs, in which they said in substance that they were willing that the Government should construct heavier-than-air ships, provided it did not take away any money from the building program which relates to ships on the water.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not think that is the understanding that the President has at all.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Anyhow, the committee felt that such a policy should be established and that a program should be promulgated without any regard to that statement.

Now, according to the testimony given, it costs about $1,716,000 to maintain the establishment at Lakehurst, and it is estimated that the cost of improvements built up to date is more than $6,000,000. If the Government is to construct both of these ships at the same time we may have to come before this House and ask for appropriations for additional hangars, and that subject should receive consideration while this bill is before the House.

Every one is more or less familiar with the disaster that overtook the Shenandoah, and it is the consensus of opinion that had not the Shenandoah been filled with helium gas the casualties would have been far greater than they were. This accident was a sad blow to the American people. However, we must not take a step backward, because there have been casualties in connection with many other kinds of inventions in the past, in the attempt to bring about efficiency in various arms of the Government. We are going ahead in the best manner possible in the endeavor to build airships that will avoid the kind of defects that brought about the loss of life in the Shenandoah disaster.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I do.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. What did the Shenandoah cost? Does the gentleman recall?

Mr. McCLINTIC. The Shenandoah cost about $2,500,000. It had a capacity close to two and one-half million cubic feet.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. And these two ships that are in contemplation will have a larger capacity than the Shenandoah?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes. Each will have a cubic-foot capacity of about 6,000,000.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Each will be twice as big as the Shenandoah?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes; and each will have a cruising radius of about three times that of the Shenandoah, thereby giving additional advantages and facilities.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Does the gentleman think that the research and the experimentation of the Navy in rigid airships takes into account the experience with the Shenandoah, and that the experience abroad justifies them in believing that they can safely and reasonably construct a vessel twice as large as the Shenandoah without any doubt as to its structural strength and cruising and fighting efficiency?

Mr. McCLINTIC. When the first plane was flown, it fell and went into the water, and the same thing is true with practically every other kind of invention. They failed in the beginning, but we have developed, in connection with other nations of the world, this type of ship in such a way that we now know what is to be expected when they are started.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Would it not be better to build one ship to replace the Shenandoah and build these ships experimentally, without undertaking to build these two mammoth aircraft without any experience?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I am very glad the gentleman has raised that point, because I made mention of the fact that if we build these two at the same time we possibly would not have sufficient hangar facilities, and I have suggested it might be a good idea for the committee to accept an amendment which would provide that work shall not start on the second ship until the first is completed and sufficient flight tests have been made.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I hesitate to interrupt the gentleman, but have we any hangar now constructed that would take a rigid dirigible of 6,000,000 cubic feet?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes; we can take care of a ship of that size very easily at Lakehurst.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Anywhere else?

Mr. McCLINTIC. No.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Anywhere on the Pacific coast?

Mr. McCLINTIC. No.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Therefore we could not reasonably and wisely build two of them unless there was another hangar constructed which would be as large as the Lakehurst hangar?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I take it that if another one is constructed it will be out on the Pacific coast.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Then if we build two of these large ships, it will involve the construction of another hangar on the Pacific coast, or somewhere else, as big as the Lakehurst hangar?

Mr. McCLINTIC. That question is somewhat mooted. I am of the opinion that you can not house the Los Angeles, the new metal-type ship we provide for in this bill, and two ships having a capacity of 6,000,000 feet at Lakehurst at the same time and handle them in such a way as to make them operate in a satisfactory manner.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. May I say that ought not to be a matter of opinion, but ought to be a matter of practical mathematical calculation.

Mr. McCLINTIC. It might be possible to get them all in this hangar at the same time, but it is very probable it would be so crowded it would be hard to get them out and manipulate them in a satisfactory manner. Therefore I have made this suggestion: That it might be best to build one of these ships and test it out. Of course, it will cost a little more money to do it in that way, because by letting a contract for two to the same contractor you could get them a little bit cheaper.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. But if you contract for two you coincidentally have got to have constructed for them another hangar as big as the Lakehurst hangar, because you could not create these two mammoth ships without having a place to put them.

Mr. McCLINTIC. If you build the two of them at the same time, it would be better to have another hangar, and it may be necessary to have another hangar.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. What would it cost to build another hangar? What was the cost of the Lakehurst hangar?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I can not give the gentleman those figures.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. The gentleman from New York said that this was in its experimental stage.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I do not agree with him.

Mr. STEPHENS. From all of the testimony that was given before our committee the dirigibles have passed the experimental stage entirely, and I will add, if the gentleman will permit, that if you build one dirigible it will cost $5,000,000, while if you build two it will cost $8,000,000. Therefore you will have a saving of $2,000,000 if you enter into a contract to construct the two at the same time.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I do not know that I quite agree with my colleague, because that is more or less problematical.

The Los Angeles was built in Germany. It carried 20 tons of gasoline when it left for the United States. It cost the German Government $750,000, and we have had to expend in addition $150,000 in providing certain appliances. In other words, this ship represents our total indemnity received from Germany in the World's War.

England has recently completed a heavier-than-air ship with a capacity of 5,000,000 cubic feet. According to the testimony given before the committee, it is possible to fly this ship from London to New York City and carry a bomb weighing 10 tons. I asked one of the experts who testified before the committee what would be the effect on Wall Street if this bomb filled with T. N. T. were dropped on that part of the city, and the answer was, "There would not be a single broker left."

When it is taken into consideration that a cruiser costs approximately $20,000,000, and that the speed of a heavier-than-air ship is approximately four times that of a cruiser, one can realize how much more efficient ships of this kind would be in war in case of an extreme emergency. It will be possible to carry a load up to 50 tons to the West Indies, Panama, and the Hawaiian Islands, provided that gasoline is used for ballast instead of water; and should we be so unfortunate as to become engaged in war with some other nation, the result of the battle might hinge on the efficiency of big ships of this type.

This bill also includes a five-year building program for heavier-than-air ships; and while I am in hearty accord with the members of the committee on this subject, I think I am safe in saying that no one can tell with any degree of accuracy whether or not the proper proportions have been worked out in such a way as to give to the Navy all that is needed in this connection. By way of comparison, the proposed Army bill, which did not provide any more money than this bill, would cause to be constructed approximately twice as many airplanes. I can not give the proper explanation for this variance. If the Navy planes cost no more than those used by the Army, then the natural answer to the question is that more money will be expended for salaries and upkeep than is contemplated in the Army bill. Notwithstanding this fact, I am perfectly willing to vote for the legislation, as I feel sure this is the beginning of a policy which will cause all the people of the United States to soon recognize the value of this branch of national defense.

I have been a strong advocate of aircraft before I became a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, and it is my opinion that in 50 years from now there will be far more money expended each year for aircraft than in any other branch of our national defense.

Mr. STEPHENS. I mean those figures were given to us.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PATTERSON].

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, during the World War and since that time the aircraft policy of the great United States has been a haphazard one to say the least. Millions and billions of dollars have been spent of the taxpayers' money, and while some results have been achieved, no definite policy has yet been evolved, and there has been much criticism on the part of the press and the public on account of this fact.

The bill now before us is really the first step toward a definite program that gives some promise of real accomplishment and a settled policy.

The Navy Department now has approximately 600 airplanes in more or less serviceable condition. This bill proposes to increase that number to at least 1,000 planes in a period of five years. Altogether the construction of 1,650 airplanes is provided for. With the 600 now on hand, this would make a total of 2,250 planes at the end of five years. But the life of an airplane is about three years. Next year 200 of the 600 airplanes now on hand will be ready for the scrap heap, and at the end of the five years provided for the experts figure that the Navy Department will have but 1,000 machines remaining in serviceable condition out of the 600 now on hand and the 1,650 to be procured under the provisions of the pending legislation.

The average cost of a Navy airplane is $50,000. Therefore in five years the 1,650 machines provided for will have cost approximately $85,000,000, but the Government will have 1,000 up-to-date, serviceable airplanes to show for the expenditure of this apparently large sum instead of the 600 nondescript craft that our aviators are now risking their lives and limbs with in their endeavor to have Uncle Sam maintain his supremacy in the air. The average cost for new airplanes during the five years will be something over $10,000,000 a year. Under the present system we are spending nearly as much as that and the increased cost of maintenance and personnel will not be much greater than at present.

The plan presented by the Naval Affairs Committee and the Navy Department is a comprehensive and progressive policy and has only been adopted and given to Congress after a most careful study and investigation and most exhaustive hearings. The plan first presented to the committee was a much more ambitious and pretentious one. It involved the expenditure of at least $250,000,000 covering a five-year period, but early in the hearings the members of the committee balked at any such contemplated expenditures, and the officials of the Navy Department were told in plain terms that the Congress would not sanction such a program, and they were instructed to present a plan that would give the Navy 1,000 serviceable airplanes at the end of five years at a cost not to exceed $100,000,000. As a result, the plan now before you was worked out and a careful analysis will show that it is both practical and economical when all the circumstances are considered. The details of the five-year program are fully explained in the provisions of the proposed legislation and the accompanying report, and it is not necessary to repeat them at this time.

The cost of these 1,000 new up-to-date airplanes at the end of the five-year program will about equal that of two modern battleships or five new scout cruisers. The cost will equal that of the two airplane carriers—the Saratoga and Lexington—now being completed and which will carry one-fifth of the number of airplanes in the service of the Navy. The others will be distributed at the various air stations on the east and west coasts and in our island possessions and among the various vessels of the Atlantic and Pacific Fleets. It will comprise a virile and mobile means of defense and offense if necessary, and will provide a strong argument of insurance against attack by any nation that may cast covetous eyes upon the five hundred billions of wealth possessed by the United States.

We thought the World War would be the end of war, but will it be our last war? The rumblings and mutterings in Europe and Asia and the actual strife in progress in some countries prove to us that we have not yet reached the millennium; and while it is not probable, it is still possible that a conflagration will be started overnight that we can not escape from. I am not pessimistic, and I hope that our country may never be involved again in the horrors of another conflict, but it is not difficult for one to visualize a struggle for possession of supremacy of the Pacific Ocean; and should that ever come, I for one want to see my country prepared to defend our shores, and I think we are all agreed that an adequate air force would prove one of the most valuable auxiliaries to our fleet and land forces. With 1,000 serviceable airplanes in the Navy we could defend the Canal Zone, Hawaii, Guam, the Philippines, and our eastern and western coasts, and the cost of establishing such a force would be one-tenth of the cost of the interest we are now paying on our national debt.

We have now not nearly enough airplanes in the Canal Zone or in the Hawaiian Islands to properly defend those integral outposts of our country. While the land defenses are adequate and almost impregnable, with proper support in the air, still the fact remains that we have too few planes in service at those strategic points, and the character of the airplanes in service in Hawaii is actually shameful. On a visit there last summer one of the aviators located at that post told me that they never got any of the new airplanes, but that all the aircraft discarded on the mainland was shipped to them, and that some of it was obsolete and almost unfit for use. Such conditions should not prevail at any of the naval stations of the richest country on earth, and it is possible that had there been proper aircraft located at Pearl Harbor when the experimental flight was made last year from California to Honolulu that there would not have been the near tragedy that there was.

The other item of importance in this bill is the authorization that is sought for the construction of two superdirigibles to take the place of the wrecked Shenandoah and the Los Angeles at a cost of $8,000,000 for service on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. These airships would undoubtedly be located at the present naval air station at Lakehurst, N. J., where we already have a plant investment of $6,000,000, and at the naval air station at San Diego. The matter of policy as to whether the Government wishes to continue its experiments in providing dirigibles as scout cruisers of the air is involved in this authorization.

When the Shenandoah was wrecked by a terrific storm over Ohio last fall with the loss of 14 officers and men of its gallant crew, a cry of horror went up over the land at the fearful sacrifice of life. Terrible as that disaster was we forgot for the moment that every year we are sacrificing 24,000 lives by the careless and reckless manner in which we operate our automobiles. The heroes who lost their lives in the wreck of the Shenandoah sacrificed themselves as pioneers in the science of aviation and should be accorded the same glory as the men who have gone to their death in the development of the submarine and the other component parts of our Navy. Apparently we can not progress without the sacrifice of life and treasure and the only reward for such sacrifice seems to be the enshrining of those who make the sacrifice in the hearts and memory of the citizenship of a grateful country.

We have been privileged to live in an age of progress during the last half century. We have seen the telephone, wireless telegraphy, and radio communication established and the dream of Jules Verne portrayed in Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea realized in the perfection of the submarine. We have also witnessed the satire of Darius Green and His Flying Machine turned into substantial truth with the marvelous development of the heavier-than-air planes. We all remember the experiments with the Holland submarine boat and can still hear the jibes cast at Professor Langley and the Wright brothers for attempting to emulate the birds of the air. But the modern type of the V submarine and the wonderful progress made in airplanes in recent years only go to show that the dreams of the past are the realities of the present. Why should we not make similar progress with dirigibles? This art is only in the experimental stage and the great United States should not lag behind in the development of what promises to be the safest and quickest means of transportation in the future. We should not be dismayed by disasters such as befell the Shenandoah. Great Britain, Germany, Italy, and France are going ahead with the construction of dirigible airships and it is the unanimous opinion of the members of the Naval Affairs Committee that this country should continue with this work until it is conclusively proved whether giant airships are impracticable. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

CONSTRUCTION AND PROCUREMENT OF AIRCRAFT AND AIRCRAFT EQUIPMENT IN THE NAVY AND MARINE CORPS

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, for the first time in our history we are laying before the Congress a comprehensive Navy air program. If this meets with approval, is authorized, and carried out the United States will have upon completion of this program a Navy air equipment and a trained personnel fairly equal to that of any nation in the world.

The building program extends over a five-year period and comprises every character of plane to constitute a completely balanced schedule to meet all requirements of fleets at sea and at the shore stations.

Aviation has now become such an indispensable factor both in conjunction with the fleets at sea and at the shore stations that longer delay in providing adequately for this arm of the service is to imperil the entire strength of the national defense.

The Navy now, as always heretofore, constitutes our first line; it is the first to guarantee the peace, as it is the first to meet the enemy in war.

The building program has been in contemplation by the Navy Department and has been considered from time to time by the House Committee on Naval Affairs since the conclusion of the Conference on Limitation of Naval Armament in 1922. It was initiated by the Bureau of Aeronautics of the Navy.

While for these years the necessity for developing our naval air program has been apparent to the Navy and to those acquainted with naval matters, the time has been inopportune for its consideration. Our people were burdened with war taxation and the subsequent period of commercial fluctuations and instability following the Great War. Vast sums of money must be provided for the care of those who physically suffered in the war and for their dependents; for husbanding or salvaging, as the case may be, many of the activities we put on foot as parts of the war program and of undoing much that tested the genius and purse of the Nation. Our whole commercial interests reorganized to meet the needs of war must be again reorganized to meet the needs of peace. These things took time and money. Inflation, so far as we felt it, and instability, which we all felt for a period, had to be met and remedied. In fact, we must have breathing time. A well-organized and wisely administered policy of economy in Government expenditures paved the way to successive reductions in taxation, until now we are in a position to take fair measurement of the future.

All this time—some four years—the Navy has felt the necessity, imperative necessity, of enlarging and strengthening its Air Service for the welfare of the Nation.

With commendable appreciation that the funds to meet this expense must in final analysis come from the people, it patriotically and without a murmur waited until the time was fairly opportune to advance this construction program.

The sum to meet this proposition is not at all staggering; there is nothing overwhelming about it; it can be carried out without the least feeling of financial distress.

The only reason I recounted the immediate after-war condition is that while this war burden was bearing down it was not the part of good judgment to add greater burden at the time. The breathing time had to come.

Now, the war burden is in a great measure lifted and we are prepared to go on.

This expenditure is and will be over and above the regular upkeep of the Navy, for it is adding a new right arm, so to speak—one that strikes and must strike quick and hard should emergency occur.

THE PROGRAM OF CONSTRUCTION—AIRPLANES

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, not exceeding 235 airplanes are to be constructed; these with their spare parts and equipment to cost not to exceed the sum of $12,285,000. These are in addition to the 78 airplanes costing $3,300,000, provision for which is made in the regular Navy appropriation bill now in conference in the Senate and House. These latter are to equip two great airplane carriers, the Lexington and Saratoga, now nearing completion. The planes will cost approximately $41,000 each, while the 235 will cost approximately $52,000 each. A word of explanation is necessary as to the cost of these $52,000 planes. These will each have a fully equipped engine in addition to the one installed, plus 25 per cent spare parts for each engine, plus 25 per cent structural spare parts, making practically a double-life airplane.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, not to exceed 313 planes, together with spare parts and equipment as above described, to cost not to exceed the sum of $16,223,750.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, not to exceed 335 planes, together with spare parts and equipment as above described, to cost not to exceed the sum of $17,582,500.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, not to exceed 357 planes, together with spare parts and equipment as above described, to cost not to exceed the sum of $18,941,250.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931, not to exceed 374 planes, together with spare parts and equipment as above described, to cost not to exceed the sum of $20,046,250.

This makes 1,614 planes for the entire five-year program at a cost of $85,078,750. Thereafter a regular yearly program of construction is laid down of not to exceed 335 planes at a cost not to exceed $17,476,250.

This entire construction program is thrown open to full and fair competitive bids by manufacturers of airplanes throughout the country. It is reserved, however, that the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to build at any navy yard or naval factory any of the aircraft, spare parts, or equipment herein authorized should it reasonably appear that the persons, firms, or corporations, or the agents thereof, bidding for the construction of any of said aircraft, spare parts, or equipment have entered into any combination, agreement, or understanding the effect, object, or purpose of which is to deprive the Government of fair, open, and unrestricted competition in letting contracts for the construction of any of said aircraft, spare parts, or equipment; or should it reasonably appear that any persons, firm or corporation, or the agents thereof, being solely or peculiarly in position to manufacture or furnish the particular type of design of aircraft, spare parts, or equipment required by the Navy, in bidding on such aircraft, spare parts, or equipment have named a price in excess of cost of production plus a reasonable profit. This is a safeguard against collusion or combination on the part of producers should such be attempted. To some this may sound like a big program, but it is not when we come to take account of loss and deterioration.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I would like to ask the gentleman what is the life of these planes? At the end of your five-year program you will have 1,000 planes?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. How many of the planes you build the first year will be in existence and efficient at the end of the five years?

Mr. MILLER. Probably none, because the life of an airplane is usually about three years.

Mr. LINTHICUM. This program is entirely for the Navy; is that correct?

Mr. MILLER. That is right.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Then the Army will bring in a program of its own?

Mr. MILLER. Yes; that is my understanding.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. May I say right there that the Military Affairs Committee has reported a bill containing the Army's five-year program?

Mr. LINTHICUM. How many airplanes does that program call for?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. It calls for a program which will bring the equipment of the Army up to 2,000 planes.

Mr. MILLER. In connection with the inquiry made by the gentleman from Maryland, I call attention to the fact that these 1,614 airplanes are not all delivered at one time; they come from year to year. The planes delivered in 1927 will be, probably to a great proportion, lost, damaged, or obsolete when the delivery is made in the final year of 1932. The loss and deterioration of airplanes is enormous. These are the most fragile, delicate, and sensitive of all naval or military equipment, the most difficult to handle, and the most perishable in action. No one can foretell what will be the fate of both pilot and machine when it bounds off a catapult at sea or takes the air in a gale when it leaves a shore station. True, the science of aviation is advancing, and advancing rapidly, but the inevitable hazard is ever present every instant the machine is in the air.

We know the sea, we know it in its hours of tranquillity and peace; we know it also in its hours of fury; we know it in all its moods; we have dealt with it for 3,000 years, but we do not know the air. In aviation we are dealing with an element at once sensitive, untrustworthy, and unknown. Men from experience have learned to turn a ship head on into a gale or run before or quartering the wind, not so with the airplane. The "twister" simply tests the ability of the mariner; it is fatal to the air pilot.

Time will come when the pilots of the sea and the air will meet conditions with equal confidence and equal assurance, but that time has not yet come. Taking into consideration this condition and the consequent loss, the policy we hope to adopt for the Navy is to have 1,000 useful planes at all times in the Naval service exclusive of those necessary for training the Naval Reserve.

THE DISTRIBUTION ASHORE AND AFLOAT

At the close of the fiscal year June 30, 1926, we will have as near as can be ascertained 638 planes in the naval service, of them 292 will be ashore and 346 afloat.

Based upon the experience of the Navy "the mortality tables" of aviation and the "life expectancy" of machines, we will have this picture of the future.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, we will have in the service, at the beginning of the year 292 ashore, 346 afloat, in all 638; loss during the year 98 ashore, 115 afloat, in all 213, leaving a total of 425 useful planes. Additions during the year 78 for the Lexington and Saratoga, and by this bill 235, so that on June 30, 1927, we will have 738 planes, of which 314 will be ashore and 424 afloat, a net increase for the year of 100.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, at the beginning of the year 314 ashore, 424 afloat, total 738; loss during the year 105 ashore, 141 afloat, in all 246, leaving a total of 492 useful planes. Additions during the year by this bill 136 ashore, 177 afloat, in all 313, so that on June 30, 1928, we will have 805 planes of which 345 are ashore and 460 afloat, net increase for the year of 67.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, at the beginning of the year we will have 345 ashore and 460 afloat, in all 805; loss during the year 115 ashore and 153 afloat, in all 268; leaving a total of 537 useful planes. Additions during the year by this bill 164 ashore and 171 afloat, in all 335, so that on June 30, 1929, we will have 872 planes, of which 394 will be ashore and 478 afloat, a net increase for the year of 67.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, at the beginning of the year we will have 394 ashore and 478 afloat; in all, 872. Losses during the year, 131 ashore and 159 afloat; in all, 290, leaving a total of 582 useful planes. Additions during the year by this bill, 171 ashore and 186 afloat; in all, 357, so that on June 30, 1930, we will have 939 planes, of which 434 will be ashore and 505 afloat, a net increase for the year of 67.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931, at the beginning of the year we will have 434 planes ashore and 505 afloat; in all, 939. Losses during the year, 145 ashore and 168 afloat; in all, 313, leaving a total of 626 useful planes. Additions during the year by this bill, 206 ashore and 168 afloat; in all, 374, so that on June 30, 1931, we will have 1,000 planes, of which 495 will be ashore and 505 afloat, a net increase for the year of 61.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and succeeding years, at the beginning of the year we will have 495 planes ashore and 505 afloat; in all, 1,000. Losses during the year, 165 ashore and 168 afloat; in all, 333, leaving a total of 667 useful planes. Additions during each year by this bill, 165 ashore and 168 afloat; in all, 333, so that on June 30, 1932, and at the close of each succeeding fiscal year thereafter we will have 1,000 planes, of which 495 will be ashore and 505 afloat. The stabilized number will have been obtained and no increase will follow.

The airplanes afloat will be carried on battleships, cruisers, airplane carriers, and tenders. Battleships, of which we have 18, will carry three airplanes each. Authorization is asked by H. R. 10503 to construct catapults on the New York, Texas, Florida, Utah, Arkansas, and Wyoming during the fiscal year beginning June 30, 1926, and authorization will be asked for like equipment on the remaining 12 from time to time as the production of planes under the program proceeds. Cruisers of the second line, of which we have 11, light cruisers of the first line, of which we have 10, light cruisers of the second line, of which we have 11, will all in time be similarly equipped. Aircraft carriers of the first line, of which we will soon have 2, with a capacity of 72 to 120 planes each, and of the second line 1, with a capacity of 30, will, together with destroyers and submarines, absorb the afloat quota. The principal shore stations are at Pensacola, Coco Solo, Pearl Harbor, San Diego, Hampton Roads, and at the Marine Corps aviation stations at Hatt, Quantico, Guam, and other stations.

LIGHTER-THAN-AIR DIRIGIBLES

Provision is made in the bill for the construction of two rigid airships of approximately 6,000,000 cubic feet gas volume each, at a total not to exceed $8,000,000; these to be constructed under competitive bids or by the Navy at its yards, according as the Secretary of the Navy shall deem to be in the best interests of the Government.

The value of this class of airships as adjuncts of the fleets for long-distance scouting is now acknowledged throughout the world. These ships will be designed to carry their own protection of guns up to 4-inch caliber, machine guns, bombs, torpedoes, and all modern equipment.

The bill also provides for the construction of one experimental metal-clad airship of approximately 1,200,000 cubic feet gas volume, at a cost not to exceed $300,000. It must be understood that this is an experimental ship pure and simple to test the possibilities of this form of construction for which engineers of long experience and acknowledged ability claim great advantages. The Los Angeles, the only airship now of the Navy, constructed in Germany and coming to us under the treaty of Versailles, can not now or ever be used for military purposes nor even for training military personnel. It is closed to every war use.

The helium-gas plants of the Government are of sufficient capacity to furnish all of that substance that this lighter-than-air program will require.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. As I understand, at the end of the five-year period there will be 1,000 planes?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. As I understand, the committee is figuring on a plane having a life of three years. Has the committee done anything to assure the continuity of the personnel, which will have charge of the construction and design of these planes?

Mr. MILLER. Personnel in charge of construction and design?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Exactly.

Mr. MILLER. No; there is no provision in this bill for personnel in charge of construction and design. It is provided it shall be let to competitive contracts, but if there is any collusion or any irregularities among the bidders then the Secretary of the Navy can build them at the navy yards.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Of course, they will be constructed on designs approved by naval officers.

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. May I interrupt to say that at Philadelphia we have an aircraft factory and also a navy yard capable of building this aircraft, if necessary?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Yes; I know that:

THE PERSONNEL

Mr. MILLER. To properly operate, equip, and maintain this air program calls for a substantial number of officers and men; however, there is no thought of increasing the present number of officers and enlisted men of the Navy. The bill provides for creating the titles and ranks of naval aviator, aviation pilot, and naval aviation observer, and prescribes the qualifications of each.

The bill also provides that where a line officer of the Navy is detailed to command a Navy aviation school, a Navy air station, or a Navy air unit, organized for flight tactical purposes, he shall be a naval aviator, and when detailed to command an aircraft carrier or aircraft tender he shall be a naval aviator or a naval aviation observer.

The provisions that not less than 30 per cent of the total number of aviation pilots shall be enlisted men must commend itself to every Member of this body. That provision, in my judgment, has exceptional merit, as it gives every enlisted man in this branch of the service something to which he can look forward if he proves himself.

Aviation is an expensive branch of the service, expensive not only in dollars and cents but expensive in human life. It is inherently hazardous, and for that reason, if for no other, it attracts to it the daring and adventurous young men of to-day as does no other arm of the service. It is fitted for this class of young men in which America abounds.

Let me say that this program is moderate and conservative, yet sufficiently large to meet the requirements of this indispensable branch of the Navy. It reasonably meets the national demands.

There are those who would greatly increase this program. There are those who advance the idea that to this branch alone, if sufficiently large, could be intrusted the entire national defense. To my mind such would be the most dangerous adventure in which this country has ever engaged. Only an enthusiast would advocate such a policy, and an enthusiast is a dangerous man to follow; he lacks the stability, the poise, the conception of opposing factors and means that makes him at once unreliable in shaping those basic policies upon which depends not only the public welfare but our national existence. To my mind wars at sea will continue to be fought by ships and wars on land will continue to be fought by men, aided, armed, and supported by all those devices which the human mind has fashioned and put to use.

No one need be alarmed as to this program; it is needless to say we are not challenging competition of other nations; we are doing only such things, adopting such safeguards as a sensible people ought to do and ought to adopt for their own protection.

I have had timid people, people afraid, write me, as undoubtedly they have written many of you, my colleagues, depreciating the Navy, the Army, and everything contributing to or even associated with the national defense. These people live or think they live the higher life. I do not get their angle of things, nor do I believe it profitable to spend much time trying to get it. These people never mix in war or in any kind of military activity, except among themselves or from the house-tops at long range. I can not say they annoy anybody, for nobody pays any attention to them. They are simply useless. Otherwise than in the exalted zone of ethical conception in which they move they are purposeless, and they live and pass unnoticed and unappreciated by those who have to do with the practical affairs of life.

In this bill my thought is of the Navy, that great arm of the national service whose duty and purpose are to protect all the people if war should ever come again—protect the virile and the puerile, the good and the bad, and alike the just and the unjust. [Applause.]

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GAMBRILL].

Mr. GAMBRILL. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, speaking as a new Member of the House, without experience in naval matters, and as the junior member of the House Committee on Naval Affairs, I am, however, familiar enough with legislation and the proceedings in legislative bodies to know that if one be a seeker after publicity the surest way to obtain that publicity is through sensational statements. While the temptation is ever present to seek this publicity, my viewpoint and thoughts are naturally influenced by the judicial judgment and temperament of the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs, over whose deliberation there presides the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], whose knowledge and understanding of naval affairs commands my highest respect and admiration, and who is ably supported in the committee by the ranking member on the Democratic side, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON], who brings to our consideration of all naval matters a fine, vigorous, and analytical mind. [Applause.]

Thirty years ago the skeptical world treated with scorn and derision the prophecy that man would at some time conquer the air as he had the earth and seas. With supercilious minds we ridiculed the hopes and experimentations of Dr. Samuel P. Langley and his flying machine. We accepted him as a scientific man of great ability whose imagination was disturbed, and as one who relied upon fancies as if they were realities.

Unmeasured and unrestrained was the condemnation heaped upon the War Department for having allotted in 1898 and 1899 two sums of $25,000 each to defray the expenses of Doctor Langley in his experimentations with a heavier-than-air plane, which, we were told, was to defy all known laws of gravity and rise in the air.

Within a few years after Doctor Langley had failed in his attempts to fly such a plane there flashed across an amazed and startled world the surprising and almost unbelievable news that two unknown American mechanics from Dayton, Ohio, the Wright brothers, had taken a heavier-than-air craft to the sand dunes of North Carolina and had risen in the air. Great was the pride of all Americans in the knowledge that American genius and the indomitable spirit and creative minds of two American mechanics had solved a problem which had baffled and frustrated the scientific world since the dawn of history. Even then no one would have dared to prophesy that within a space of twenty-odd years aircrafts would have become an integral part of our military and naval defense and be a factor in commerce and rapid communication.

Time and events move on to their ultimate ends, and to-day we have under consideration H. R. 9690, intended to provide legislation for a five-year program of aviation for the Navy and Marine Corps, which, if approved, as it should be, will involve an annual outlay of $30,400,000 for a period of five years, or a total of about $150,000,000, for the construction and maintenance of aircraft. And, gentlemen, why should your consideration be asked for this measure? Yesterday the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POW], in addressing the House in favor of House Resolution 199, providing for the consideration of H. R. 9690, said he would support this legislation reluctantly, as it denoted a preparation for war.

I am not attempting to quote the language of the gentleman from North Carolina, as his remarks do not appear in the RECORD of the proceedings of yesterday.

If I have correctly interpreted the motives of my associates on the Committee on Naval Affairs, this legislation, for a total of 1,000 planes in 1931 and thereafter, has been recommended not for the purpose of offensive action or exploitation but solely as a measure of defense. [Applause.]

It is true—unfortunately so—that the world is not sufficiently emerged from savagery nor civilized enough to regard itself secure from conflict.

If I know anything about the temper and feeling of the people of our country, it is that they wish to dwell in peace with all the world.

For purposes of conquest or aggression we do not need now, nor shall we ever need, a regiment of soldiers, a battleship, or a bombing plane, but we possess within the boundaries of these United States great treasures—not merely great wealth, but an industrial and political life, and an economic organization which must be preserved. These alone are well worth defending, but their loss would be trivial compared with the infinitely greater disaster—the destruction of our peculiarly American institutions, the forcible submergence of our American ideals and beliefs. [Applause.]

Armed conflict with any nation must be avoided, save at the sacrifice of our honor, and no one should attempt to minimize the evils of combat between the countries of the world. It ought to be the hope of all that war—cruel, destructive, and demoralizing war—may by some international tribunal or understanding be forever outlawed. [Applause.]

Thus, with no idea of aggression, or even a desire to emulate any other nation in their military activities or plans, it is our duty, and we would be recreant to that duty did we not provide such a defense as will secure for us protection against all possible eventualities and keep that defense at the highest point of efficiency, always bearing in mind, of course, that the historic tradition of the United States is to maintain military forces only for defense and to keep these forces subordinate to the civil government.

We have witnessed in this country within the past few years an uncommon and unwonted agitation and discussion regarding our alleged lack of aircraft development and our failure to accept aircraft as a vital military arm. Whether these criticisms are unfair or justified, it is difficult for the average person to determine; the divergence of opinion has been so marked that the truth can hardly be ascertained. Some contend we are defenseless and are without adequate aircrafts and are at the mercy of any power that might desire to attack us. Others contend we are so geographically situated that we are immune from any attacks in the air. Personally, I have no patience with the sensation seeker, who would have us believe that other nations are forming powerful air armies for assaults upon the United States, and that within a generation we will have to face "yellow hordes with wings, trying to rob us of our possessions."

It is difficult to conceive of a more certain provocation for war than to accept such propaganda as having foundation in fact, and to build up a huge military machine which would in time dominate the civilian authority and make us a militaristic nation with the ever-present incentive for exploitation. It is true we are living in a time of great international uncertainty, and the readjustment of political thoughts and ancient standards of government. Many of the old autocratic monarchies and governments, which have existed for centuries, have passed away, and in their place have come social thoughts and ideas which are as yet unstabilized.

Out of the great World War and the animosities and distrusts created, there have come blind social forces, which, it seems, would weave around the world a tangle of inequality and injustice, of hatred and suspicion, of distrust and dissatisfaction. We are undergoing in the world a period of readjustment and reconstruction, and these complex and perplexing problems which have come to the world may require years of patience, conciliation, and restraint before the solution can be found.

Only a few days ago a member of the Russian Soviet Government, Leon Trotsky, delivered an address in Moscow in which he proclaimed our country as a capitalistic, imperialistic Nation, which he bade that Russia should strike down. Such utterances should make us reflect on the perilous time in which we live, but should not lead us into intemperate action.

It is admittedly true that we are a self-contained country, having within our boundaries all the resources of foods and raw materials which make life possible. We have no designs on any nation of the world, and can best point the way out of the maze of bewilderments by letting the world understand that while we are prepared to defend what we have and have no tribute to pay, we will not be the aggressor. It has been in this spirit and in this conception of our duties that your Committee on Naval Affairs has submitted this program, which, while not embracing the full recommendations of the Navy Department officials and the Bureau of Aeronautics, is so far comprehensible with their plans as to be acceptable to them.

Yesterday the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] gave the House full and comprehensive statements of the details of this legislation, its purposes and objective, and it would be unwise for me to tax your patience with a repetition of the facts, but it may be of interest to compare the five-year program as originally proposed by the Navy Department with that finally adopted by the committee.

The original five-year program started with the fiscal year 1927 and took into account all of the planes purchased or to be purchased with the money appropriated for the fiscal year 1926. Congress appropriated for the aviation branch of the Navy in 1926, $18,890,000; an appropriation of $14,790,000 in cash and an authorization to enter into contracts to the extent of $4,100,000. This appropriation for 1926 included maintenance as well as new construction; maintenance embracing the purchase of instruments, experiments and development work, the purchase of helium, the construction of catapulta, repairs of aircraft, and improvements at air stations.

Starting, then, with 638 planes, which the Navy Department estimates it will have on hand by July 1, 1926, the department proposed that authorization be given for a total of 775 planes in 1927, 865 in 1928, 1,048 in 1929, 1,150 in 1930, and 1,248 in 1931. Under this original program the cost of aircraft construction would have been for the fiscal year—

1928	22,051,250
1929	29,340,000
1930	20,581,250

or a total of $133,744,750 for the five years. Embraced in this program was the construction in 1929 of a 23,000-ton aircraft carrier. Thereafter the cost for new construction would have been about $27,000,000 annually, and under this original proposal there would have been in 1931, 1,248 serviceable planes.

The maintenance cost under the original program would have been—

1927	$12,295,000
1928	13,420,000
1929	13,395,000
1930	15,070,000

Thereafter $14,420,000 would have been required annually for maintenance, the total for the five years for maintenance being $70,400,000, and for new construction and maintenance, under the five-year program, $204,144,750, exclusive of personnel.

It may be stated with reasonable approximation that the pay of the officer personnel in the aeronautic service is about $3,100,000 annually as of to-day, the pay of the enlisted personnel being about $3,589,000 annually.

All of these figures were modified considerably when the second and third programs were proposed, which provided, among other things, for the elimination of a new aircraft carrier for 1929, but it is not necessary that I should burden the House with a recital of the details of these proposals, as my purpose will be accomplished by a comparison of the original program with that adopted by the committee and provided for in the bill now under consideration.

It may be said parenthetically, that since 1922 the Navy Department has been recommending a fixed program for aviation, but its program did not meet with the approval of the Director of the Budget. The fact that the department has sought since 1922 to secure the adoption of a comprehensive program ought to be a complete and conclusive refutation of criticisms made that the department was derelict in its duty and without a comprehension of the necessity for the use of aircraft as a naval arm.

The program as finally adopted by your committee calls for a total of 1,000 planes in 1931 and thereafter. Starting out with 638 planes in 1926, this legislation will authorize an appropriation for a total of 738 planes in 1927, 805 in 1928, 872 in 1929, 939 in 1930, and 1,000 in 1931.

The cost for new construction and maintenance being as follows:

	New construction	Maintenance
1927	$12,295,000	$11,545,000
1928	16,223,750	12,020,000
1929	17,582,500	12,750,000
1930	18,941,250	13,070,000
1931	20,046,250	13,520,000

This legislation would authorize an appropriation for a total of 1,614 new planes to be constructed during a period of five years, the cost of construction being $85,078,750, and maintenance, $62,905,000, or a total of $147,983,750, as compared with a cost of construction and maintenance under the original program of $204,144,750.

As set forth in the legislation, to maintain this strength of 1,000 serviceable planes there would have to be procured each year 333 planes, at an annual cost for construction of $17,476,250, with a maintenance cost of $13,870,000. In this connection it should be borne in mind that the life of a plane is about three years, so there must be a replacement each year of one-third of the planes.

The increase in personnel, and the cost thereof, will now be stated, based on the operation of two-thirds of the planes, it being estimated that one-third of the planes will be in reserve or undergoing repairs or alterations.

Beginning with 1927, the number of officer pilots, ground officers, warrant officers, enlisted pilots, and enlisted men will have to be increased each year of the five-year period, until, in 1931, the total number of each will be—

Officer pilots.....	802
Ground officers.....	90
Warrant officers.....	44
Enlisted pilots.....	344
Enlisted men.....	5, 375

And we have in service now:

Officer pilots.....	400
Ground officers.....	147
Warrant officers.....	24
Enlisted pilots.....	104

The Navy is allowed now 3,842 enlisted men, but is about 2,000 under the allotment because there are not sufficient planes to require the services of the full complement.

The annual increase in cost for personnel will be about $471,000.

For comparison with this five-year program, which your committee recommends, it might not be without interest to state that during the past six years the expenditures under the appropriation for naval aviation have been—

1920.....	$22, 509, 704. 00
1921.....	17, 383, 967. 11
1922.....	14, 231, 079. 25
1923.....	14, 655, 348. 28
1924.....	14, 037, 397. 91
1925.....	15, 135, 000. 00

These figures, of course, embrace maintenance as well as new construction.

The distribution of these 1,000 planes will be for the determination of the Navy Department, according to the necessities or requirements of the service, but it may be said, generally, that the program calls for the assignment of 505 afloat, of this number 120 would be placed on the aircraft carrier Saratoga, 110 on the Lexington, and these figures represent their carrying capacity. On the battleships there would be 54; the cruisers, 30; tenders, 48; Langley, 12; and the balance would be in reserve.

Of the 495 planes ashore, a large number would be assigned to Coco Solo and Pearl Harbor, probably 108 at the former and 160 at the latter.

In addition, there would be a large number at the training station at Pensacola.

The importance of our having a definite plan of aircraft construction as an auxiliary to the naval forces is such a self-evident proposition that it need not be argued. The use of aircraft in the great World War has demonstrated that, should armed conflict come again, the mastery of the air would, in all probability, mean the mastery of the seas and land.

The day of the battleships and cruisers has not passed. They will continue to be for years to come our main reliance from assaults upon our coasts by a hostile fleet, but without the aid of aircraft our fleet would be at such a disadvantage that one would not want to contemplate the consequences of such an unequal contest with an enemy fleet adequately supported by this auxiliary.

Therefore the only practical question presented by this bill is: Does it meet the requirements of our Navy as constituting our first line of defense? According to the best-considered judgment of the Navy Department, it does. It is in conformity with the recommendations of the Morrow Board in so far as it relates to a five-year program, and it is in consonance with the conclusions and judgment of every member of the House Committee on Naval Affairs.

There is in this bill authority to appropriate the sum of $8,000,000 to construct two rigid airships of 6,000,000-foot volume each. It is not my purpose to take up the time of the House with an extended discussion of this item of the bill. One approaches the consideration of this item with a certain degree of uncertainty and concern, due largely to the distressing loss of life which came as a result of the destruction of the Shenandoah. Yet it is a striking and outstanding fact that those in charge of the Shenandoah and Los Angeles, including those who survived the disaster to the former, are unqualifiedly and enthusiastically in favor of going ahead, and they feel it would be a confession of weakness and inexcusable timidity should we stop when other nations, not having at their command our knowledge and experience, are going ahead, notably England, which has under construction two rigid airships of 5,000,000 cubic feet capacity.

One has but to recall the history of the submarine and its development, when one disaster followed another, to appreciate that only through perseverance and sacrifice can success be attained.

To my mind one of the outstanding statements heard by your committee was that of Doctor Arnstein, formerly engineer of the Zeppelin Co., of Germany, and now chief engineer of the Goodyear-Zeppelin Corporation of America, a man who designed and constructed or participated in the construction of more than 90 Zeppelin airships. He stated that about 90 Zeppelins were in military use during the four years of the World War, and only 17 were lost by military attack of the Allies and set afire by incendiary projectiles from artillery or airplanes. He further stated that these airships were filled with hydrogen, whereas if helium had been used only a few would have been destroyed.

Furthermore, that in the battle of Skagerrak the Zeppelins reported the approach and formation of the British fleet, and in many other ways were of invaluable assistance to the commander of the German fleet.

It is a matter of record from the official archives of the British Navy that airships were used successfully in conveying American troopships through the dangerous submarine zones, and that no single troopship conveyed by airships was attacked. It is likewise a fact that an airship is far more effective as a scout than a cruiser, due to its speed of between 60 and 90 miles an hour and the superior radius of vision of its observers.

Let me pass on to the broader aspects of this bill and in doing so inject therein a personal note.

For seven years I resided in a foreign land. Those years of exile taught me the more fully to appreciate and understand the boundless possibilities of all those who by the clipping of the threads by fate are privileged to carve their future in this great country of ours.

It is said that "Everyone should love the land of their nativity," and, as the Irishman might add, "Even though he was not born there." [Laughter.] But it is somewhat difficult for one to appreciate the greatness of our life here until one has spent some years in a foreign land, where customs hamper and impede one in attaining the highest rewards and where one's identity is lost amidst the pomp and pageantry of regal aloofness and perverted class distinction.

The rights we have and the ideals which we seek and have secured are well worth preserving at any cost.

We are, of course, in the inception of aircraft development. It is a subject which fascinates and enthalls the imagination, and while we need not measure our duty by the activities of other nations, we should not be unmindful of what they are doing.

Measured by any standard which you accept, this bill should receive the hearty indorsement of the House.

It is beyond the prophecy of anyone to predict how far the art of flying will change our accepted means of transportation and communication; the possibilities are almost beyond conception. That it has become one of the most vital and important means of defense and offense is undisputed. And whatever tends to make us more secure in the perpetuation of our liberties and political ideals and institutions should receive the hearty and unstinted support of every Member of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to my attentive and intelligent young colleague, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. UPDIKE]. [Applause.]

Mr. UPDIKE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, after my election to Congress the Members of this House honored me by assigning me as a member of the Naval Affairs Committee. I think that it is a great honor, indeed, to be permitted to serve on this important committee, and it is highly complimentary in the Members of this House in placing their confidence in me. I want to say I have enjoyed very much my associations with the members of the committee, especially the good chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BUTLER. [Applause.]

I have been very much interested in the affairs of the Navy and the Marine Corps, being my privilege to serve as an enlisted man with the Sixth Regiment, Seventy-fourth Company Marines, in France. [Applause.] And I have been very patient in my efforts to be of service in this important committee and have missed very few of the committee meetings.

House bill 9690 was drafted to authorize the construction of aircraft in the Navy and Marine Corps and to adjust and define the status of the operating personnel in connection with the Navy and Marine Corps. We had before our committee some of the foremost experts in the world who have made a life study of aviation, our purpose being for a continuing program for the construction of aircraft and aircraft equipment over a definite period. The committee have taken into consideration the necessity and the value of the recommendations given by the Lambert committee and President's Aircraft Board. We have discussed this matter very carefully and have followed their recommendations as far as practicable.

The committee, after holding extensive hearings, deemed it economical to make plans for construction covering a program for a period of five years, which would insure a reasonable peace-time strength and to stimulate the aircraft industry on which our air forces must rest.

The construction provided in this bill included 78 airplanes, the carriers for the Lexington and Saratoga. The total cost of these 78 planes is approximately $3,700,000. It is a fairly well-established fact that the number of airplanes lost during each year is about 33 1/2 per cent; this, however, does not apply to the 78 planes for the carriers, because of the fact that they will be received so late in the year as not to be affected. The airplanes afloat will be carried on battleships, airplane carriers, cruisers, and tenders. Those on shore will be at the naval air stations at Pensacola, Coco Sola, Pearl Harbor, San Diego, and Hampton Roads. Those attached to the Marine Corps aviation will be at Haiti, Quantico, Guam, and other marine stations.

During the five-year program there will have been built 1,614 planes. At the end of the five years, namely, 1931, 1,000 planes will be available and useful. This will finally result in the building of about 333 airplanes per year. After taking out 33 1/2 per cent normal wastage, this would leave a total of 1,000 planes available at the end of the five-year program. Obsolete planes are not to be included in this total number of 1,000 planes. Neither are the airplanes assigned to the Naval Reserve for training purposes. Such planes are very few and are obtained under a special appropriation.

Under the agreement with Germany when we purchased the lighter-than-air ship, known as the Los Angeles, it leaves us in a peculiar status in reference to this particular ship, which can not be used for any other purpose than to train men, and with the loss of our own dirigible, known as the Shenandoah, it leaves our United States Navy without a rigid airship which can be used for military work. The value of the rigid airship is not doubted by any Member of the House. The usefulness for scouting purposes alone would justify the rebuilding of at least one or two of these dirigibles. After careful consideration the committee deem it advisable to authorize the construction of two dirigible airships with approximately 6,000,000 cubic feet capacity each. If we were to construct one single ship alone, it would require all of the developmental and experimental work required for two ships, and I believe that it is sound judgment and economical to construct two ships at the same time, thereby saving several hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The Navy Department believes that it is fairly well equipped for the building of one or both of these ships. It is a well-established fact that these ships can be constructed in the hangar at Lakehurst, N. J., along with the tools and equipment that the Navy Department has available at Philadelphia. It is our belief that they can be built in this country by the United States Government and under the United States flag with American-made material. Private industries, however, will be encouraged to take up the development of this type plane for commercial purposes. I am of personal opinion that the development of lighter-than-air ships has been disregarded, although it has been actively promoted in nearly every other country of importance. We have not used 2 per cent of the total aviation expense in the past 10 years for the development of this type of airplane, and I believe that the development should continue and progress for both commercial and military purposes.

It is our understanding that required bonds to be placed upon the guaranteed construction of satisfactory performance from those who are advocating the metal-clad dirigible before entering into any contract whatsoever. With this assurance, I believe that the United States Government will be well protected in case this type of ship is not a success and will not be of further use to the United States Government for military purposes. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the Shenandoah was built by American manufacturers, with American-made material, in our own workshops, with a capacity of about two and a quarter million cubic feet. This lighter-than-air craft carried a crew for actual operation of about 30 men and officers. In my opinion, for scouting purposes there is no kind of a military machine, including our scout cruisers, which is as valuable as the dirigible. When one takes into consideration the fact that a scout cruiser fully equipped and manned will cost in the neighborhood of $15,000,000 and carries a crew of approximately 250 enlisted men and officers, used for the same practical purposes as the dirigible, one can easily make the comparison, and in case of a national emergency it would be both economical and save a great many lives to operate the dirigible.

The British Government has at this very moment two lighter-than-air craft under construction of 5,000,000 cubic feet, or, in other words, twice the size of the Shenandoah. We propose under this bill to construct two dirigibles of 6,000,000 cubic feet, or three times the size of the Shenandoah. We propose to build these ships by American manufacturers, in American shops, with American-made material and labor. Under this bill the Navy Department can construct one or both of these lighter-than-air craft. However, if it is decided that a commercial firm is to build one of these ships, or both, it is my understanding the contract will be let by competitive bidding. After these are completed they will have the approximate lifting power of 40 per cent of the Shenandoah and will have the sailing radius of approximately 7,500 miles without refueling.

If we are to encourage aviation in the Navy and by commercial firms, we must start a program which is constructive in itself and practical, which will encourage the commercial firms to experiment and build this type of airship.

Under the present bill it is provided that the men who are in charge of the aviation station must be qualified flyers, and the committee has prescribed the number of hours required of actual flying time in the air before an officer can be eligible to command one of these air stations. The committee has also provided that 30 per cent of the aviation forces shall be obtained from the enlisted personnel of the Navy. This will insure under this program no extra cost for additional men to man these airplanes.

During the World War the United States Government had very few, if any, airplanes on the line. This was due to the fact that we had no serviceable airplanes. We had to go into a constructive program of building airplanes at that time, which required a lot of time and the expenditure of large sums of money.

If the gentlemen of this House will accept the program as unanimously reported out of the Naval Affairs Committee, five years from now the Navy Department will have 1,000 useful planes.

I want to take this opportunity to again thank the members of this committee, and especially the chairman, for the time he has allotted me in the presentation of these facts.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKeown].

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I find the opposition does not get very much time. I was supposed to have a little more time.

You will be interested to know that in the Senate of the United States in 1855 Samuel Houston, a Senator of the United States, introduced in the Congress the first resolution I can find anywhere touching the matter of air navigation. On the 24th day of January, 1855, Mr. Houston presented the memorial of Edward D. Tippet, praying the appointment of a committee to examine a method invented by him of navigating the air and an appropriation to enable him to exhibit it, which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. Houston, as you know, bears the distinction of being the only man in American political history who was governor of two States, President of a republic, and a Member of the United States Senate. So the attention of Congress has been called to the question of air navigation as early as 1855. I am indebted to Mr. McMurray, of McAlester, Okla., who called this to my attention.

I am one man in this House who believes in trying to improve air navigation, and I am one man who on the floor of this House during the period of the war undertook to save the United States $320,000,000 when the bill appropriating $640,000,000 was before the House for action, and because I stood alone and was so far in the minority I was not even allowed a chance to raise my voice, and if I had no doubt I would have been charged with being opposed to the war or not being in favor of carrying on the war. I said at that time that $640,000,000 at one time would result in great dissipation of the funds and would not get the proper results, because we did not keep our hands upon the purse strings and advance this money as we obtained results. The history of that matter is water that has gone over the wheel and I do not care to take up the time of the House to talk to you about something that is no doubt more familiar to you than it is to me.

I am not opposed to this program except to this extent. I do not think it is right to come in here with a bill providing for a five-year program. I would be in favor of a two-year program, but, sirs, as long as the President of the United States and the men at the head of the Nation are trying to solve this aircraft proposition, I do not think Congress ought to go ahead and tie itself up in a five-year program.

Gentlemen say, "Oh, we are not appropriating the money; we are only authorizing the appropriation." But, gentlemen, whenever you put an act on the statute books of this country you know what will be the force behind the Appropriations Committee. Here is what ought to be done: You ought to go ahead and put this program on for two years. The Army has a similar bill, a bill for a five-year program. The Army bill does not name the amount of money. I understand from information I have received that the Army planes will cost a great deal less than the planes proposed for the Navy.

Here is what ought to take place: I do not believe in trying to put these two services under one department for the purpose of operation, because I believe you will get better results if you have some competition between the Army and the Navy rather than to put them under one head; but you ought to unify the purchasing for the Navy and Army and the distribution of airplanes. You will have airplanes for the Navy, airplanes for the Army, airplanes for the Coast Guard, airplanes for other departments, and here you have an appropriation or an authorization in this department, and it is just as natural as for water to run down hill for each branch to try and get as much as the others. When you give the Army so many planes the Navy will want that number of planes. When you give the Navy so many planes the Army will want that number of planes. And so it goes. This was illustrated by the statement of our distinguished and beloved Member from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], one whom we all venerate and all love, when he said yesterday that we had airplane carriers, and now we must have the airplanes.

That is what I said one year ago. I said when you get the airplane carriers then you will have to have airplanes to put on the carriers.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman is very much concerned about the possible action of Congress in reference to this particular program stating that naturally appropriations follow after authorizations. It was not later than day before yesterday that the chairman of the great Appropriations Committee said in debate in the House that frequently his committee failed to appropriate under authorizations and would continue to do so. I just want to add that if it develops under the program at any time that the amount of money authorized under the bill is not necessary the Appropriations Committee will have the qualifications and nerve enough not to appropriate it.

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes; but there ought to be a committee of some kind or character to regulate the purchases in the Department of the Navy and the Department of the Army, and some member of the Appropriations Committee of the House and the Finance Committee of the Senate ought to be a member of that committee.

Here is the proposition—I am talking to you now from the standpoint of the American citizen, from the point of the taxpayer—you ought to have a business man who has had experience in paying taxes, who has had experience in getting the money to pay taxes to the Government. You ought to have some man of that kind to hold this in check. I am not opposed to legitimate expenditure for the Army and Navy, but I want to take the opportunity to say to the Naval Committee that you gentlemen have been diligent and faithful, you have gone into these matters thoroughly, but you have to talk and take your position from the standpoint of your experts from the department, and you are guided by them.

But there is another side, that of the taxpayers of this country, and I want to tell you now that you can not rely on expert testimony of these men in the Army and the Navy when it comes to spending money. You can rely upon them for the things that advance national defense—they are trained to understand that—but there ought to be some one familiar with the finances of the country to say when the expenditures should be made.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. Along that line does not the gentleman think that the Naval Affairs Committee possess ability and business knowledge—gentlemen like Mr. BUTLER, Mr. VINSON of Georgia, Mr. McCLINTIC—do not you think that such gentlemen can attend to the business to see that the money is expended properly? Does not the gentleman think that that is the function of the Naval Affairs Committee?

Mr. McKEOWN. I will say that I have a great deal of confidence in the committee, in its personnel; but, on the other hand, the gentleman knows that when you are serving on a committee there is only one side to the proposition—

Mr. STEPHENS. We hear both sides.

Mr. McKEOWN. The committee does not hear the side of the taxpayer.

Mr. STEPHENS. The taxpayer does not know anything about the matter.

Mr. McKEOWN. The committee is in a peculiar position, and for this reason. You are like the Members of Congress, whose duty it is to see that the defense of the country is properly cared for. You resolve a doubt—and you ought to—you resolve a doubt in favor of proper defense rather than in the interest of the taxpayer.

Mr. O'CONNELL of New York. Does not the gentleman think that the taxpayer is represented by the personnel of the committee in the hearings and that they take care of his interests?

Mr. McKEOWN. That is true in a measure, I admit that.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, I know the gentleman wants to be well informed, and he usually is, but let me say that when the committee held hearings on this particular bill we heard some of the largest taxpayers in the country, and they were in no way connected with the Government. We had many of the big taxpayers from Detroit and other places. Each of them was heartily in favor of this program.

Mr. McKEOWN. I grant that is true. Men from Detroit and other cities where they manufacture these airplanes naturally would be interested in seeing the program carried out.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Does not the gentleman think that the great majority of the taxpayers of the country are very well satisfied to have us adopt and put into effect proper measures for the national defense?

Mr. McKEOWN. The taxpayers of this country to-day want proper defenses for this country. That is true. At the same time the taxpayer of this country is impressed with the fact that too much money is being expended on the Army and the Navy of this country. If the gentleman would go out into the country, into the great West and other parts of the Nation, he would find that sentiment prevails, because we have not yet recovered from the effects of the war and we are not yet back where we ought to be. Why not start out on a two-year program. I am here for one to say, as a Member of this House, that when you put a five-year program out under the guise of a program trying to evade the Constitution, which prohibits more than two years' appropriation for the Army, you are not going to get anywhere with it, and the courts will tie you up on that proposition.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It is not an appropriation.

Mr. McKEOWN. Then why do you not bring in a 10-year program for the enlistment of the Army, and see how far you would get in the court with that without any appropriation for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOWREY].

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, my friend and colleague from Maryland [Mr. GAMBRILL] spoke of the utterance yesterday by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POW] in which he spoke of voting for this measure under protest. I can not vote for any military bill except under protest. I must be a nonconformist. In fact, I am not sure but that somebody may call me a pacifist. I believe that I would rather be called a pacifist than fail to do all that I can to encourage at least the spirit of world peace.

About the year 1916 I was on a train out West with a well-known United States Senator. We were discussing the world situation at the time of the World War. I at that time had not gotten into politics and had a good deal of sympathy for my good friend who had. I was suggesting some things in regard to the world situation at that time. Among other things I said that when this war closed the United States would have the greatest opportunity that was ever given to any nation in history for rendering a great service to the world. We would be in position to lead the world in the matter of disarmament, in the matter of cutting down the terrible expense and the terrible consequences that come with militarism and large military establishments.

I said that the United States would be the richest nation in the world, and about the only nation that would not be worn to a frazzle financially and in every other way. Then we would have the opportunity and be in a position to say to the other nations, It is time for all to quit the folly of great military establishments and large expense for armies and navies. [Applause.] And the world would be ready to follow. The Senator fully agreed with me, and we thought we were about to work out a plan to save the world. A little later the United States got into that terrible war. I think we were justified in going into it. In fact, I do not think we could have kept out of it without sacrificing every principle and every purpose for which nations exist. [Applause.] When the war closed and the armistice came I believe a very large proportion of the population of this country was in the state of mind to carry out the idea that was discussed at that time by my Senator friend and myself. I think America was in a position then to lead the world into a very large program of disarmament. Yet more than seven years has passed, and we are seeing increase of armament instead of decrease. This Congress has appropriated nearly three times as much to Army and Navy purposes as was appropriated in the year 1914, and other nations are pursuing a similar policy. After the great "war to end wars" we all enlarge our war preparedness beyond any limits ever known before.

Our great, rich, and influential Republic in its policy of isolation failed to take full advantage of its opportunities. I rejoice in what we have done and in the degree of beneficent leadership that we have exercised. But as we sometimes say in our prayers:

We have done many things we ought not to have done, and left undone many things we ought to have done.

It is now possibly too late for the very best results, but it is not too late to turn our national policies in the right direction. Our Nation may not be able to lead the world out of militarism but it will be tragic if we lead it further into militarism.

When we consider all the fruits of war, the question of finance looks very small. The horrors of the recent world struggle are shocking to contemplate. It meant the destruction of homes, churches, and public buildings; of roads, bridges, and railways; of works of art and institutions of culture—of almost everything worth while which men had taken centuries to produce. Still all this material loss is of far less consequence than the moral and spiritual ruin. There were agonies of body and soul. There were hunger and exposure, sickness and death, broken hearts and broken home circles, trembling souls awaiting dreaded events, and hatreds and prejudices which will take years to abate.

Let me come down, however, on the plane of the material and the secular, and for one more time let us be reminded of the crushing financial burdens which war and the war spirit bring upon our people. Take a few facts and figures.

The administration and payment of pensions for the Civil War have already cost our Government about $7,000,000,000, and it still runs at near $200,000,000 a year with constant demand for increase. Think of what this will be as the years go by and the Government responds to the ever-increasing demands from the soldiers of the World War. Again, this Congress has appropriated more than $1,250,000,000 to the Army and Navy, the Veterans' Bureau, hospitals, pensions, and so forth, all growing out of war or looking toward war. And this does not include what we have paid in the way of interest and principal on our war debts. As a great Englishman once said:

We have only our wars to thank for our great national debt.

Small wonder that our people are crying out against heavy taxation. Our Federal expenses for the current year will reach something like $30 per capita or an average of $150 per family. To this must be added the weight of State, county, and municipal taxation. I have to-day received a letter from a very able lawyer and bank president in my home State. From his letter I quote verbatim:

I know of many in my own country who are to-day carrying a burden of taxation from 7½ to 9 per cent on an assessed valuation, which is higher than the property can be sold for. My own taxes this year have been more money than I have earned from every source. Of course this is exceptional, but the burden on every man engaged in farming and owning much unremunerative lands is great indeed. I have reached the point that I want to see some change, and that quick. We must have it quickly or the rural population of the country will be ruined. Going into cities and centers where wealth is congregated and centralized, one would think we are the richest people in the world. Go then into the country and you must say the agricultural people need relief, and all must admit that, like every injustice and wrong, it will be reflected on those responsible for it.

Now note, please, this is not the whine of some poor, ignorant, prejudiced fellow. It comes from a man who, in my opinion, has few equals in my State for general intelligence, business ability, and legal ability.

When we face a situation like this it is time for us to think long and well before we pass bills adding millions of taxation.

But let us come back to this bill which we have under consideration. I am frank to say that in plans for national defense I believe that just now aviation is the most sane and perhaps in comparison the least expensive. It at least looks better than spending $40,000,000 each for a lot of new battleships. But I am opposed to spending money for either at the rate which this Congress seems disposed to adopt. We talk about disarmament conferences, world courts, and international agreements for the prevention of war, and yet we go on making war preparations the most gigantic that the world has ever seen. We hope for diplomatic movements by which we may prevent war, or by which we shall at least reach agreements for largely diminishing armaments. We all know that arms, munitions, and explosives, airplanes and battleships are being rapidly changed and improved by invention and scientific discovery. We scarcely get one type constructed before it has to give way to something different and supposedly better. Still we adopt our 5 or 10 year programs and appropriate our millions to be paid by our tax-burdened people for war preparedness. There certainly must be a better way. When will we spend our money, energy, and ingenuity to reach successful plans for peace instead of preparations for war?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGUARDIA].

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, it has been suggested that Members have made up their minds on this bill and that argument at this time is futile. That may be the case. Nevertheless, I deem it my duty to present my views, to register my protest, and to at least seek to amend the bill so that the hands of Congress will not be tied for a period of five years.

As to section 3 of the bill dealing with personnel I shall make no comment. That is purely a matter within the Navy and I am quite willing to accept the judgment of the members on that committee. I object to this bill for the simple reason that it authorizes appropriations aggregating $100,000,000 and it ignores totally our experience in the past with the problems of aviation. This bill does not solve the problem. There is nothing in this bill which will eliminate the waste of public funds which we have experienced in the past. We are no further to-day in progress in having learned the lesson of the mistakes of the past than we were the day this House voted the first lump-sum appropriation for aviation of $640,000,000. Since that day we have gone through a war. Since that day we have learned that of the hundreds of millions of dollars spent not a single American fighting plane ever reached the front. I will not dwell upon that at this time. But since the war what have we done? Every man who had anything to do with aviation during the war knew that there was waste, extravagance, duplication, overlapping, and that there was utter lack of cooperation or understanding between the Army and the Navy air services. Since then this Congress has appropriated for Army and Navy air services in the neighborhood of $500,000,000. Yet to-day the gentlemen on the Naval Affairs Committee tell us they have but a few planes that are good and a number that are obsolete and that we really have no complete, up-to-date, efficient fighting, bombing, or observation units. In a few days the Military Affairs Committee will tell us that the Army has no up-to-date, efficient equipment. We know that to be the fact in both cases. We know that $500,000,000 have been injudiciously spent. We know that there has been waste. We know that there has been duplication. We know that there has been inefficiency and incompetency in the spending of this vast amount of money. We know all of this because we have had at least 12 separate and distinct investigations of the subject since the war. These investigations have heard hundreds and hundreds of witnesses, thousands and thousands of pages of testimony have been taken, truck loads of exhibits examined, and every one of them, with the exception of the Morrow Board, have recommended the unification of efforts and procurement of equipment. Yet at this time all of this experience, all of the information gathered by these investigations, are entirely ignored.

The Navy comes in to-day with a building program involving an expenditure of a hundred million dollars and to-morrow the Army will be here with their program, which will be above $300,000,000. But we have no plans of reorganization, no constructive plan for cooperation between the Army and Navy air service. Not even some definite plan of coordinating these two branches are suggested to us. I have repeatedly stated on the floor of this House, beginning in 1919 to this very day, that we will never get the Army and Navy to work together as long as we continue to appropriate millions and millions of dollars and now hundreds of millions of dollars for them to spend according to their own particular views, without regard to what the other is doing.

Why, gentlemen, the distinguished chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, whom we all love and respect, when asked yesterday what is the Army doing on the question of aviation frankly answered, "I don't know." I have asked members of the Military Affairs Committee just previous to the time we commenced discussion of this bill if they knew what the Navy was going to do, and they, too, frankly stated that they did not know. Naturally the Naval Affairs Committee does not know what the Military Affairs Committee is doing in aviation and the Military Affairs Committee does not know what the Naval Committee is doing. Likewise the Army does not know what the Navy is doing and the Navy does not know what the Army is doing. But we know that they are spending millions of dollars, that they are not coordinating, and that they both say they have no equipment to speak of on hand.

Gentlemen, I believe we are making a grave error, a serious mistake, yes, an unpardonable blunder, if we authorize this enormous appropriation and that of the Army before we reorganize the air services of the country. To think that after all we have gone through, after all the mistakes of the past, we are to-day again appropriating in the same old way, heedless of the lessons of the past, is to my mind unbelievable.

The only ray of hope that I see out of all of this discussion and this bill is the statement made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Vinson] when he quoted the testimony of Admiral Moffett, which will be found on page 7158 in the RECORD of yesterday:

A 6,000,000 cubic foot rigid filled with helium can fly at 50 knots speed from the west coast to the Hawaiian Islands with a military load of 43 tons. At 70 knots speed such a ship can arrive in Hawaii with a military load of 34 tons. Again, this airship, which is so essential to our naval needs, can carry six fighting planes weighing a ton and a half each 5,000 nautical miles at a speed of 50 knots and still have a reserve of fuel good for 1,200 miles at the same speed. Inflated with hydrogen, these performances can be bettered by 40 to 60 per cent. We can not close our eyes to such figures and performances.

Why, gentlemen, that indeed is progress. The Navy finally admitting that aviation is absolutely essential and indispensable. Why, I remember not very many years ago, and since the war, when the high officials of the Navy were belittling the value of aviation. I remember not so very long ago when the Navy officials, right in the face of the sinking of battleships, denied the usefulness of aviation and the ability of airplanes to sink battleships. Finally, at this late date, we have admission from the Navy that scouting and observation from the air are absolutely indispensable to the successful operation of the fleet. Ah, gentlemen, even to-day the Navy does not concede the full value of aviation. The Navy even to-day is resisting the complete development of aviation and insists upon the retention of the line battleship. Several gentlemen of the committee yesterday, and I believe also today, stressed the necessity of the battleship, and one gentleman stated that we would continue to build battleships up to the number limited by the Washington disarmament conference. This conservatism on the part of the Navy; this antagonism against new weapons of offense and defense is typical of the customs and habits of the Navy. The Select Committee on Aviation struggled with officials of the Navy Department, and so did other committees, as well as the Military Affairs Committee only a few days ago, and we find the high officials of the Navy strenuously opposing the unification of our governmental air activities, belittling the use and value of aviation, insisting on the retention of the battleship just as in the days of old they resisted and fought all innovations even to the application of steam to vessels of war. Here is a description of Navy officials expressed in 1856 which is surely fitting and appropriate to conditions to-day. I read the following from A Sketch of the Life of Commodore Robert F. Stockton, by Samuel J. Bayard, page 80:

The head of the Navy Department is generally a politician, more solicitous to obtain popularity among the officers than competent to discharge judiciously the functions of his office. He listens, therefore, to the advice of the supernuated officers, who, with professional dogmatism, denounce all novelties and pronounce all innovations dangerous. The application of steam to national ships of war from the first was resisted by many naval officers, and had to encounter many prejudices and much opposition. It was confidently asserted by the old captains that sailing vessels would never be superseded by steam vessels, and that the latter would be worthless except for purposes of transportation.

How applicable that is to-day.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? From whom was the gentleman quoting?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. I was quoting from The Life of Commodore Robert F. Stockton, by Samuel J. Bayard.

The request for $100,000,000 for aviation for the Navy coupled with a policy of the retention of the battleship is inconsistent. But we can not expect, in view of the past, that the Navy will recognize all at once the value of aviation and admit the fading out of the battleship. As the Navy resisted the introduction of steam for war vessels, so to-day it continues in insisting upon the retention of battleships.

As the Navy fought against the development of aviation in 1920, it opposed and fought against the Ericsson propeller in 1840. As the Navy opposes the unification of the Air Service in 1926, it fought and opposed the adoption of the Monitor-type fighter and insisted upon the retention of the slow moving, top-heavy ironclad.

Compare the testimony given by naval officials in expressing their views on aerial bombing and the effectiveness of the air-plane against the battleship with the expression of views in 1840 and 1860 of naval officials who were then seeking to stop progress. Gentlemen, there is a similarity which is discouraging. William Conant Church, in his Life of John Ericsson, says on page 136, volume 1 (and I read this, if any gentleman cares to make comparison with the testimony of naval officials given not so very long ago):

Yet his [Ericsson] proposition to substitute the propeller for the paddle wheel was received with ridicule by all officialdom.

Government officers at Washington, enjoying a high reputation for scientific attainment, proved, to the satisfaction of themselves and their fellows, that the Princeton never could attain a speed of 5 miles an hour; she was able to make over 12, and this was relatively equal to 18 or 20 miles now. The most prominent of the Government naval constructors assured his department that a mere glance at the propeller intended for the Princeton was sufficient to convince the practical eye of the absurdity of the scheme, "the surface of the blades was too small for the body to be propelled." The President of the United States was warned by Government engineers that utter failure would attend the attempt to use engines constructed on such erroneous mechanical principles as those of this vessel.

Is there anyone living to-day who would say that the propeller should not have been adopted by the Navy? Of course not. In not so many years from now the battleship which in its day typified strength, power, and might will have gone into oblivion like the old frigates of 1812. Of course, it is not as comfortable or as impressive to sit in the cockpit of an airplane, nor is it as grand and conducive to pomp and dignity to stand in the turret of a submarine as it is to pace the bridge of a grand battleship, as is so well and graphically described by Prof. J. R. Soley in his Battles and Leaders of the Civil War, volume 1, page 623; and, by the way, Professor Soley was at one time an Assistant Secretary of the Navy, so that not only as an historian but as an observer of conditions in the department his views carry a great deal of authority. Here is what Professor Soley says:

It was Providence that decreed the success of the Monitor and not the Navy. During the period of peace preceding the war our Navy was always grasping at the shadow and leaving the substance. The commodore of the period was an august personage who went to sea in a great flagship, surrounded by conventional grandeur which was calculated to inspire a becoming respect and awe. As the years of peace rolled on this figure became more and more august, more and more conventional. The fatal defects of the system were not noticed until 1861, when the crisis came, and the service was unprepared to meet it, and to this cause was largely due the feebleness of naval operations during the first year of the war. There seems to have been a total want of information at the central office of administration in reference to the existing demands of naval war and the measures necessary to put the machine into efficient operation.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. I would rather not; I have not the time.

Mr. STEPHENS. Just one question.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Very well.

Mr. STEPHENS. The result of all that is that we have got perhaps the best Navy in the world; that as the result of that criticism. Yet the Navy goes ahead.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. But that same stubbornness that was exhibited then is exhibited to-day. The Navy has persistently fought aviation, and yet you now turn around and put aviation into its hands. But just wait—let me go on.

Because the Navy was stubborn and resisted progress in 1840, 1860, 1920, and even 1926, does the gentleman from Ohio desire that condition to continue? Might not progress have been a great deal speedier and better, would not the war of 1860 ended quicker and perhaps the World War, had not the superannuated commodore Professor Soley talks about not been so stubborn and single minded? Why, gentlemen, it is not so many weeks ago that Col. William Mitchell was forced out of the service. Just look at his experience with the Navy. Colonel Mitchell was there when battleships were sunk, he was there, too, when sand bombs were dropped on the ships, and then the country told that a battleship was not vulnerable to aerial bombing. Colonel Mitchell had no other interest except that of his country. Yet he was hounded and hounded, criticized and cursed, and finally court-martialed. For what? For telling the truth. All that Colonel Mitchell wanted was a united air service, and if that was not possible at least unity of efforts in procurement, in study of designs and construction and the stoppage of waste, due to incompetency and ignorance of aviation. Because Colonel Mitchell wanted to help his country and disregarded the petty things of the departments, because he wanted to see aviation on a sound basis, which, of course, ignores the personal comfort of certain individuals, he was despised and hated. And when history is written, and the activities and services of Col. William Mitchell are recorded they will read something like William Conant Church writes of Ericsson in his Life of John Ericsson, page 231, volume 1:

The difficulty was not that he—Ericsson—was unknown, but that he was too well known; at least at Washington, and in those bureaus of the Navy Department with which his abilities and his experience would naturally associate him. Since his work in 1842-43 upon the Princeton he had been engaged more or less with Government matters, but with the bureaus he was no favorite. From their point of view he was a failure. They preferred the safe waters of precedent, while it was his mission to sail the high seas of discovery. Without judgment between them it is sufficient to say that Ericsson and the Government officers, to whom he looked for approval, were seldom in accord.

Gentlemen, the Navy's function is to navigate the waters. Yes; to navigate under the water and on the surface of the water. If the Navy produces good navigators able to take our ships all over the world, protect our coast, it will have rendered its share of service to the country. If the Navy would do more navigating and less legislating, it would be far better. If there were more men being trained as navigators on board the ships and less around here lobbying, it would be still better.

Mr. COYLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. COYLE. Would you not consider it advisable to have a five-year program which would avoid the necessity of these naval officers coming down here every year and lobbying?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I will come to the five-year program in just a moment. Let me not get off the subject of navigation. Why, gentlemen, the Navy has all it can do to train its officers to safely navigate ships on the waters or under the water. I hold here in my hand a report, No. 70, in reply to House Resolution 434 which I introduced in the Sixty-eighth Congress, which shows that from January 1, 1923, to March 2, 1925, some 35 vessels of the Navy were damaged or lost and the greater part through faulty navigation. Why some of you gentlemen will surely remember the pictures which we saw of submarines and destroyers up on the mountains instead of out in the deep sea where they belong. Through faulty navigation we lost seven destroyers at one time, the destroyers Delphy, S. P. Lee, Young, Woodbury, Nicholas, Chauncey, and Fuller were run aground on September 8, 1923, near Point Arguello, Calif., a total loss of over $13,000,000. Destroyer Lavallette ran aground. The destroyer Brooks was also grounded. The destroyers Farenholt and Litchfield collided, and so it goes. Coast navigation is an art in itself. We ought to specialize navigators in coast waters, so that ships may be taken anywhere along the coast without the risk of running aground and losing ships and men. I realize that misfortunes will happen, but I submit that the list contained in this report in a short period of time is too long. It emphasizes the necessity of naval men remaining on the water and of training a different set of men for the air.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania refers to a five-year program. Yet there is nothing in the bill which will provide for continuity in office or assignment of naval officers who will have charge of the spending of this money and the shaping of the policy of this naval air service. Why, according to the present conditions in the Navy, one set of officers in charge to-day may approve of certain type planes, may prefer certain designs to others, spend the appropriation for one or two years, then ordered to sea and others come in with different views, with more or less experience, and the whole thing begins all over again. That is just what has been going on for years. This bill provides for the officers being in command of naval stations and naval ships, and I agree with these provisions of the bill, but I fail to find anything to provide a permanent line of officers at the very top, who will have the great responsibility of spending this hundred millions of dollars. That is another reason why a unified air service is absolutely necessary. Or at least some permanent unified command intrusted with the spending of hundreds of millions of dollars of the people's money.

There is to this day utter lack of cooperation or understanding between the Army and Navy. They simply will not get together. Let us here at least in the House get together and hold back appropriations until they do get together.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. The committee is given to understand that there is much more cooperation now.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Is that so? Just let me read to you how much cooperation there is. The only agreement that I have been able to find is that they agree that they do not agree. In the hearings before the Military Affairs Committee only a few days ago it will be found that the Secretary of the Navy was confronted with the utter lack of understanding and cooperation between the two departments, and I fail to find any satisfactory explanation given to the committee by the Secretary. The Aeronautical Board, which I believe was organized in June, 1924, under date of February 18, 1925, made this remarkable statement, and this I get from the hearings of the Military Affairs Committee on this very subject of aviation. I read the statement of the Aeronautical Board:

With reference to specific questions involving coordination of Army and Navy activities which have been referred to or considered by the Aeronautical Board and which have not been satisfactorily settled, as far as can be submitted within the limited time available for research, may be enumerated as follows:

- (a) The respective missions and fields of operations of the Army Air Service and naval aviation.
- (b) Overlapping and duplication between the Army Air Service and naval aviation in the training of aviators.
- (c) Overlapping and duplication between the Army Air Service and naval aviation in the construction, operation, and maintenance of aviation installations along the coastal limits of the continental United States.
- (d) Failure to arrive at a satisfactory adjustment annually of estimates for appropriations for the Army Air Service and naval aviation.
- (e) Failure to arrive at a satisfactory coordination of aircraft radio development for the Army Air Service and naval aviation.
- (f) Failure to arrive at an economical, efficient, and satisfactory solution of the aerial defense of the Hawaiian Islands.
- (g) Failure to arrive at an economical, efficient, and satisfactory solution of the problem concerning the joint use of Army and naval aviation facilities, particularly those located in Panama, on North Island, and on Ford Island.
- (h) Failure to determine once and for all the final jurisdiction to be had by either service over Ford Island, Territory of Hawaii.
- (i) Failure to attain the semblance of coordination between future air development programs for the Army Air Service and naval aviation.
- (j) Failure to reach an agreement on the proposal to purchase a metal-clad airship prior to the incorporation of an item for that purpose in naval appropriation bill.

That in itself is sufficient to make us pause right here before we authorize this enormous appropriation. Gentlemen, if there is anything upon which they have agreed according to this statement, it must be of very little importance.

Therefore I am opposed to the five-year program. I am opposed to the authorization of the enormous amounts provided in the bill before us. It is true that it is only an authorization, but, gentlemen, that carries with it certain moral obligations and our experience teaches us that once authorized the money is generally obtained afterwards. I am willing to go along and provide for one year's appropriation. In the meantime, perhaps, there will come some order out of the present chaos. Perhaps we will be able to get a bill providing for a department of national defense or a united air service, or at least some permanent, unified authority for the procurement of equipment. The whole country is alive to this subject. They expect more of us than a repetition of the mistakes of the past. At the proper time I shall move to strike out paragraphs 2 to 7 of section 1. I do not know whether the committee will approve of my amendment, but in doing so I feel that I am doing my duty to this House and to my country.

The least that could be done would be to write into this bill a provision that will make it absolutely clear that this bill will in no way bind Congress either to the amount of money or the number of planes suggested in the bill.

I appeal to the friends of aviation; I appeal to all my colleagues interested in sound legislation and real economy to consider this bill carefully before passing it in its present form. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, for the purpose of further developing and further increasing aeronautics in the Navy, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to undertake the construction and procurement of aircraft, spare parts, and equipment for the Navy as enumerated below:

PARAGRAPH 1. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, not to exceed 235 airplanes with spare parts and equipment, to cost not to exceed $12,285,000: Provided, That the number of airplanes and the limit of cost herein specified for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, shall be in addition to the 78 airplanes with spare parts and equipment for which the sum of $3,300,000 is included under the appropriation increase of the Navy in the Navy Department and Naval Establishment appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927.

PAR. 2. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, not to exceed 313 airplanes with spare parts and equipment, to cost not to exceed $10,223,750.

PAR. 3. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, not to exceed 335 airplanes with spare parts and equipment, to cost not to exceed $17,582,500.

PAR. 4. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, not to exceed 357 airplanes with spare parts and equipment, to cost not to exceed $18,941,250.

PAR. 5. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931, not to exceed 374 airplanes with spare parts and equipment, to cost not to exceed $20,046,250; in all, during the five-year period beginning July 1, 1926, and ending June 30, 1931, 1,614 airplanes, with spare parts and equipment, to cost not to exceed $85,078,750.

MR. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

MR. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this bill is against the rule in that it will cause an expenditure out of the Public Treasury of millions of dollars. It is not an authorization. It of itself would cause expenditures and it is in violation of the rule which prohibits any committee, except the Committee on Appropriations and certain others, but not the Committee on Naval Affairs, to cause appropriations to be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair knows of no such rule and overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAR. 6. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and during each fiscal year thereafter, not to exceed 333 airplanes with spare parts and equipment, to cost not to exceed $17,476,250.

PAR. 7. The number of airplanes, spare parts, and equipment thus specified to be constructed or procured during the five fiscal years beginning July 1, 1926, and ending June 30, 1931, and the number specified to be constructed or procured during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and during each fiscal year thereafter is the number which it has been determined will be required to increase, during a five-year period beginning July 1, 1926, the useful airplanes on hand or otherwise provided for on June 30, 1926, to 1,000 and to maintain the number of useful airplanes at not less than this number, which is hereby established as the authorized number of useful airplanes to be employed in the Navy: Provided, That in the event satisfactory arrangements for the procurement of the authorized number of airplanes can not be made in any fiscal year, such deficiency may be made up in the next ensuing year or years: Provided further, That "useful airplanes" as used in this act shall be those airplanes on the Navy list which are, or which after reasonable repairs can be made, in all respects safe to fly, and shall be exclusive of those airplanes classified as experimental or, with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, declared obsolete: Provided further, That airplanes assigned to the Naval Reserve for training purposes shall be in addition to the authorized number of useful planes to be employed in the Navy.

MR. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a number of amendments which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by MR. BUTLER: Page 3, line 6, strike out the word "specified" and insert in lieu thereof the word "authorized."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 8, strike out the word "specified" and insert in lieu thereof the word "authorized."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 11, strike out the word "determined" and insert in lieu thereof the word "estimated."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, lines 18 and 19, strike out the words "can not be" and insert in lieu thereof the words "are not."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

MR. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the language after the word "obsolete," on page 4, line 1, and insert the language which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by MR. BUTLER: Page 4, beginning in line 1, strike out the proviso ending in line 4 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed as more than an authorization for the procurement of aircraft within the limits enumerated in this act, nor in any way to abridge the right of Congress to determine what numbers of aircraft may be appropriated for in any fiscal year within the limits so authorized."

MR. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, the object of the amendment is this—to make perfectly plain the purpose of the committee that reported this measure. It has been suggested to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Vinson] and me by members of the Appropriations Committee that this language should be inserted so it may appear in this bill and written here so that all men may correctly read hereafter what the exact purpose of the bill is. It is this: That we shall not authorize any airplanes beyond a certain number—that is, we shall not authorize any to be constructed beyond that number and that the number will remain in control of Congress, to be reported by the Appropriations Committee.

MR. FRENCH. Will the gentleman yield?

MR. BUTLER. Yes.

MR. FRENCH. And the further effect of the language would be to make it definite that the department or the administration could not incur any obligations or contracts except by coming to Congress.

MR. BUTLER. My friend, we intended to do that, but I will admit that my friend has suggested a paragraph here that will make it perfectly plain, and no one can read the purpose otherwise.

MR. WATSON. Will the gentleman yield?

MR. BUTLER. Yes.

MR. WATSON. Upon what scientific basis did the Navy Department conclude that 235 airplanes would be needed in 1927, and so on, as provided in the various paragraphs mentioned?

MR. BUTLER. How the conclusion was reached?

MR. WATSON. Yes.

MR. BUTLER. We discussed it yesterday very fully.

MR. WATSON. I was not here and I am afraid I am asking a question over again.

MR. BUTLER. I am sure my friend did not lose a great deal by not hearing anything I may have said, but I will be delighted to repeat it to him. This was made for us by mathematicians, and the purpose of it is this: To have at the end of five years 1,000 serviceable airplanes, useful airplanes, useful to the American service, useful in the way of a defense and not pictures of airplanes or chromos; not empty boxes or anything of the sort, but airplanes that can be used. It will require us to build in the next five years, in order to have 1,000 planes on hand at the end of that time, about 1,600 in number. It has all been calculated, and at the end of that time, at the expiration of the five-year period, the American Government will have on hand 1,000 airplanes ready for immediate use and airplanes which can be used with safety by the users.

MR. WATSON. Was it determined that this number is sufficient to meet the airplanes that are being built by foreign countries?

MR. BUTLER. My friend will understand that in these days we are instructed not to make a comparison, and some time as other my friend may be able to tell me how to provide a national defense without making a comparison. I have been endeavoring for years to learn how to assist in providing a national defense for America without comparing the defenses other nations have, but I have not yet learned. Now, we had this in mind, taking it gently and tenderly, that other nations were building about so many; and inasmuch as there were on one side 3,000 miles of water between our people and the other side and 5,000 or 7,000 miles on the other side between our people and the other side, we concluded that 1,000 airplanes would just about fit. Furthermore, we have places for 1,000 airplanes and those in reserve at the different air stations. Every plane that is provided for here will have its particular use. My friend has voted time and time again for appropriations to prepare decks on the ships, to receive and operate airplanes and airplane carriers, and also to build air stations for the reception of these airplanes.

This is a definite program, indorsed by the administration, all the boards that have been appointed to consider it, approved and indorsed by all the military men, and indorsed by the 21 members of the Committee on Naval Affairs. There are no other members of the committee to indorse it or we would have more. [Laughter.]

Mr. WATSON. I knew the committee had come to a wise conclusion, and I wanted to know their philosophy.

Mr. BUTLER. I am delighted to explain it to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five additional minutes, because I would like to ask him a few questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The purpose of the amendment offered by the gentleman is to make this a bill of authorization clearly?

Mr. BUTLER. Clearly.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I would like to ask the gentleman, if he can tell me, how it is proposed the President shall act under the authority given him here. I refer particularly to the language in the first part of the bill, that—the President of the United States is hereby authorized to undertake the construction and procurement of aircraft, spare parts, and equipment for the Navy as enumerated below.

What is to be the function of the President under this authority?

Mr. BUTLER. My friend, I can not tell you how they will do it. I have voted for that language for 30 years and it is the language employed in bills authorizing the construction of ships of war. Of course, the President is the commander in chief of the Navy—

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Of course, my friends, the President is not going to do it with his own hands.

Mr. McSWAIN. Not like he lays a cornerstone.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But the constructions, of course, are to be by the Navy Department?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The Secretary of the Navy acting under instructions from the President.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, yes. We have always given it to the President of the United States. I do not think there is any such constitutional requirement, but it has always been given to the President of the United States as commander in chief of the two services, the Army and the Navy. In all these bills he is the one who is designated to make these contracts and to comply with the provisions of bills for national defense.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Of course, what I really wanted to get at is this: While the authority is granted here, the President will not be able to do anything until the money has been appropriated.

Mr. BUTLER. That is right.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. But in view of the question asked by the gentleman from Illinois, I knew the gentleman from Pennsylvania was entirely willing that the amendment itself should deny authority to anyone to contract for the construction of these planes until the Congress had made an appropriation therefor.

Mr. BUTLER. I want my friend to understand that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] and I accepted this because the gentleman wrote it. What greater compliment than that can we pay to any friend? Now let us alone, will not you please? [Laughter.]

Mr. SPEAKS. Will not the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; certainly.

Mr. SPEAKS. Considering that the airplane is still in process of development, how does the gentleman justify a proposal that we shall six years hence purchase a stated number of airplanes and appropriate $17,500,000 for that purpose?

Mr. BUTLER. I am delighted to answer the gentleman.

Mr. SPEAKS. Please keep in mind in making your answer the words "six years hence."

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; that is right. I understand the question, and it is an intelligent one. I only wish I could make an intelligent answer. I learned the answer from some who know about it more than I do. I took the advice that was given by the President's commission, you understand.

Mr. SPEAKS. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. The President appointed a commission which sat here for perhaps six weeks and took the advice of dozens and perhaps hundreds of experts who made the recommendation that for five years we should establish a program and turn over every year one-third of the machines, and that is the way this plan was worked out mathematically. It was made plain to us that these machines wear out in three years. We desire to keep on hand all the time 1,000 airplanes, and therefore this program is worked out, as I have stated to my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON], by the mathematicians, so that in order to maintain 1,000 planes and have 1,000 planes at the end of five years it is necessary to grant the authorization contained in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. SPEAKS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended five minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not want to take up too much time.

Mr. SPEAKS. I am sure the gentleman is willing to give us information on the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I am perfectly willing to do that if I can.

Mr. SPEAKS. I want to say to the gentleman that I sat for weeks with the Committee on Military Affairs considering all the testimony the gentleman refers to, and in addition the opinion of every man in the United States who individually or as representing any group that might be expected to have information on the subject, and after listening patiently to all of them, the committee was forced to lay aside the opinions of all the alleged experts for the reason that they were so conflicting and varied so widely that a composite expression was not obtainable. So the committee discarded them all and prepared a bill after their own ideas.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know what you did and I do not know what induced you to do it; I am only speaking for myself. I do not know whether you disregarded the advice of the authorities or whether your opinion is better than that of other people. I am speaking for myself. I am not an expert on military affairs, I am not an expert mathematician, but we are reinforced in our conclusions by men in whom we have great confidence, both civilian and military alike.

Mr. SPEAKS. The committee based its action in disregarding the views of the experts largely on the fact that they could not agree, that it was impossible to get them to unite upon a plan.

Mr. BUTLER. My friend has followed a wise course. We oftentimes differ with the experts. I confess I never heard two agree—they would not be smart if they did agree. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. If I understand the gentleman's argument, it is that we should adopt a five-year plan for aviation.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. And the gentleman is seeking to carry out the naval program as far as naval aviation is concerned, and it takes five years to complete it.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. When we provided for building new vessels in 1916, did we not lay out a long program?

Mr. BUTLER. We did; and it is still going on.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. And Congress a short time ago adopted a building program covering five years for new buildings.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Is it not true that we could not complete these programs all at once?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; and there would be great confusion if we tried to. And let me say further that the Budget approves of this.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Well, that is the weakest argument the gentleman has presented. [Laughter.] Will not Congress have full control of the appropriation?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. And if we do not have the program, will it not be necessary to go to the Appropriations Committee every year and ask it to do thus and so, and what we want to do is to make it definite?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; make a definite program.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SNELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 61) authorizing the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago to enter into contracts for the erection of a building for its branch establishment in the city of Detroit, Mich.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 3, 7, 10, 11, 12, 30, and 34 to the bill (H. R. 8917) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. SACKETT as a member on the part of the Senate of the joint committee to make an investigation of the Northern Pacific land grants created by section 3 of the joint resolution approved June 5, 1924, entitled "Joint resolution directing the Secretary of the Interior to withhold his approval of the adjustment of the Northern Pacific land grants, and for other purposes," in place of the late Senator from Missouri, Mr. Spencer.

CONSTRUCTION AND PROCUREMENT OF AIRCRAFT AND AIRCRAFT EQUIPMENT IN THE NAVY AND MARINE CORPS

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LA GUARDIA: Page 2, beginning with line 8, strike out paragraphs 2, 3, 4, 5, and on page 3 strike out paragraphs 6 and 7.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and approved by the committee means anything then the paragraphs I would strike out in my amendment are no longer necessary.

Let us understand each other. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is perfectly satisfactory. It provides that nothing in the bill shall be considered to be a binding obligation on Congress or the department to contract or purchase a specified number of planes enumerated in the various programs in the five-year period; it so states in clear and certain language. That being so it is absolutely unnecessary to recite these provisions in the bill and my amendment simply strikes out this unnecessary language.

The chairman of the committee and the committee itself all agree that this is no appropriation of money. With the amendment just approved it is not even a binding authorization.

If in 1927 or 1928 or some good day the Army and Navy get together and finally agree that it is necessary for the defense of the country and for the best interest of the country to cooperate together we can save from five to ten million dollars a year between the Army and the Navy aviation appropriations.

Therefore I urge my amendment. It simply carries out the intent of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I do not hesitate to say now, gentlemen, that it will meet with the approval of the President of the United States. I offer this amendment in all seriousness, and it is the only way to carry out the intent of the amendment just adopted and to prevent waste of public funds in the future. The very fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania had to submit such an amendment shows the weakness of his bill. We should not go ahead on a five-year program and be committed to any such plan. The amendment just adopted certainly makes it clear that we are not bound to any such program.

If the bill authorizes appropriations in seven of its paragraphs and then the next moment says this does not mean anything because we will have to go to the Committee on Appropriations anyhow and they can disregard this in number and amount, then what is the use of putting in five paragraphs or seven paragraphs of authorization? Let us legislate intelligently and say what we mean and mean what we say. As the bill now stands, we first authorize for five years and then say that we do not mean that at all, that it is simply a tentative suggestion. Suggestions should not be written as legislation.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does not the gentleman know that in order to get an appropriation in this House under the rules there has to be an authorization, and we do not have that authorization now. Anyone can make a point of order and it goes out. We make an authorization for five years and then make an appropriation for each year of those five years.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Yes; exactly.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Why does the gentleman make that statement?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Because the gentleman knows that a blanket authorization would be sufficient—that the fact that they are authorizing procuring and maintaining airplanes in the first paragraph of section 1 is sufficient, but they go further and they provide the number of planes and the amount each year, and then they say they do not mean it.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Why does not the gentleman from New York give the real reason for the five-year program? The real reason is to head off the sentiment in this country for a separate air service, take it away from the Army and the Navy and put it where it properly belongs.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. I say "Amen" to that. I referred to that before. That is why I am fighting this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman's motion, if you want to take the body of this bill out and leave only the head and legs to go wandering around, you will adopt the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Strike out section 1.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, we now have an air service in the Navy, we have a separate air service in the Army, we have a separate postal air service in the Post Office Department, we have an air service, I understand, now, for our Coast Guard, and I understand that the Secretary of the Treasury soon is to ask for another separate air service in the Prohibition Unit. That will be five separate air services. The Department of Agriculture uses certain of these various services, and eventually it will have an air service of its own and that will make six.

I was one of those who last fall attended most of the hearings of the President's aircraft committee. I listened attentively to the testimony. That testimony convinced me of one thing absolutely, and that is that there should be a department of national defense, with an Army Bureau, a Navy Bureau, a Marine Bureau, and an Air Bureau, with a separate unified Air Service. Let me show you what you are doing here in this bill, and just the way legislation passes and gets through Congress and onto the statute books. We have here on the floor to-day not 100 men.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. But the quality is all right, is it not?

Mr. BLANTON. The quality is all right, and we make up in that what we lack in numbers, but there are about 335 Members who are now absent, and we are passing one of the most important bills that has ever been before this Congress.

Mr. STEPHENS. Would it be any better considered if they were all here?

Mr. BLANTON. I think so. The best legislation that is passed in this House is when all the membership are here.

Mr. SPEAKS. They will all be here to vote on it.

Mr. BLANTON. They will come here to vote when the bell rings, and they will not know one thing about what they are voting on.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, we will tell them.

Mr. BLANTON. Let us see what is in the bill. Here is the new Navy program for the Air Service. Our good-hearted friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] can not turn them down when these admirals come to him. Listen to what he has provided. This is their separate air program, in addition to what they already have, and separate from and additional to that of the Army: For the present fiscal year this bill gives them $12,285,000; for the next fiscal year it gives them $16,223,750; for the next fiscal year following it gives them $17,582,000; for the next fiscal year thereafter it gives them $18,941,250; for the next fiscal year following that it gives them $20,046,250; and then for the succeeding fiscal year it gives them $17,476,250. That is the separate air program for the United States Navy.

Then will come the Army program, and next will come the Coast Guard program, and the Post Office program, and the Prohibition Unit program, and the Agricultural Department's program, all seeking millions for their own separate air service.

Mr. COYLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. COYLE. Does the gentleman see the words "not to exceed" immediately before the dollar mark in each one of those amounts?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; I know what that means. I have been here long enough to know that "not to exceed" usually means the minimum that is to be spent. Here is where you are going to let the long-sought-after department of national defense go by the board and get away from you. You ought to kill this bill right now.

You ought to strike out its enacting clause, and you ought to tell the admirals in the Navy and the General Staff of Generals in the Army, and the Coast Guard Service, and the Prohibition Unit Service, and the Post Office Service, and the Agricultural Service, that we are going to have a unified bureau of the air in one department of national defense, and that we will let this bureau of the air allocate such air service as may be needed to all of the departments of the Government. And then we would have a valuable air service that would be worth while, and not a scattered, weak one that is starved to death by admirals in the Navy and by generals in the General Staff of the Army. And we would save millions each year that are now wasted in duplicated effort.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly; I yield to my friend from Maryland.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does the gentleman know how many airships are carried in the Army bill as reported?

Mr. BLANTON. How many?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Two thousand.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say this, that I believe there are a great many men on this floor who want to see established a department of national defense, which would abolish both the War Department and the Navy Department. It is economically sound. Then if we believe in it why should this bill go through enlarging a separate air service in the Navy? You are going to let this bill go through because you do not want to go up against it and fight. We could defeat it if we wanted to and would make a proper fight, but we are taking the path of least resistance. We love our beloved friend here from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] too much.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not going to use any of these air-planes. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. We know that if we opposed this bill we could defeat the gentleman from Georgia, my friend CARL, but we could not defeat the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. Does the gentleman think this bill will stop a separate aircraft service?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I know it will.

Mr. CONNERY. I favor the enactment of this bill, and I believe in what the gentleman says, too.

Mr. BLANTON. We ought to stand on what we believe on this question. I wish you gentlemen would read all of the testimony given before the President's Aircraft Board. I have read it. Our friend CARL will tell you that I caused those hearings to be printed, so that I could get a copy. They were not being printed. Copies were unobtainable. I told him they could be printed under an existing rule, even in a vacation. I wrote the order for him, and he, as a member of the board, signed it, and the other House Member, Mr. PARKER, of New York, signed it, and they sent that requisition to Tyler Page, our efficient Clerk, and he had the hearings printed.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It was fortunate that the gentleman from Texas was in the city at the time. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I was interested in the matter just as much as was the gentleman from Georgia. If every man on this floor will get those hearings and read them through, they will say, "I am for a department of national defense and I want in it a separate air service."

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Is this bill in accordance with the economy program of the White House spokesman?

Mr. BLANTON. The White House spokesman is not here. It is the Navy that is operating on us now. It is the admirals down here who brought the bill forward, already prepared, and said to the committee, "Pass it."

Mr. BUTLER. No. I initiated it myself, and nobody brought it out. We declined to put on a lot of things in this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. But it suits the admirals, does it not?

Mr. BUTLER. In part it does. I am not saying how I feel about the project of national defense. The adoption of this program will not interfere with it. We had that in mind. This program will not interfere with that.

Mr. BLANTON. What we ought to do is to sidetrack this bill now and wait a while. Why the hurry? The gentleman has just passed an amendment, but they can not do anything at all until the Committee on Appropriations act. If that is the case, why do we not wait?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. That was a pro forma amendment. I withdraw it. I intend to vote against the bill and try to get a record vote on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out paragraph 1. That is a pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, let me say that the RECORD shows that I am and have long been absolutely in favor of a single department of national defense, and that we have been having hearings and discussing that issue before the Committee on Military Affairs for nearly 90 days, and that the proposition was lost by the narrow vote of 11 against 10. Ten men on that committee favored the proposition of a single department of national defense.

Let me say furthermore that the agitation on this subject has brought the Army and Navy nearer together to-day than they have ever been before, and they are cooperating now during the session of Congress in a way that was undreamed of 12 months ago, and they are putting out opinions, as they are testifying before the committees, about the harmony that exists among them and their desire to economize and their plans to promote efficiency in the points where the contacts are made between the two services in a way that never existed before.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. But the gentleman will admit that they are still a mile apart?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes; farther apart than the ocean is wide, it is true. But I am in favor to-day of closing the gap, if possible. It is a practical proposition here, and I can not believe, as much confidence as I have in the good judgment and in the strategic ability of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]—I can not believe that this will delay the ultimate consummation that he and I and many of us have at heart. It only shows, in my estimation, the necessity that confronts us right now. Here comes the naval program of five years, about $100,000,000.

The first question asked by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN] was, "What about the Army program?" And that immediately brought it to the attention of this House, that there ought to be some harmonizing and coordinating action in this activity of the air. We have all been thinking that the General Staff is the personification of reactionaryism. The General Staff had a study recently made on this subject of a council of national defense, to coordinate and bring about cooperation between the Army and Navy; and if the General Staff can come to the conclusion that I am going to read to you in a moment, then certainly we are making some progress; somebody is being educated along sound lines. Recently, General Harbord admitted that it might be wise to pass a statute to give legal force and continuity to the Joint Army and Navy Board. To the same effect is Gen. Hugh A. Drum.

This General Staff study was concluded on March 24, 1926. It is very recent and is "hot," as we say, "off the skillet." This is the deliberate judgment of the General Staff. What the General Board of the Navy would say I do not know. I do not know whether the General Board is here or in part or in whole, but if they are not here, of course, they can not answer the inquiry. But the General Staff of the Army has said this. Maybe the gentleman from the Naval Affairs Committee can tell us what the General Board would say and whether or not the General Board would say "amen" to what I am about to read. This is the genesis, I think, of a single department of national defense:

There is needed a single agency to advise him (the President) and execute his directions in this connection. No such agency now exists charged with said responsibilities. While the joint board and its subsidiary committees are available and required for joint consideration of specific Army and Navy operations, functions, etc., it has not and can not be given the responsibility to cover the broader field indicated.

This is the joint board we have been hearing so much about. Whenever we (in committee) would talk about the necessity for cooperation, the Army and Navy would say, "We have it now; we have the Joint Army and Navy Board. Those fellows are living together like brothers; they are working together for the good of the country and there is no necessity for legal compulsion of cooperation." Yet I find here (reading from Study of March 24):

Furthermore, such a board is influenced by ex parte views with a tendency to accept inefficient compromises, indicating a need in major questions for a judicial determination after both sides have been presented.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Carolina may proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. For a question, yes.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman has spoken about the joint board and about cooperation. I would like to ask him whether there was cooperation when we were in the Argonne in France and German airplanes would make very heavy lines of smoke over the Twenty-sixth Division and then the German artillery would open up on us and there were no American planes there to defend the Infantry.

Mr. McSWAIN. The General Board did not function in France. It functions in Washington.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. In the beginning of the language which the gentleman read he used the words "in this connection." What was the connection? There must have been something prior to that and what was the subject?

Mr. McSWAIN. The subject was a discussion of a council of national defense to coordinate the Army and the Navy. It says:

While the President as commander in chief may have the power to carry out the functions indicated in the foregoing, there is needed a single agency to advise him and execute his directions in this connection.

It was to bring about direct and positive legal action and permit the joint board to have the power to execute and not merely to advise and debate. Now, let me read again:

Furthermore, such a board is influenced by ex parte views with a tendency to accept inefficient compromises.

They are obliged to have compromises with three from the Army and three from the Navy, each equal in power, and they will never agree on anything, unless it is some milk-and-water proposition that does not squeeze the blood or touch a nerve in any part. So the report says they are obliged to be inefficient and to bring about inefficient compromises.

Indicating a need in major questions for a judicial determination after both sides have been presented.

I tell you, gentleman, that is Chapter I in the Book of Genesis, out of which shall be finally written the whole bible of national defense in one great comprehending department of national defense, with one civilian sitting at the head directing the activities of every force that makes for the defense of the Nation as a whole. [Applause.]

Mr. ELLIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. ELLIS. I am in sympathy with the views the gentleman is expressing, and by aiding these separate and distinct agencies you are bringing forward the day when we will have these things unified. In view of the confidential disclosures as to the vote in the committee, I want to ask this: Suppose the vote had been 11 to 10 the other way? Would the Military Affairs Committee have brought in a single and separate air service bill?

Mr. McSWAIN. Of course they would.

Mr. ELLIS. In spite of that vote?

Mr. McSWAIN. If it had been 11 in favor of national defense the bill would have been here and we would be considering it.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. And they would bring in the same material items as are in this bill?

Mr. McSWAIN. Why, of course, I think I ought to explain for the benefit of my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. SPEAKS] that he was not referring to the fact that our bill is not recommending a five-year program of building aircraft and of construction, but he said that after the various bills had been considered which had been introduced at the suggestion of the War Department to carry out the recommendations of the Morrow Board, the General Staff, and so on—after these bills had been introduced and considered every last one of them was turned out boot and baggage and the committee started to write a new bill of its own from the very bottom up, and I think that is what the Committee on Naval Affairs did.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has again expired.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may have two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Carolina may proceed for two additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I will state to the gentleman, in reply to his statement, that the Committee on Naval Affairs initiated this legislation by direction of the chairman himself, and we never submitted it to the Navy Department until we opened it up for hearings.

Mr. McSWAIN. I have no doubt it is your bill and not the bill of the department. Now, gentlemen, I want to call your attention—

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. For a question; yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman make clear to the committee that the building program of the Military Affairs Committee, as embodied in their bill, does not conflict in any way with the program in this bill? There might be a misunderstanding about that because of the statement made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPEAKS].

Mr. McSWAIN. Of course, as I explained to the gentleman from Georgia a moment ago, we have a five-year program in the Army bill and, of course, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPEAKS] did not intend to refer to that; he was referring to a somewhat humorous remark made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who pretends great innocence when it comes to anything like military knowledge, and the gentleman knew what he said was a bit of humor, and that he was not serious about it. However, no experts can put anything over on the experienced gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUTLER. I will say to the gentleman that I never listen to it.

Mr. McSWAIN. And he could not be influenced by it.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not hear it.

Mr. McSWAIN. General Wotherspoon, who was then commandant of the War College, appeared before the Naval Affairs Committee in 1911 on a bill introduced by Richmond P. Hobson for the purpose of creating a department of national defense for the purpose of coordinating the Army and Navy activities, being supported by Admiral Mahan, Admiral Rodgers, Admiral Wainwright, and Gen. Leonard Wood, and then and there announced that if the Army and Navy could cooperate—use the same forces, the same branches of activities, such as the same transports, the same docks, the same bases, the same supply stores, and the same recruiting stations, and other joint agencies—they could then, which was 15 years ago, save $100,000,000 a year. If they could save $100,000,000 a year then, we ought to save $200,000,000 now, because our expenditures have about doubled.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has again expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask permission to speak for just one moment? I want to say to my friend that we are now endeavoring to arrange a time for a joint hearing between the gentleman's committee and the Committee on Naval Affairs upon legislation that affects both services, and we did not consider that in writing this bill we took any position upon the subject of a unified air service, because this is a program we would have to have, it matters not whether we have a unified air service or not. The airplanes we have provided for in this program I have no doubt would be provided for if we had a unified air service.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The fact you have announced a policy covering five years is not inconsistent in the slightest with a unified air service or with a consolidated system of national defense.

Mr. BUTLER. Not at all.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Furthermore, the Committee on Appropriations when it meets in December, in the absence of authority such as you have given here, would have no right whatever to make an appropriation for the Air Service—

Mr. BUTLER. None whatever.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Either of the Army or of the Navy; and in the absence of a bill both from the Military Affairs Committee and from the Naval Affairs Committee, the Committee on Appropriations would be powerless to make any appropriation for the air services.

Mr. BUTLER. Very true. We would not have a bit of air service.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment on page 3, striking out lines 17, 18, 19, and 20.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 3, strike out lines 17, 18, 19, and 20.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this is a proviso which says:

In the event satisfactory arrangements for the procurement of the authorized number of airplanes can not be made in any fiscal year, such deficiency may be made up in the next ensuing year or years.

I see no necessity for this language in view of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and adopted by the committee, and in view of the repeated statement made in support of this bill that it does not mean anything. This is the first time in my experience in this House where the proponents of a bill urge its acceptance by emphasizing its weakness and its meaninglessness.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield just there?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I wish the gentleman would point out where any member of the committee has stated that the provisions of this bill do not mean anything.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Well, I refer most respectfully to the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee and adopted by this committee which says that nothing herein shall be construed as binding the succeeding Congresses as to number or amount, and then the gentleman just stated that this program would not interfere with the unification of the Air Service, and other gentlemen have stated it is simply a tentative program, and if we ever do get the Army and Navy together this legislation can be brushed aside.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I certainly will.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I would like to have the gentleman point out how the action of any one Congress can bind any succeeding Congress on any question?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, the gentleman knows that whenever any expenditure is authorized, that is morally binding; and the gentleman has had sufficient legislative experience to know that those who benefit by these authorizations know how to bring pressure to bear to get appropriations.

Mr. WOODRUFF. But the gentleman knows also that it does not follow that when pressure is brought to bear on Members of Congress that Members of Congress yield to such pressure.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am only basing it on my experience with appropriations.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. If the gentleman will yield, as I understand the gentleman's contention, it is that in view of the amendment of the chairman of the committee this is entirely unnecessary.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Absolutely. The gentleman can see the situation here. Suppose when we come here for the short term there are certain changes in the control, the gentleman can see how easy it would be to go slow on the orders that year knowing that the next year they could get double the amount of appropriations. I think this is a very unwise and unsafe provision to put in any bill.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. Regarding the statement of our colleague from Michigan with reference to one Congress binding another, is it not fresh in the gentleman's memory that a short time ago when we had up the so-called sesquicentennial appropriation those advocating the passage of that appropriation called specific and particular attention to the actions of a preceding Congress and used that as a point in favor of the passage of the appropriation?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, yes; the gentleman was not seriously urging that argument because he is too wise a legislator to do that. I do hope we can at least strike this improvident and unnecessary provision from the bill. Whether the gentleman from Texas is going to offer a motion to strike out the enacting clause or not I do not know, but I agree with him in saying that this bill is practically going through by default. It is up for consideration with the great influence back of it which the chairman of this great committee has in this House, but we are absolutely ignoring all we have learned about the mistakes of aviation in the past. We are absolutely brushing aside all the advice we have received from 12 separate and distinct investigations, and we are letting the Army and the Navy simply run away with Congress and appropriations.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to see if we can not accommodate the gentleman by fixing a time to end the discussion of this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there are five minutes more in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that that may be extended to 10 minutes in order that I may have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the time be extended to 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I stated a little while ago in interrogating the gentleman from Texas that I would vote against this bill for the reason that the gentleman from Texas said, and I believed it up to a few minutes ago, that this would prevent a unified air service. I am intensely interested in a separate air service for the Army and the Navy, but I have decided that I will vote for this bill after listening to the statement of the chairman of the committee that there is nothing in the bill which will prevent a separate air service.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. As the gentleman is making a confession of the error of his statement a moment ago, let me correct him. The gentleman has stated that there was no protection from the German airplanes in the Argonne, that we had no airplanes up there, and at that time they had an independent air service in the expedition area in France.

Mr. CONNERY. I do not agree with that reasoning at all. In the first place, admitting that there was an independent air service, which there was not, General Pershing was commander in chief of the American Expeditionary Forces. He had command of the Air Service of the Army, and he could have told the Army to cooperate. If we had had a separate air service at that time we would have had real efficiency in the air, but whether it was due to graft here at home or inefficiency in building airplanes, the fact remains that the German aviators could come over, leave a trail of smoke to point out the positions of the infantry, and then their artillery would throw shells into the infantry with no American air defense to drive off the German planes. I know that we had plenty of aviators, able and game aviators, willing and able to go up, but they did not have any planes.

I want a real air service, a separate air service, for the United States, so that soldiers in future wars will not have to stand there like sheep and be slaughtered without a chance to fight back because of the inefficiency of the Air Service in Washington or elsewhere. I do not want that to happen in the future wars.

Mr. UPDIKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. UPDIKE. Is not that the purpose of this five-year program, so that we shall have airplanes sufficient in any national emergency?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; partly; and because I will take a half loaf rather than none, I will vote for the bill. The gentleman from Georgia said that I was in error a few minutes ago, and I want to tell him another reason why I have changed my mind and will vote in favor of the bill. I will vote for the bill because I believe the Republican majority do not want a separate air service, and unless this bill is passed we will have no planes at all. We have the Johnson bill that was reported out of the Veterans' Committee three weeks ago. Why has this bill, which means so much to the disabled service men, not been given a rule. It is not before the membership of this House, and my belief is that it will not come before the House under a rule, because the leaders of the Republican Party in this House are afraid that if they bring it out on the floor Congress will put into the bill relief measures for the disabled soldiers, which they are entitled to, and because these measures might cost a little more money it would interfere with the economy program of the administration—millions for the big monied interests of the country by reducing their surtaxes, but economy by cutting off disabled service men appropriations. I believe they are going to hold it until the last six days of the session and then bring it up, so that no amendments can be offered, and thus double-cross the soldiers as they have been doing ever since I have been in this House. [Applause.]

Mr. UPDIKE. I want to say that I am heartily in favor of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I recognize that there are sharp differences of opinion between Members of the House as to unified air service, and a council for national defense. Sooner or later these questions will likely be considered by the House and full opportunity will then be given every Member to express his views thereon.

So far as this bill is concerned, as well as the one to be reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, I submit that the question of unified air service is in no way pertinent.

The Committee on Naval Affairs in the pending bill have been liberal in authorizing an aircraft program for the next five years. Sometimes a committee will reserve to itself the power to make annual authorizations, and thereby often delay and embarrass another committee of the House, which has sole authority to appropriate but no authority to legislate. The Committee on Naval Affairs, however, in this bill has visioned the sentiment of the country as to the importance of aviation, and they are now simply seeking to write into law authorizations, up to certain limits, for a constructive and liberal air program covering a period of years.

The bill, while giving liberal authorizations to the Committee on Appropriations in the matter of providing aircraft for the Navy, yet fixes annually a limit beyond which the Committee on Appropriations can not go; and the chairman of the committee—the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER]—in order to make clear that there is no mandatory provision in this bill, has offered and had adopted an amendment expressly declaring that nothing in this bill shall be construed as doing more than provide authorizations, and that the power of Congress, within the limits fixed, is in no way abridged or limited.

Until appropriations are made, under an existing law the construction of aircraft authorized in this bill can not be contracted for, either by the President or the Navy Department, and Congress will alone determine, when future appropriation bills for the Navy are before the House, what number and types of aircraft it desires built, within the authorized limits. In other words, the future building program, within the limits fixed, will depend on what appropriations are annually authorized for the construction of aircraft.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I am in favor of a unified air service.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I am also in favor of either a council of national defense or a unified defense department, but this bill does not in any way hamper such a thing. This bill and the Military Affairs Committee bill are both steps toward a unified air service under either a council of national defense or a unified defense department.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Certainly no one who votes for this bill will be committed either for or against a unified air service or a council of national defense. These are questions not presented by the pending bill.

Now, in reference to the paragraph which the gentleman from New York [Mr. LA GUARDIA] moves to strike out, permit me to say I regard it as a very important paragraph. Let me illustrate: If Congress, in the next appropriation bill for the Navy, should, for reasons which at the time seem sound, not appropriate for the number of aircraft which this bill permits and authorizes for the fiscal year 1928, then, under the paragraph which the gentleman from New York seeks to strike out, in the fiscal year 1929 it could appropriate not only for the aircraft authorized for that year but for any it may have failed to appropriate for in 1928. The whole theory of this bill is to provide, for a series of years, a constructive aircraft program. While liberal authorizations are carried, yet, in my judgment, Congress will not in the next five years appropriate for the maximum number of aircraft herein authorized to be constructed. Certainly the provision to which the gentleman from New York complains is another evidence of the liberality of the Committee on Naval Affairs in surrendering its jurisdiction over aircraft authorizations. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

SECTION 2

PARAGRAPH 1. Two rigid airships of a type suitable for use as adjuncts to the fleet and of approximately 6,000,000 cubic feet volume each at a total cost not to exceed $8,000,000 for both ships, construction to be undertaken as soon as practicable and prior to July 1, 1927: Provided, That the two airships herein authorized shall be constructed in the United States: Provided further, That one or both of said airships shall be constructed either under contract similar to contracts covering the construction of other vessels for the Navy, or by the Navy Department, as the Secretary of the Navy may deem to be in the best interests of the Government.

PAR. 2. One experimental metal-clad airship of approximately 200,000 cubic feet volume, at a cost not to exceed $300,000, chargeable to the appropriation provided in the Navy Department and Naval Establishment appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, for continuing experiments and development work on all types of aircraft: Provided, That the metal-clad airship herein authorized shall be procured under contract, only on such terms and subject to such restrictions as the Secretary of the Navy may deem proper: Provided further, That to expedite construction of the experimental metal-clad airship, $300,000 of the sum of $1,928,000 included in the Navy Department and Naval Establishment appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, for continuing experiments and development work on all types of aircraft may be made immediately available.

PAR. 3. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to build at any navy yard or naval factory any of the aircraft, spare parts, or equipment herein authorized should it reasonably appear that the persons, firms, or corporations, or the agents thereof, bidding for the construction of any of said aircraft, spare parts, or equipment have entered into any combination, agreement, or understanding the effect, object, or purpose of which is to deprive the Government of fair, open, and unrestricted competition in letting contracts for the construction of any of said aircraft, spare parts, or equipment, or should it reasonably appear that any persons, firm, or corporation, or the agents thereof, being solely or peculiarly in position to manufacture or furnish the particular type or design of aircraft, spare parts, or equipment required by the Navy, in bidding on such aircraft, spare parts, or equipment, have named a price in excess of cost of production plus a reasonable profit.

To provide for the construction of the heavier-than-air craft and the lighter-than-air craft herein enumerated and described, except the experimental metal-clad airship, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary, including, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, toward the construction of the heavier-than-air craft program, the sum of not to exceed $12,285,000, and toward the construction of the two rigid airships, to be available until expended, $2,100,000, of which sum $100,000 may be made immediately available.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BUTLER: Page 4, line 10, strike out the figures "1927" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "1928."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCLINTIC: Page 4, line 17, after the word "Government" strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "And provided further, That construction shall not begin on the second rigid airship until the first one has been completed and given satisfactory flight tests."

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides for the construction of two separate types of airships. One is the metal-clad type, which will be of entirely different shape from the gas-balloon type. In other words, until these two ships are completed no one will know which is the proper type for the Navy. That is, the shape of one of them will be wrong and no one can tell which one of those ships is correctly formed.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It would be 1931 before we can finish either one.

Mr. McCLINTIC. That is not in accordance with the provisions of the bill.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It requires three years to construct a Zeppelin, and it will require at least two years to construct a metal-clad ship, and the proposal of the gentleman is that you can not build the second one until the first is completed.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I do not accept the gentleman's statement as being correct. It is clearly a matter of opinion. The metal-type ship costs only $300,000, and, according to the statement made by Mr. Upton before the committee, the plans, the blue prints, and a large part of the overhead work is already completed. The first flight tests of the Italian ship, or very soon thereafter, resulted in a great disaster. The first flight test of the American ship built in England resulted in a terrible disaster. Why would it not be in the interest of safety to construct one of these ships and see whether or not it will fly? There never has been constructed a ship as large as the two proposed in this legislation. We have no precedent ahead of us which we can follow to know whether they can be operated in a successful manner.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Not now. If we do that, then it may not be necessary to construct another hangar to take care of these two ships. What I want is to proceed in a safe and business-like manner, and if we do then the second ship completed will be the most efficient dirigible in all the world, because we will profit by the experience of the ship that has already been completed. I am not against the principles of this legislation. I have supported it all the way through, but I am simply trying to call attention to a business situation, to a policy which, if enacted into law, will safeguard the construction of at least one of these 6,000,000 cubic feet dirigibles, and I see no reason why we should not proceed slowly and carefully and safely so that we may avoid what might bring about a disaster in the future. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Is it not a fact that these two rigid ships provided for are nearly three times as large as the Shenandoah and larger than any airship that is proposed to be built by any other power in the world?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I have just made the statement that we have no precedent in all the world to follow, and I am not against the provisions of this legislation. I simply want to safeguard this bill in such a way that when we have completed this all-metal type of ship we will know whether or not it is the type and shape that should be copied in building the two large ships. I am afraid if we start out and try to construct these two ships on the same plan, we will not be able to get the best results.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, may I have two minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I want to say that the statement has been made that we will save a lot of money by starting on the construction of these two ships at the same time. Is that the policy of the Navy when it proceeds to build ships that are to be used in the fleet?

What would happen if the Navy would adopt a policy to contract all ships to the same company? We do not do it that way. We allocate these ships to the concerns that make the best bids. Suppose we did lose $50,000 by making a little delay? Of what importance is that when you consider that the delay in the construction of the second ship might result in that second ship being three times as efficient as the other one?

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. And you might postpone the cost of the hangar for two or three years. And the postponement of the date of the second ship is not going to postpone the date of the final construction of the ship?

Mr. McCLINTIC. No.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It will not be necessary to build any hangar even if you do build the two ships.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Well, it might be possible to get these two ships and the Los Angeles all in the Lakehurst hangar at the same time, but, in my opinion, they would be so crowded that you would not be able to handle them in the proper manner.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The hangar is large enough to take care of these two dirigibles.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Admitting for the sake of the argument that the statement of the gentleman from Georgia is correct, that does not do away with the necessity for the postponement of the construction of the second ship until the first is completed and successful and satisfactory flights are made.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It will be three years before you finish these dirigibles. It would be far wiser now to build the two than to merely build the one.

Mr. McCLINTIC. The first ship to be completed is the all-metal type; and this all-metal type, according to the testimony given before the committee, is of an entirely different shape from the one that is to be constructed with 6,000,000 cubic feet capacity, and it has been said that the new type of ship will be more efficient and will be better in all respects than the larger-sized ship.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The construction of the metal ship is not dependent on the fabrication of the other ship. Is it not a fact that the Navy Department may never authorize the expenditure of the $300,000 for experimental work on this so-called metal ship?

Mr. McCLINTIC. No. After that question was considered by the House, it was decided that the Navy would proceed with the construction, regardless of any action by our committee.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Is it not a fact that the Navy Department will not spend the money unless they have some assurance that it will be successful?

Mr. McCLINTIC. No; I do not think it is a fact.

Mr. BUTLER. My friend will remember that some of us hesitated on this metal ship until we knew what the terms prescribed by the Navy Department would be, that this must be a ship that can be used, before the $150,000 is paid.

Mr. McCLINTIC. The appropriation bill makes available a certain amount of money for the construction of a ship of this type; and when satisfactory arrangements are made by Admiral Moffett for the building of this ship, the Navy will let a contract for its completion.

Mr. BUTLER. But the $150,000 will not be paid unless this is satisfactory.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I agree with the gentleman. But if they do build this all-metal ship, it will be finished much sooner than the larger type; and if that is true, you would have the advantage of knowing whether or not they are more efficient.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may be allowed to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman seems to be laboring under the impression that the appropriation which the House recently approved in reference to the metal-clad ship would be considered a direction to the Navy Department. If the bill finally passes the Senate and is signed by the President, to immediately start the construction of the metal ship. I will say for the information of the gentleman that the Navy Department understands, and the Committee on Appropriations made it clear to them, that the matter will be entirely left to their discretion as to whether or not the $300,000 would be available for that purpose.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I am very glad to have the statement of the gentleman; but I want to ask him, Does he know of any department of this Government in the last 50 years when money has been made available for expenditure that did not spend it? They always get rid of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Oklahoma may have one minute more.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may have five minutes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I object.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. You are going to have all the time you want on this bill, and you are not going to pass it this evening.

The CHAIRMAN (after counting). One hundred and eight gentlemen are present. A quorum is present. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] is recognized.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, in the discussion of this particular item in the bill the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCLINTIC] has lost sight of a very important thing. It is possible that he does not remember certain testimony that was brought out during the hearings before the committee. The gentleman from Oklahoma either did not hear or has overlooked some of the testimony of Mr. Upson, the man who is to build this metal-class ship.

The capacity of this ship, the size of it, is to be approximately 300,000 cubic feet. I asked Mr. Upson why they fixed upon that particular size of a ship for their first ship. He made the statement that that particular type of ship was in the process of development and that they wished to build only the size which they could safely build in this early period of the development, and that is why they did not propose to build a larger ship of the metal type.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I understand the proposition of the gentleman from Oklahoma to be, regardless of any testimony before the committee or anything else, that in this bill you are proposing to build two rigid airships?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. One metal ship and two fabric ships. Now, he simply proposes that you complete the ship you are going to build and test it before you build the other. Have we not been criticized enough in this country for doing things on a big scale as to the Air Service and without knowing where we were going?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Congress has not been so careful about the building of types of ships for the Navy that have proven successful. Congress does not hesitate to authorize the construction of 8 or 10 cruisers or 3 or 4 battleships at one time, and every ship that is built by the Navy incorporates new ideas and new developments. I want to carry that other thought a little further. I ask Mr. Upson what would be the next size of metal-clad airship he would build in this process of development. He said approximately 750,000 cubic feet, and he stated very specifically to the committee that the men who are building this new type of ship would not by any means jump immediately into the large size. It will take many years to develop the metal-clad ship to the point where the fabric ship is now developed, and I very seriously doubt the wisdom of holding up the building of the types we know are successful pending the development of the metal clad.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, the committee has already adopted an amendment which I offered this afternoon, and within the last 15 minutes, fixing 1928 as the time when they must begin these ships. If you adopt this amendment, they will never build them, and you can not get them. It will take three years before they have one ship completed.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Is it not a fact that the British Navy is now constructing two 5,000,000 cubic feet ships, and by the time they finish those ships we will have the benefit of their experience in engineering and that will be before we commence on ours?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes. And within two or three years, according to our information, they will build a ship larger than this one.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Did not the English Government complete one of those ships before it built the other?

Mr. BUTLER. No. They are building them both at this time.

Mr. McCLINTIC. But they started the second one after they completed the first one?

Mr. BUTLER. No.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Well, suppose both fail? Then they will lose about $10,000,000?

Mr. BUTLER. That is true; and these things may fail. We can make no guaranty about them.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. My friend and colleague from Oklahoma has stated as one of his chief objections to the authorization of the building of these two ships practically at the same time that we have had no ships of this size heretofore, and, therefore, the matter is largely experimental.

The capacity of the Shenandoah and the Los Angeles in each case was a little more than 2,000,000 cubic feet. Here it is proposed to build two dirigibles each of 6,000,000 cubic feet capacity, approximately three times the cubic capacity of the largest ships we have had heretofore.

Now, gentlemen, we are likely to draw erroneous inferences from that statement. We are likely to conclude that by reason of the fact that we are to get three times the capacity that we are to have a ship of three times the size, but bear in mind that these dimensions of length and breadth and height do not increase in accordance with the cubical capacity of the ship, and that a ship of 6,000,000 cubic feet capacity will be but about 100 feet longer than either the Los Angeles or the Shenandoah; it will be but approximately 35 feet more in diameter; and so, instead of being three times the size of the ships we have had, it will be relatively very little larger, and by reason of the greater diameter it will, perhaps, have greater strength.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Take a well that will hold 10,000 cubic feet and one that will hold 30,000 cubic feet; would not the one that will hold 30,000 cubic feet be three times as large as the one that will hold 10,000 cubic feet?

Mr. LANHAM. From the standpoint of the cubical capacity it will hold three times as much, but I am speaking about measurements. The Los Angeles, as I recall, is about 650 feet long, or something like that. Now, it will require a ship about 780 feet long to hold three times as much gas as the Los Angeles, and the diameter will have to be increased, perhaps, 35 feet.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Of course, we are measuring the contents of these ships by their cubical capacity, and we are not talking about the length and breadth.

Mr. LANHAM. I understand; but what I mean to say is that from the standpoint of aviation our problems are practically the same with reference to a ship 650 feet long and 70 feet in diameter that they would be with reference to a ship 750 feet long and 100 feet in diameter. Your problem is not magnified threefold by the fact that your capacity is increased three times.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. How does the gentleman get around this phase of the situation? The leading engineer brought a type of a model before us of a metal type ship which was built in an entirely different shape from the one that is proposed to be built—that is, the 6,000,000 cubic feet type—and he said that this ship represents the latest idea according to their viewpoint, and will be more efficient because it acts better when you take into consideration the contact of the wind.

Mr. LANHAM. That was a metal ship to hold only 200,000 or 300,000 cubic feet, one on a par with our ships which we have in the Army and the Navy like the C type in the Navy and the TC type in the Army.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLINTIC. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to complete my questions. Both of these ships are filled with helium gas?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. And both of them are propelled by gasoline?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Then one of them is bound to be constructed wrong.

Mr. LANHAM. No; they are of an entirely different type. One of them is a rigid ship and the other is not. In our C type ship in the Navy and our TC type in the Army there is but one bag holding all the gas, whereas in the larger ship there are compartments that hold the gas. The gas may leak out of several of these compartments but the ship would remain afloat, which is not the case with the C type or with the metal type or the TC type in the Army.

Mr. McCLINTIC. But Mr. Upson stated that if we built the metal-type ship in a larger size it would have several compartments also.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. And he further testified that if you built a 6,000,000 cubic-foot metal ship it would be practically of the same shape and of the same construction as the 6,000,000 fabric ship.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to call attention to one other thing. Of course, the larger the ship the greater is the lifting power, and with the larger type ship there is greater efficiency.

We are to leave this matter of construction to the discretion of the experts of the Navy Department after all, and, if it is to be left to their discretion, why should we hamper them by putting in a provision here that they must wait until one ship is entirely completed before they can begin the building of the other ship?

I want to call your attention to the report on the bill contained in Document No. 203:

The cost of a single rigid of this size would probably run $5,000,000. The second will cost much less, especially if built simultaneously. It is expected that a ship of this size would be a really useful and valuable addition to the Navy. We have facilities at Lakehurst from which to operate the two ships. With two ships the development of operating practice with the fleet and the demonstration of their value to the surface fleet will be much accelerated.

It is probable that the second airship will not be completed until well after the first has been flown for a considerable period. Consequently the second will incorporate any improvements suggested by the first.

In other words, it is the purpose of the Navy to suspend the final completion of the second ship until they have learned the lessons that may be derived from the first, but nevertheless much of the work on the two may go forward, and more cheaply, side by side; and since we must leave the matter to the discretion of our experts anyway, we should not hamper them in their construction of these vessels by saying that they can not start on the second one until they have completed the first one. England now is building two simultaneously and we will have the advantage that will come from the lessons to be learned from the construction of those two ships by England and from the first one we will build.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate upon my colleague's amendment may be closed in five minutes. I would like to say to the committee that it is desirable, if we can, to pass this bill to-night. For one, I would like to have some rest to-morrow, but if it is not passed to-night, I will ask that we proceed with its consideration to-morrow.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman from Alabama says he is perfectly willing for the committee to vote on the question now without having the benefit of his observations, and I suggest we vote and make some progress on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLACK of Texas) there were—ayes 14, noes 61.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McSWAIN: On page 5, line 8, add the following as part of paragraph 2:

"To encourage the development of aviation and to make available for such purpose all American citizens with knowledge, ability, and skill, the Secretary of the Navy, under general rules formulated and published by him and approved by the President, is authorized to offer prizes or premiums, not exceeding $100,000 in any case, for the greatest improvement in the designs of aircraft, or any part thereof, said competition to be open to all American citizens that shall comply with such regulations, and notice of each such competition shall be published in three or more magazines or newspapers having nation-wide circulation, and such notice shall set out in a general way the terms of the competition, the general nature of improvement or development sought, and the amount of cash prize offered, and any machine, model, or device that shall be accepted as the winner shall henceforth be the property of the United States, which shall have the right to manufacture or to have manufactured other machines, aircraft, or parts at pleasure from the same design or model without liability to the inventor or designer, but such successful competitor shall have the right to patent same, if otherwise patentable, and to enjoy the exclusive right thereof as against all persons other than the United States Government, or any department thereof. Other competitors shall have their inventions, designs, or devices returned to them after each such competition without prejudice to their rights as inventors to have same patented."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the proposed amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes, Mr. Chairman. The general subject of the bill is the promotion of aircraft and aircraft equipment, construction, and procurement.

Mr. Chairman, the paragraph to which the amendment is offered deals with experimental metal-clad airships and such matters relating to the construction of an experimental metal-clad airship.

This is a proposition to continue the experimentation on a nation-wide scale, to use the brains, the inventive genius of every man and boy in this country. When they see the advertisement in the Saturday Evening Post, the Literary Digest, or Harper's Weekly that the United States Government is offering $25,000, $10,000, $50,000 for an improved device in the controls or in the equipment connected with the aircraft, it will put the brains that are now latent—the brains of boys who in the future may become Thomas A. Edisons—to work, stimulate them to produce aircraft in whole or in part or its equipment or its devices, so that the experiment section will become nation-wide and this Nation will make progress in a way that otherwise would never be made.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. May I direct the gentleman's attention to lines 12 and 16 in the section proposed to be amended, in which it is provided that one or both of said airships shall be constructed either under contract similar to contracts covering the construction of other vessels for the Navy or by the Navy Department as the Secretary of the Navy may deem to be in the best interest of the Government?

Mr. McSWAIN. I thank the gentleman for that contribution. We are dealing with a proposition to encourage and promote aviation. If this should be held germane to this particular paragraph, I propose to offer it to another paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The bill under consideration has the following title:

To authorize the construction and procurement of aircraft and aircraft equipment in the Navy and Marine Corps, and to adjust and define the status of the operating personnel in connection therewith.

The first section of the bill says that the President of the United States is hereby authorized to undertake the construction and procurement of airplanes, spare parts, and equipment for the Navy, specifying the number, cost, and time of procurement of such planes.

Section 2 in the first paragraph provides that the President may procure by contract or purchase two rigid airships, and paragraph 2, to which this amendment is proposed, provides for a metal airship at a cost not to exceed $300,000. Paragraph 3 contains restrictions with reference to the interference with free competition in bidding for the construction of the airships authorized in the bill.

Section 3 merely deals with the personnel that are to operate the aircraft now on hand and to be procured under the provisions of the bill.

The provision embodied in this amendment offering, generally, a prize for aircraft development, aircraft invention, design, and construction is manifestly not germane to the section. It is not only not germane to the paragraph, but the Chair will state, in view of the statement of the gentleman from South Carolina that it is his intention to offer it as a new section, that in the opinion of the Chair the amendment is not germane to the bill itself. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, after line 25, add the following: "That it shall be unlawful, in every case where competition is invited for the purpose of letting any contract for the purchase, construction, or designing of any aircraft, or any part thereof, for any person, firm, or corporation, their officers, agents, or employees, to enter into any agreement, combination, or understanding calculated or intended to prevent, restrain, or limit, directly or indirectly, free, open, and fair competition in bidding for designing or constructing or repairing any aircraft or parts, and any person, firm, or corporation indicted, tried, and convicted of violating the provisions of this act shall be sentenced to pay a fine of not more than $1,000,000 or imprisonment not more than 20 years, or both, at the discretion of the court."

Mr. CHINDBLOM and Mr. VINSON of Georgia reserved points of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. McSWAIN. On the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. No; points of order are reserved, and the Chair does not care to hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] yesterday, I think, expressed what I believe is the sentiment of 95 per cent of the membership of this House, and 95 per cent of the people of this country, that it is a dangerous proposition to cut out the provision of law that has been the protection of this Nation for 100 years and more, that requires competitive bids in letting contracts for building airships or water ships, or any other Government property. I am proud to say that the Committee on Naval Affairs comes in with a unanimous report agreeing not merely that the law shall stand, as it now is, but they provide by this paragraph 3 in section 2 to strengthen the present requirements of the law so that if the Navy Department smells around and finds out what they think is collusion or what the gentleman from Pennsylvania said "they called euphemistically a gentlemen's agreement," or mere understanding, they can proceed under the law to build these aircraft in the Government's own shops.

We all understood what he [Mr. BUTLER] understood when he said that an understanding is just a downright deliberate plan to extract from the Treasury of this Nation money in excess of the just and reasonable market value of the commodity to be sold or the service to be rendered. There is too wide a sentiment throughout this country to the effect that the Treasury of the Nation is a common prey for anybody who has brains enough to plunder it. Lots of people think that it is smart to get into the Treasury if they can, and rather applaud the man who can.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Does not the gentleman think that the language of paragraph 3 of section 2 requires the sharpest competition, or else the Navy will construct its own aircraft factory?

Mr. McSWAIN. Absolutely, but I think I can satisfy my friend why we should go a little further. This provides that if the Navy Department, pending negotiations, finds what it then thinks is something like a gentleman's agreement, a "clubbing of bidders" among bidders, then it shall stop this competitive bidding and build the ships in the Government factory.

But suppose the Navy Department does not find that out; suppose these gentlemen had their meeting so far away from Washington, so secret and elusive, that the Navy Department will never know nor reasonably suspect they have met in some hotel room and have agreed in advance how they will all bid.

Mr. BUTLER. How are we going to convict them if we do not find them out?

Mr. McSWAIN. Evidence always comes out after a crime is committed, after the smart trick has been turned, after the contract has been let. Perhaps years after the ship is built some smart-Aleck business man basking in the sunshine down yonder in East Palm Beach, near Cuba, or out in California, will begin to brag and talk about how he did the Government, or maybe somebody working for him will tell it. They Department of Justice can then have him face the courts of this country. We talk about censuring some judges for having pity for a poor boy who reaches his arm into a baker's window to get a loaf of bread to satisfy his hungry body. Larceny such as that is not comparable in corruption with the deliberate plan of a well educated, shrewd, big business man to rob his Government's Treasury and of the tax resources that the hard-working people of the Nation have put there as a trust fund for the defense of the Nation. I have more sympathy for a common thief than I have for such a business man who uses his ingenuity, his sagacity to scheme to get millions from the Government's Treasury. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I call my colleague's attention to the fact that all of the difficulties that he has spoken of here that may appear must, under the language of paragraph 3 of section 2, "reasonably" appear. I wonder if it would not be stronger to strike out the word "reasonably." Why not just say "should it appear"? What is the use of putting a word in there and letting them strain over it?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. This is the identical language that deals with the authorization for the construction of battleships.

Mr. BUTLER. And has been always.

Mr. McSWAIN. That language is all right, but it does not go far enough. The common law and fraud statutes that are on the statute books of every State in the Union do not undertake to convict a man who commits fraud in advance of the deed. This is to protect the Government after we have done business with the crook, and to put the thief behind the bars and make him disgorge some of the millions that he may have extracted from our Treasury by going into the Navy Department and pretending that there has been a competitive bid, when, in fact, they have done something the night before in the Mayflower Hotel or some other hotel, and agreed in advance just what their bids will be, when everyone knows who will be the successful bidder. Every man on this floor is familiar with the old trick of letting bridge contracts. A certain county is to build a bridge, say, over on Beaver Dam Creek, and the letting is before the county commissioners. The night before all the bridge builders get together and they agree in advance who shall have this particular bridge, and they put in a dozen bids, and they all look mighty nice and clean. The county commissioners never know beforehand, but the bidders know before they ever sign their names to their bids just exactly who will get the contract. The man who makes the lowest bid gets the contract, and the next time another contractor makes the lowest and gets the bridge contract and the next time another one, and when they have all gotten around and every contractor had his day, and they have each one filled his pocket with fat profits to which he was not justly and morally entitled.

Mr. HOCH. Is there not a statute now against conspiracy for fraud?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes; but this might not be construed to be expressed fraud, constituting a crime. This does not say fraudulent understanding, crime, or arrangement. What is fraud? Fraud, as the judge will charge the jury must be a conscious, sinful purpose to deprive another person unlawfully and wrongfully of his property. But here we undertake to say to a specific class of contractors, and put them on notice, that if they do not play fair with their Government, they not only can not do business with the Navy Department but, if they get by the Navy Department, if they fool the Navy officers, if they deceive them, then they may hereafter have to face a petit jury, and if convicted, pay a fine and serve a sentence.

I believe that some individuals deeply interested financially in private aircraft factories have been carrying on deliberate and far-reaching propaganda to eliminate competitive bidding in letting contracts for Government aircraft for the use of either the Army, the Navy, the Post Office, or any other department. We remember very well that these propagandists through at least one, if not more, highly intelligent and widely influential spokesman, convinced for the time being at least the members of the special committee of this House, commonly called the Lampert Committee, to recommend the elimination of competitive bidding under certain conditions. This same propaganda was continued before the President's Aircraft Board, commonly called the Morrow Board, and resulted in the same recommendation.

I do not know who Mr. Paul Henderson is, but to-day's mail brings from him a reprint of an article in World's Work for April, 1926, entitled, "America takes the lead in Aviation," by Howard Mingos. I do not know Howard Mingos, nor what his business is, but this paragraph from page 636 of said magazine is manifestly the heart and purpose of his effort:

In trying to solve the problem of national defense the investigators stumbled upon the chief difficulty. It was this: As a munitions industry American aviation would always have remained dwarfed, struggling along under a badly arranged Federal contract system. In an emergency the industry could not be expanded to meet military requirements. It would be necessary to develop commercial aviation for the national defense. Each year civil aviation measures had been introduced in Congress—to die of neglect at the close of the session and invariably in the midst of a bitter investigation. It is now recognized that those congressional inquiries have been most important, for Congress has become educated in aircraft matters.

The Hon. Dwight W. Morrow appeared before the Military Affairs Committee and earnestly and ably urged the modification of the present law so that either the Navy Department or the War Department, or any other department, might enter into a contract with any aircraft manufacturer without any competitive bidding whatever and with a virtual invitation and instruction to the representative of the Government to pay the manufacturer more than the aircraft might actually be worth, in order to justify the manufacturer in maintaining a large overhead expense and to enable it to pay dividends on its stock so that it might stay in business and thus an aircraft industry be fostered and sustained by this direct bounty and subsidy from the Government.

I am proud to say that from the time this suggestion was first made until this good day I have been fighting this proposition to eliminate competitive bidding with all my energy and limited power and influence. I am proud of the continuous opposition and fight that I made in the Committee on Military Affairs against this very insidious and dangerous propaganda for a period of more than 60 days; and although the vote of the committee stood 11 in favor of "no competition in bidding" as against 10, including myself, in favor of preserving the present requirements of competitive bidding, yet it became manifest that the committee could never hope to receive the indorsement of the House of Representatives if it were divided so nearly equally on so important a proposition. Therefore I feel a modest pride in having contributed to the defeat of such a dangerous suggestion. Finally the Committee on Military Affairs abandoned the thought of including within its bill any provision to eliminate competitive bidding.

You may therefore imagine my great pleasure—indeed, my joy—when I learned that the Committee on Naval Affairs had unanimously rejected the proposition to eliminate competitive bidding and had gone further and provided that if there should be evidence of any understanding or agreement amongst the manufacturers tending to deprive the Government of the benefits of free, open, and unrestricted competition, then the Government might build its own aircraft in its own factories. From this effort to grease the hinges of the Treasury—in fact, to give the Treasury as to aircraft manufacturers a door swung on double-action hinges, swinging back and forth in either direction—there comes further propaganda in the form of extracts from the testimony of Mr. Howard E. Coffin before the special committee of the House of Representatives, and perhaps before the Morrow committee, printed on very expensive paper, with elaborate illustrations and handsomely gotten up; and the heart and meat of this propaganda is evidently contained in this paragraph, which I quote from page 21:

More or less arbitrary selection should be made of those plants and those technicians best qualified to aid in the governmental program, and development and production contracts should be so distributed between them as to keep them profitably and continuously employed. Questions of cost and profits are of secondary importance, but may be readily adjusted when a proper and sympathetic realization of the common interest has been achieved. By all means discontinue without delay the necessity for the present "low-bid" form of purchase contract.

I have offered a substitute for the crude and unscientific proposition to encourage the aircraft industry and the progress of the science of aeronautics made by the aircraft manufacturers to subsidize them from the Public Treasury, but so far my suggestion has had rather rough sledding. When section 2 of the bill had been read, I offered the following amendment by way of addition to the existing language, but a point of order was made that the amendment was not germane either to the section under consideration or to the bill itself, and the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union sustained the point of order and ruled the amendment out of order. However, several members of the Committee on Naval Affairs expressed deep interest in the suggestion and said to me that they regretted that I had not appeared before the committee while they had the bill under consideration and suggested this method of encouragement, but very naturally they are loath to accept a very important amendment, fixing a far-reaching policy, without having given the matter very mature consideration. My amendment was in the following language:

To encourage the development of aviation and to make available for such purpose all American citizens with knowledge, ability, and skill, the Secretary of the Navy, under general rules formulated and published by him and approved by the President, is authorized to offer prizes or premiums, not exceeding $100,000 in any case, for the greatest improvement in the designs of aircraft, or any part thereof, said competition to be open to all American citizens that shall comply with such regulations, and notice of each such competition shall be published in three or more magazines or newspapers having nation-wide circulation, and such notice shall set out in a general way the terms of the competition, the general nature of improvement or development sought, and the amount of cash prize offered, and any machine, model, or device that shall be accepted as the winner shall henceforth be the property of the United States, which shall have the right to manufacture or to have manufactured other machines, aircraft, or parts at pleasure from the same design or model without liability to the inventor or designer, but such successful competitor shall have the right to patent same, if otherwise patentable, and to enjoy the exclusive right thereof as against all persons other than the United States Government, or any department thereof. Other competitors shall have their inventions, designs, or devices returned to them after each such competition without prejudice to their rights as inventors to have same patented.

The purpose of this amendment is not entirely manifest without some explanation. I recognize that aeronautics are just in their infancy. I recognize that it is a new art and a new industry, and I am profoundly impressed with the far-reaching importance that it will exert in the future both in war and in peace. Therefore I am ambitious that our Nation is not only keeping abreast in the development of this common art, but that we may lead the van and keep ahead of other nations in the development of aviation, just as we have done in the practical application of electricity, the telegraph, the telephone, wireless telegraphy, and radio; just as we have done in the practical application of steam and steam transportation on land and water; just as we have done in the development of the internal-combustion engine as applied to the automobile; just as we have done in farm implements and in textile machinery and in a thousand labor-saving devices.

Now there is this wide fundamental difference between the view that I take and the view represented by the report of the Morrow committee and of the Lampert committee. My view is that genius does not reside in the drafting room nor in the designing staff of a large manufacturing corporation that soon becomes bound by red tape and bureaucratic methods. The well-educated and skillful engineers and designers and draftsmen of these large aircraft manufacturing concerns will only work six, or seven, or eight hours a day, and they must play their golf and have their dinner parties and their dances in the evening, and their work becomes a mere routine, looking to the clock and to the end of the month as the measure of their service.

Then where does genius reside? Where have all great inventions come from? Does not all history show that far-reaching development, fundamental inventions, and real progress has come from the poor man who works in either the basement or the garret, who rigs up his little work shop in the garage or in the barn, or in the "village smithy"? Mr. Chairman, if you let the newspapers and magazines broadcast through this Nation the information and fact that the Navy Department and the War Department and the Post Office Department and the Agricultural Department, and maybe other departments of the Government will offer prizes, cash prizes, in varying sums of money, depending upon the importance and supposed value of the improvement shown to be made in aircraft or parts of aircraft—maybe the prize will be $5,000 in cash, or $25,000 in cash, or $50,000 in cash, and not more than $100,000 in cash—then not only the bureaucratic red-tape staff of two, or three, or four big aircraft manufacturers will set their brains to work, but tens of thousands, and maybe hundreds of thousands, of people—men, women, boys, girls, of all grades of experience and education and vision and imagination and talent—will set their minds to the solution of the problems presented by the various competitions proposed by these departments.

These private individuals, these men and women and boys, working in their private shops in either cellar or garret or garage or barn, will not know any eight-hour law; they will work perhaps all night when they find they are close upon the solution of the problem. They will not be bound by red tape. Their brains will not be blurred by dinner parties and whirling dances. They will concentrate their thought upon their tasks, and out of this multitude of searchers after truth will come the discovery of truth. Ten thousand seekers are more apt to find it than one-half dozen seekers.

Then the difference between my solution and the Morrow Board solution is fundamental. My solution proposes to arouse the ambition and to stir the effort and to stimulate the energy of 10,000 minds, whereas the Morrow Board report merely proposes to pay subsidies out of the Treasury in order to pay dividends on the stock of huge corporations engaged in the manufacture of aircraft, so that they may be kept in business. The aircraft industry will grow without Government subsidy, just as the automobile industry grew and must grow, as the electrical industry has grown, and just as the industry based on steam power has grown. But in order to stimulate the development, in order to bring about more rapid progress in aviation, I am willing to offer these prizes, these cash premiums, in order to put America in the lead in every respect of aviation.

Mr. Chairman, to make some estimate of the amount of money that will be saved to the Treasury by rejecting the effort to remove the restrictions of competitive bidding in the purchase of aircraft is not very difficult. If the naval program and the Army program become law, then in the next five years these two departments alone will spend about $150,000,000 for aircraft of all kinds and aircraft parts. Under the law as it now stands we may reasonably hope and expect to get nearly 100 per cent of value for the money that we spend.

The aircraft manufacturers will be bidding against one another unless they conspire and collude to make false and fictitious bids, and it is reasonably safe to assume that the lowest bidder will be somewhere in the neighborhood of the reasonable market value of the commodity to be sold. But what would have happened if the bridge had been taken off? Under the virtual instructions to the department to pay more than the market value of the aircraft, to pick out favorite and selected manufacturers and to pay them huge prices, enough to support enormous overhead expenses, with no limitation on salaries of officers and salaries paid to engineers, architects, and designers, and in addition to this to pay good dividends on the stock, then we may be safe in calculating that at least one-third more than the actual value would be paid for the aircraft bought and delivered. That being so, these favorite aircraft manufacturers would have received a bonus of at least $50,000,000 in the form of a subsidy from the Treasury of the United States. This subsidy would not increase the number of manufacturers, would not expand the industry, but would merely make profitable certain favorite business concerns now already in the aircraft industry. Naturally, therefore, Mr. Chairman, I have a just pride in having contributed in a small and humble way to the defeat of proposed legislation that would have taken from the Treasury for the next five years at least $50,000,000 without any proper, fair, and honest return. But this $50,000,000 bonus would be a mere beginner. Other departments will be using aircraft in increasing numbers. The Army and the Navy must, in the future, buy more aircraft unless the world agrees to disarm. The War Department and the Navy Department have been asking for the elimination of competition for other articles, such as Signal Corps equipment and chemical warfare service. Already the Ordnance Department has authority to buy certain articles that have the quality of military secrecy without competitive bidding. But it would never do to extend this privilege one inch. Military secrets exist largely in the imagination of some people. Every nation has its intelligence service prying into the military progress of other nations. In fact, many friendly nations exchange military intelligence and invite the military attachés of other nations to see their latest improvements in weapons.

So, Mr. Chairman, this agitation about aviation has done much good already. It has called to the attention of Congress and of the country the reactionary attitude of mind of those in high command and control of the Army and the Navy. It has developed and made conspicuous the lack of coordination and cooperation between the Army and the Navy. It has exposed the duplication of services between the Army and the Navy that costs our taxpayers at least a hundred million dollars a year. The Lampert committee unanimously recommended in favor of a single department of national defense. The Morrow committee, composed of able men specially selected for the particular purpose, admitted that there are many strong arguments in favor of a single department of national defense, but recommended against the adoption of same. Of course, it would have been impossible for men like General Harbord and Admiral Fletcher to uproot a lifetime of prejudices and of habits of thought and to agree with civilians like the Hon. Dwight W. Morrow and others that a single department of national defense could promote economy and efficiency in both the Army and the Navy. It may take two or three years more of agitation to educate the mind of the country and of the Congress to the point of realizing the necessity of a single department of national defense. The committees of Congress are beginning to do their own thinking. The social lobby is not as powerful as it used to be. Soon the big taxpayers and their magazines will begin talking and writing about how a hundred million dollars ought to be saved in our defense activities and must be saved by the establishment of a single department of national defense and at the same time our defense forces be more effective.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has again expired.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Paragraph 3 of section 2 provides certain safeguards against practices in connection with the manufacture and procurement of these aircraft which are deemed inimical to the best interests of the Government. The amendment offered strengthens the safeguard and provides an additional safeguard by imposing a penalty for the practices which are so described and which are here dealt with. It seems to the Chair, therefore, that the amendment is germane both with respect to subject matter and with respect to purpose. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. McSWAIN. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 30, yeas 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FRENCH rose.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to see if we can get an agreement as to time. It is coming on 5 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment pending, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana: Page 5, line 9, strike out the word "authorized" and insert in lieu thereof the word "directed." Insert a period after the word "authorized," in line 11, and strike out the balance of the paragraph.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, this is subject to a point of order. I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. It merely strikes out. It clearly is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will examine the amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. It simply strikes out the paragraph there that directs the Secretary of the Navy to build these airplanes if there is any cheating proposed. I am not in favor of striking that out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York on the point of order.

Mr. TABER. The amendment proposes to strike out the word "authorized" and inserts in place of it the word "directed."

The CHAIRMAN. It is not with reference to the construction of the ships herein authorized, but with reference to constructing in the navy yards such ships as are authorized and, by implication, may be later appropriated for. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact that the section reads:

The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to build at any navy yard or naval factory any of the aircraft, spare parts, or equipment herein authorized.

He is already, under certain circumstances, authorized and directed so to do, and this simply makes the direction complete. The Chair does not think the amendment is subject to a point of order.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Certainly.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The effect of the gentleman's amendment is to require all the airplanes and spare parts to be built in the navy yard or air factory at Philadelphia, and precludes the industry from having opportunity to bid.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does not the amendment strike out everything after the word "authorized"?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. So that instead of the amendment reading as it now does, it provides that the Secretary of the Navy shall be authorized to do the work in the navy yards or factories under certain conditions, and the amendment would make it certain that this work should be done always in navy yards and naval factories.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The gentleman from Louisiana is recognized.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the purpose which I hope to accomplish through the amendment which I have offered has been clearly apprehended by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDELOM] and those other Members who seem to believe that a point of order might lie against my offer. I want the construction and procurement of aircraft and aircraft equipment for the Navy and the Marine Corps confined to the navy yards and the Government establishments. When the Military Committee brings in its aircraft program for consideration by the House I hope that some Member, if it be necessary, will offer an amendment similar to the one that I have just proposed to the pending bill. Common sense makes it clear to everyone in and out of this House that we are laying the foundation in this bill for an aircraft superstructure in the future that will make planes and dirigibles as numerous as flies. Aircraft factories and plants will stimulate the public imagination by propaganda that will result in an irresistible pressure upon Congress to build more and more planes. Our Government will be drained of its gold, its Treasury will be exhausted by the builders of aircrafts who will clamor for more machines under the guise of protecting the country from some imaginary invasion that will be painted in such lurid colors and letters as to make it a reality and actuality in the ofing to the minds of our patriotic Americans who are always anxious to answer the bugle blast of their country. It is an old game to play upon the fears of a people, and patriotism knows no greater stimulant than the suggestion of an invasion from across either one of the two great oceans. Such an attitude, the result of profit-making influence, inevitably carries a nation into war. It is against such an attitude that I am protesting through the amendment which I have offered.

I want to see our country prepared for offense when such a position is unavoidable and undertake offensive measures when all other measures of an honorable nature have failed to prevent such an extraordinary course. I want your country and my country to be prepared from the standpoint of defense at all times. Our honor and our national dignity must always be maintained and our commercial interests fully protected. This consummation can be secured by an adequate Naval and Military Establishment free from the suspicion that attaches to a constantly expanding war machine. I want your land and my land to be free from the war mania, however, that leads to blood, tears, agony, and death. Millions for defense, but not one cent for tribute to a foreign foe or to the patriot who wraps himself in the flag of our country and as an interested munition profit maker and taker urges preparedness and more preparedness, in order that his factories engaged in the manufacture and output of war apparatus and necessities might be driven to the limit. I want to confine the production of war material and necessities, the building of battleships, cruisers, submarines, and aircraft to our governmental establishments, free from the voice of the propagandists and the alarmist who makes shudders out of arousing the fears of his countrymen. I want to take the profit out of war and, as far as I can, remove from the minds of our people the hellish, greedy, and rapacious influences that have prospered and gotten rich and opulent out of the miseries of the millions of victims that wonder, like old Caspar's granddaughter, what the famous victory of Blenheim was all about. I want to free our people from the tremendous influence generated and fired by fireside patriots who are willing to add a few dollars more to bursting bank accounts, even though your son and my son die like dogs in the mud on a foreign strand.

Notwithstanding that the world is apparently in a turbulent mood there is much thought in the minds of many people that the conflagration that almost burned this old earth into cinders and ashes did not originate altogether from the standpoint of protecting human rights so much as it was the inevitable and logical consequences of the large armies and navies brought into existence by the unparalleled propaganda that had been urged so adroitly through the recent years. And what came of the war? Just what has come from nine out of ten wars, griefs and agonies that will not be extinguished for years to come. My country, may she always be right, but right or wrong, my country, on the lips of a sincere patriot is the noblest cry that can go up from the throat of an American. But let us make our patriotism free from insidious assaults and prevent them being used for selfish and ignoble purposes. Let us see that the Government controls every avenue that leads to war and is its own munition maker and aircraft maker and submarine maker, and we will have an adequate defense free from the malevolent pernicious, and rapacious influences that apparently can turn wrong into right and distort aggressiveness into patriotism. With the Government in absolute control of the making of war necessities, where there will be no profit for the vulturelike forces that reap millions out of tragedies, there will be less war scares and more common sense, there will be more talk of a friendly nature and less of a belligerent character.

Gentlemen, we are standing close to the edge of another cataclysm. Everyone knows, everyone feels it. It is our duty to do what we can to prevent what is apparent to many minds as the coming test of the world's civilization. No one who listened to the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina on yesterday can escape the conviction that a calamity is impending and that it will require the greatest patriotism and love of humanity the world over to prevent a terrible clash within a relatively few years. He is not the man to prophesy the gloom we all in a faint way see ahead. But he is the man to hope and pray that his country and other countries might avoid a war that will prostrate if not annihilate the greatest civilization which history records.

You heard him and I heard him state in a voice almost choking with tears that he voted for the rule under which we are considering this bill most reluctantly and only because he thought that the terrible necessities that lie ahead would prevent him from adopting any other position. You know and I know that he expressed not only your thought and my thought, but the thought of many men, that unless something be done to check the rising tide that the world will be engulfed by another disaster before many years have swept their way into eternity. Many men and women to-day feel that war is more perceptible within a few years than anyone felt a year before the World War began on never to be forgotten August 1, 1914.

Let us do our best and discharge a solemn duty to our country and to humanity by making for a world peace, by bending off and destroying the psychology that is preparing our sons for the shambles. Let us, I repeat, and I can not repeat it too often, take the profit out of war. Remove from the disputes of nations the greedy influence of the rapacious maker of war material and the disputes will be adjudicated without the firing of a shot, the digging of a trench, or the shedding of a drop of blood. If we believe in peace, why not adopt measures that will make for peace, even in the direction of our war establishment? If we believe in peace why this war-like demeanor and preparation for war, which, if it does not excite the alarm of other nations, will at least justify their expanding their existing war machines? If I had my way I would forever prohibit the manufacture of war equipment and war materials by anyone other than the Government itself, and in that way I am confident I would do more to advance the peace of the world than has ever been accomplished through so-called diplomatic channels.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, we must maintain our dignity and our honor and our national interest. The American flag must be respected here and abroad, but we can accomplish this noble purpose and secure these desirable results to larger and greater advantage by maintaining our patriotism free from the lust of power and uncontaminated by the greed of private interest. We must maintain an adequate Naval and Military Establishment, and not one that will excite the fear, the enmity, and the hostility of other peoples.

Mr. McLEOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I will for a question.

Mr. McLEOD. The gentleman realizes that this amendment, if adopted, would prevent the building of this metal airship?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Yes; I have no doubt about it.

My purpose is clear. I wish to slow up as much as possible the haste that is associated with this bill. I want never to lose sight of an adequate defense, but I want a vision of peace to grow larger and more luminous to the eyes of men. I have not abandoned the hope that peace can be made to reign instead of the sword. I have not given up hope that the voice of reason instead of the cannon's roar can settle many of the disputes that might under a militaristic attitude plunge the world into war. I have faith in the intellectuality of such a mighty civilization as ours, with its wonderful accomplishments and record along engineering, architectural, and journalistic lines, and feel that when its genius, free from rapacity and greed, is brought to bear upon the greatest problem that has ever afflicted the sons of men, that the curse of war will be solved and the question of the ages answered aright.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made in general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks he made in general debate. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SECTION 3 (PERSONNEL)

PARAGRAPH 1. That hereafter when the term "naval aviator" is used in this act or any other act it shall mean any commissioned officer or warrant line officer in the Navy or Marine Corps who has successfully completed the course prescribed by competent authority for naval aviators and who has been or may hereafter be designated or appointed a naval aviator by competent authority and who has flown alone in a heavier-than-air craft not less than 75 hours and who has flown in heavier-than-air craft a total of not less than 200 hours or who has been in the air, under training, in rigid airships not less than 150 hours and successfully completed the course prescribed by competent authority.

PAR. 2. That hereafter when the term "aviation pilot" is used in this act or any other act it shall mean any enlisted man in the Navy or Marine Corps who has successfully completed the course prescribed for aviation pilots and who has been or may hereafter be designated or appointed an aviation pilot by competent authority and who has flown alone in a heavier-than-air craft not less than 75 hours and who has flown in heavier-than-air craft a total of not less than 200 hours.

The term "pilot" shall be construed to mean a naval aviator or an aviation pilot.

PAR. 3. That hereafter when the term "naval observer" is used in this act or any other act it shall mean any commissioned or warrant officer in the Navy or Marine Corps who has successfully completed the course prescribed by competent authority as a naval aviation observer and who has been in the air not less than 100 hours and who has been or may hereafter be designated or appointed as a naval aviation observer by competent authority in the Navy.

PAR. 4. That hereafter when a line officer of the Navy is to be detailed to the command of a Navy aviation school or of a Navy air station or of a Navy air unit organized for flight tactical purposes he shall be a naval aviator.

PAR. 5. Line officers detailed to command of aircraft carriers or aircraft tenders shall be naval aviators or naval aviation observers who are otherwise qualified.

PAR. 6. That any officer of the Navy, line or staff, of the permanent rank or grade of commander or lieutenant commander at the time of the passage of this act who has specialized in aviation for such a period of time as to jeopardize his selection for promotion or advancement to the next higher grade or rank under existing provisions of law and whose service in aviation has been in the public interest shall be so notified by the Secretary of the Navy and at his own request be designated as an officer who will be carried as an additional number in the next higher grade or rank not above the grade of captain if and when promoted or advanced thereto: Provided, That selection boards in cases of such officers shall confine their consideration to the fitness alone of such officers for promotion, not upon the comparative fitness of such officers.

PAR. 7. That hereafter when a line officer of the Marine Corps is to be detailed to the command of a Marine Corps aviation school or of a Marine Corps air station or of a Marine Corps air unit organized for flight tactical purposes he shall be a Marine Corps aviator.

PAR. 8. On and after July 1, 1928, not less than 30 per cent of the total number of pilots employed in the Navy on aviation duty shall be enlisted men.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. McCLINTIC: On page 8, strike out paragraph 6 and insert the following:

"That hereafter officers in the Navy assigned to aviation may be promoted by the examining or selection boards without taking into consideration any rule or regulation relating to sea duty or service in any other branch of the Navy: Provided, That fitness, experience, and qualifications shall be the determining factors to be judged by said boards."

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Gentlemen of the committee, my amendment, which would substitute a new paragraph for paragraph 6, specifically uses the word "may," leaving the entire discretion in the hands of the Navy. The paragraph in the bill as it now reads would only affect those of the grade of commander and lieutenant commander. I am not willing to discriminate against the very heart and backbone of the Navy in aviation by saying to the class of officers who are below the grade of commander and lieutenant commander that they shall carry out and follow all of the rules and regulations of the Navy with respect to sea duty before they can be promoted in aviation. In other words, Mr. Chairman, if this paragraph is adopted in its present form, it discriminates against 115 young officers who are below the rank of commander and lieutenant commander. These officers can never be promoted until they follow the usual rules and regulations that relate to service in other branches of the Navy.

What is the backbone of aviation? Is it the commanders and lieutenant commanders or is it the ensigns, junior lieutenants, and lieutenants? What is the proper age of a man to make a qualified aviator so as to give the bureau the very best service possible? Is it an officer who has reached the grade of commander or lieutenant commander, or is it the officer who has had this experience that comes to those who begin in aviation at the bottom and work up?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Have the present commanders and lieutenant commanders had sea duty?

Mr. McCLINTIC. This paragraph, if you please, as carried in the bill, makes it possible for a commander or a lieutenant commander to avoid sea duty.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am asking whether the commanders and lieutenant commanders, for whom provision is made in paragraph 6 as it stands, have had sea duty?

Mr. McCLINTIC. I think not.

Mr. BUTLER. They have not. They are subject to the rule of selection, and they will be thrown out unless this provision is made for them.

Mr. McCLINTIC. This paragraph in the bill enables them to qualify in aviation and not take sea duty. The only difference between my amendment and the paragraph as inserted in the bill is to allow the officers below the rank of lieutenant commander to have the right of promotion in aviation and to specialize in that branch of the service, and it ought to be done. It is not right to discriminate against 115 officers who rank below lieutenant commander and who can not get promoted unless they qualify in engineering, navigation, and other branches of the Navy that have no relation to aviation.

Mr. UPDIKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Yes.

Mr. UPDIKE. I am inclined to be in favor of the gentleman's amendment, but I would like to have him explain to me if it is not necessary that the officers in command of air stations have sea duty also.

Mr. McCLINTIC. My amendment makes it possible for them to have an examination before the selection and examining boards if they care to do so.

Mr. UPDIKE. I thought the word "shall" was in it.

Mr. McCLINTIC. No; it is "may," and instead of legislating for a special class, commanders and lieutenant commanders, we will legislate for all officers in the Navy who desire to specialize in aviation and who desire to make that their chosen life work.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is the gentleman's amendment limited to junior officers who are now in the service?

Mr. McCLINTIC. My amendment says "officers."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is the gentleman's amendment limited to officers in the service at the time of the passage of this act?

Mr. McCLINTIC. That is my understanding.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized.

The rule of selection, Mr. Chairman, only applies to commanders and lieutenant commanders. We propose this paragraph to save these particular officers from being turned away from the service—men who have served this country for five years and many more in aviation teaching themselves and teaching others to fly. They now reach their promotion time, and the present law provides they shall go into competition with other officers. Some of them might fail, because they have not had their usual sea duty. This constant aviation service was not to their wish, but owing to the will of their superiors. Therefore we propose to give them the opportunity of going before the boards of selection not in competition with men who have been at sea. Hereafter the term set for learning aviation will be very short, and the aviators will go to sea to prepare for that service also. This proposed measure applies only to a few men, who might otherwise fail.

The rule of selection, to repeat, applies only to commanders and lieutenant commanders, and all the officers below that grade are promoted upon seniority. The word "fitness" is used in the present law. Competition with others runs up against these men here provided for and who have been in the aviation service, and who have been assigned year after year to teach others to fly, and therefore in this paragraph we exclude them from going before the selection board in competition with other officers who have had the chance to go to sea. It is only fair to them to do this. We considered it for days and decided that this was just toward the officers involved.

Mr. FRENCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. The gentleman is speaking rather in support of paragraph 6 in the bill and against the proposition of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. FRENCH. Now let me turn to the section the gentleman supports and ask what will be accomplished by that section. Will it not permit a limited number of officers now of the rank of lieutenant commander or commander to be advanced when the time may come one grade, and then probably thereafter forever remain in that rank?

Mr. BUTLER. I will try to make the explanation perfectly clear. When John Smith, a lieutenant commander, comes up for his examination for promotion to the rank of commander, he having been in aviation for several years and having lost his opportunity for sea service, will go into competition for promotion, being a line officer, with officers who have had sea service. It was our purpose to exclude these men from having to go into competition with the others—those who have had such service. They will be examined by the selection board upon their competency. Perhaps they may not be the very best in the naval service because of their failure to have had this sea service, but nevertheless they will be entitled to the promotion and will stand upon what is known as an extra number list, that number disappearing when the officer disappears. It is square justice to these men who have been denied the opportunity to prepare for competition.

Mr. FRENCH. Why would not these officers now be available for other duty in connection with inspection work or in engineering or in other lines of activity?

Mr. BUTLER. They will be, but we do not propose to have them taken from the line of the Navy. They will go to sea hereafter. They are line men and will always remain line men subject to all the duties of the line. The reason for this paragraph is the one I have stated and no other. These officers who have performed these duties at the direction of their superior, the Secretary of the Navy and the Chief of Navigation, have not had the chance to perfect themselves in sea service so that they can go into competition with other men who have had it. That is the whole story.

Mr. FRENCH. It seems to me the gentleman is casting a sort of stigma upon them and suggesting to the selection board that service in this line, which is so important, shall not lead to a future.

Mr. BUTLER. If the gentleman will permit and will listen to me just a minute longer, this has been a subject of much discussion. We would have been pleased to have had the gentleman present with us when it was discussed. I was opposed to this proposition at first, but afterward I saw it was just and right. No man is compelled to apply for this advantage. To illustrate, I am a lieutenant commander and come up for promotion, and having been away from the sea for five years or perhaps more I may fail; that is, in my own mind I may anticipate I will fail if I go into competition with Burton French, who has had his full sea service. Therefore, this act provides that the selection board shall not put Thomas Butler in competition with Burton French, for the reason many times stated. Nevertheless, under this provision, if I am a competent officer I may come up and take an additional number without having to compete with others. This is but fair.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point of order on the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma. I sincerely trust the committee will not strike out paragraph 6 and substitute the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma. If that is done, I am satisfied you will render the aviators the hardest blow that possibly could be given to them.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I hope the gentleman will yield. My amendment uses the word "may" and leaves it entirely discretionary.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The trouble about it is the gentleman from Oklahoma does not know what his amendment means.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I may not; will the gentleman be kind enough to tell me?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Yes; that is what I am going to do right now.

I also call the attention of the gentleman from Idaho to the fact that the reason this favoritism, as the gentleman terms it, is extended to 41 men is because they are the pioneers in aviation. They have been assigned to aviation for the last 15 or 20 years. Every year they have to come before the selection board. The law requires that the selection board selects the officer best fitted—not for aviation but for the next higher command. The law provides that in the opinion of at least six members of the board the officers therein recommended are the best fitted of all those under consideration to assume the duty of the next higher grade.

Now, here is Commander Tower, who flew across the Atlantic. He comes before the board for promotion to the rank of captain. He has been 15 years in aviation—one of the pioneer aviators. Why, of course, he is not the best-fitted officer to command a battleship, because he has not been assigned to battleship duty. This provision in section 6 is what every aviator in the department asked for, and it is nothing but fair and right that they be removed from competition, and that is what we are seeking to have done by this provision.

Mr. FRENCH. What is to be the future of these men after the one promotion referred to in the paragraph?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If the gentleman will read the paragraph in full, he will see that it applies to the next time he goes before the selection board. If you do not pass this, they will ask permission to go to sea, so that they can qualify.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I ask that the gentleman have one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman has yielded the floor.

Mr. McCLINTIC. He referred to my knowledge of the bill and I want to correct him.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Oh, well, I withdraw that.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I claim recognition in my own right. I want to ask one or two more questions of the gentleman from Georgia.

The gentleman's admiration for these officers does not exceed mine, and I want to do all honor and all justice to them. I want, however, to prevent something from being done that might stifle their opportunities, that might set a precedent that is bad, and that we might wish had not been established when these officers shall confront the selection board in the future. In other words, it seems to me that the language itself in the section suggests to the selection board the unfitness of the officers for promotion in competition with other officers.

More than that, it seems to me that you are encouraging a tendency toward a corps, that you are limiting to those who are now in this branch of the service the rank that must be held by higher officers in connection with aviation in the Navy.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Of course there is no thought in this section that will cause anyone to conclude that we are drifting along to a separate air corps, because this applies only to those in aviation to-day of the rank of commander and lieutenant commander. It can not apply to the future because the act says:

That any officer of the Navy, line or staff, of the permanent rank or grade of commander or lieutenant commander, at the time of the passage of this act.

And so forth.

There are only 41 officers in aviation with this rank. They are not the only ones applicable. It is not compulsory; it is discretionary on their part, and the Secretary himself certifies to the selection board that these men have sacrificed their chance for promotion by the fact that they have served in aviation so many years.

Mr. FRENCH. One other word. In a question so involved as this and when it is taken into consideration that the legislative committee will probably bring in a measure touching more particularly personnel, we ought not to include a paragraph that at best is questionable and in a bill that essentially carries authorization for material.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. This is all the personnel legislation the Naval Affairs Committee contemplates to bring in. As a matter of fact, it is the only legislation that the officers who appeared before the Morrow committee asked for—just what is in the bill, and nothing else.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Chairman, in addition to the statement that I made in support of my amendment to substitute a new paragraph I want to say that according to the testimony found on page 1013, the paragraph in the bill would provide places to be filled by forty-odd officers when they are promoted. That appears in Commander McCain's testimony when he says that if you should give an officer an extra number he would then be put aside and go up with the man ahead of him, leaving a place for another officer to come up. My substitute would not cause the Navy to be under obligations to take any action on any class, because the language specifically states that they may do this. It is directory and not mandatory. I want to leave the discretion entirely with the examining and selection boards, and for that reason I offer the amendment which would provide a new procedure and not discriminate against any class in the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LA GUARDIA: On page 8, line 26, add a new paragraph:

" PAR. 9. That there is hereby created a cooperative naval and Army air service command, to be constituted as follows:

"The Chief of the Naval Air Service, the Chief of the Army Air Service, and a commanding officer, who shall be William Mitchell, former colonel of the United States Army Air Service, who shall have complete command thereof, and who shall have the rank, pay, and allowance of a major general."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for a few minutes. I think the House will want to agree in what I want to do. I desire to go back to page 4 of the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Idaho desires to go back to a paragraph of the bill to amend it after we have worked on the bill for months.

Mr. FRENCH. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Idaho prefer a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. FRENCH. I want to make a short statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must prefer a unanimous-consent request in order to be recognized by the Chair and obtain the floor.

Mr. FRENCH. Then I ask unanimous consent to turn back to page 4 for a moment, and I shall take only a moment to read the proposed amendment, and I think the House will want to agree with me in that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to return to page 4 of the bill for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. UPDIKE. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, as we have reached the last paragraph in the bill, which for the first time in the history of the Government lays down a definite air program for the Navy, I can not permit the occasion to pass without paying tribute to whom tribute is due; that is, to the distinguished chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER]. [Applause.]

For three decades he has served on the Naval Affairs Committee, having been placed thereon by Speaker Reed, and during his 30 years in Congress he has devoted his entire committee work to the Navy. He was a member of this committee before the guns were fired in the Spanish-American War.

One can hardly visualize the great change that he has beheld in the Navy during the time he has been on this committee. When he first became a member of the same some of our battleships were carrying sails; he has seen the sails give place to the coal burners; he has witnessed the coal burners give way to the oil burners; he has seen the oil burners supplanted by electricity; he has witnessed the appearance of the submarine, and has brought in legislation for it to take its place as a powerful and effective arm of the fleet.

He has been instrumental in developing our Navy from fourth class to the equal of any navy in the world. [Applause.]

He being cognizant that in the future no ship will be fully equipped without aircraft, for it is an indispensable weapon of the fleet, and the success of naval engagements in the future depends upon the cooperation and assistance received from the air arm, as it is the eyes of the fleet, has now, in his three-score and ten years, submitted to Congress, unanimously indorsed by his committee, the largest naval aviation program that has ever been submitted to a legislative body.

I measure my words when I say that no Member in the history of Congress has contributed more in shaping naval legislation, or has done more to keep the Navy our first line of defense, always in a high state of efficiency, than the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

No more distinguished or honorable name can be given to one of the great scout cruisers now being built than "Thomas S. Butler," for such a name would typify the spirit of the American people in that we devoutly at all times wish to be left at peace with all the nations of the earth, but, at the same time, realizing that the primary duty of government is self-preservation, and no sophistry of logic can at any time justify it in stripping itself of its means of an adequate national defense. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. I shall take just a moment. Inasmuch as I have never heretofore had anything nice like this said of me, I do not know how to make reply to it. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] and I are very great and very partial friends. Therefore, I know that he is drawing very largely upon that friendship, which has remained unbroken and which always will, when he testifies so to my influence and connection with the naval service. I am very much indebted to him, and I am very much indebted to you gentlemen for listening to him. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LEHLBACH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9690) to authorize the construction and procurement of aircraft and aircraft equipment in the Navy and Marine Corps, and to adjust and define the status of the operating personnel in connection therewith, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the engrossed copy; and I do that to obviate a roll call. The previous question is ordered, and that makes it the first thing when we meet again.

The SPEAKER. It is obvious that the engrossed copy can not be forthcoming.

ADJOURNMENT OVER UNTIL MONDAY

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet at 12 o'clock on Monday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet at 12 o'clock on Monday. Is there objection?

Mr. LA GUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if the civil service retirement bill will come up next week?

Mr. SNELL. I can not say as to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. It is so ordered.

PENSION BILL

Mr. ELLIOTT, by direction of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, presented a privileged report on the bill (H. R. 4023) to revise and equalize the rate of pension to certain soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Civil War and war with Mexico, to certain widows, including widows of the War of 1812, former widows, children of such soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to certain Army nurses, and granting pensions and increase of pensions in certain cases, which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Union Calendar and ordered printed.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE—ANNUAL REPORT OF ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN (S. DOC. NO. 94)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered printed: To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the requirement of section 6 of the trading with the enemy act, I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a communication from the Alien

Property Custodian, submitting the annual report of the proceedings had under the trading with the enemy act for the year ended December 31, 1925.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 9, 1926.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. THOMAS, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, for an indefinite period, on account of business.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, in accordance with the order made, until Monday, April 12, 1926, at 12 o'clock noon.

PETITIONS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas presented resolutions adopted by The Original Club, of Little Rock, Ark., urging support of the eighteenth amendment, with no modification, and indorsing the Cramton bill providing for selection of prohibition officers through the civil service, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILLIS presented a resolution adopted by the Scandinavian Fraternity of America in convention assembled at Detroit, Mich., favoring an appropriate governmental recognition of Lief Erikson as the discoverer of the New World, which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

CENTENNIAL OF CONGRESS OF PANAMA

Mr. ERNST. I submit and ask to have referred to the Committee on the Library and printed in the Record a resolution passed by the Kentucky State Senate providing for the participation of the Commonwealth of Kentucky in the celebration commemorating the centennial of the Congress of Panama, the first Pan-American conference ever held.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Library and ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Senate Resolution No. 19, providing for the participation of the Commonwealth of Kentucky in the celebration commemorating the centennial of the Congress of Panama, the first Pan-American conference ever held, memorializing the President and Congress of the United States to appropriate funds for the purchase and erection of a statue of the Hon. Henry Clay at Caracas, Venezuela, in connection with said celebration, and authorizing the Governor of Kentucky to appoint commissioners to represent Kentucky at the centennial exercises of the Pan-American Congress to be held at Panama, Republic of Panama, and in the city of Caracas, Venezuela.

Whereas the centennial of the Congress of Panama, the first Pan-American conference ever held, will be celebrated in the city of Panama, Republic of Panama, on or about June 22, 1926, and suitable exercises appertaining to the event will also be conducted at about the same time in the city of Caracas, Venezuela; and

Whereas in view of the fact that Henry Clay, of Kentucky, when a Member of the National Congress and Speaker of the National House of Representatives, acted a leading and influential part in assisting the Republics of South America to secure their independence and was cordially supported in all of these activities by the people and government of Kentucky, which first of all the States of the American Union manifested an interest in the liberation of South America, the General Assembly of Kentucky, more than 100 years ago, having entertained a number of resolutions favoring the struggle of the South American countries to achieve their independence, and in the year 1821 having adopted resolutions expressing its sympathy with the cause of South American independence and commending in the highest terms the efforts of the Kentucky Members of Congress in that behalf; and

Whereas the Hon. Charles S. Todd, a Kentuckian, was the first fully accredited diplomatic representative to Greater Colombia, and bearer of President Monroe's message acknowledging the independence of the South American Republics; and the Hon. Richard Clough Anderson, jr., likewise a Kentuckian, was the first minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary of the United States to any South American Republic, and was also one of the envoys extraordinary of the United States to the First Panama Congress; and

Whereas in the year 1921 the Republic of Venezuela presented to the American people a statue of Gen. Simon Bolivar, the great liberator of South America, and at the same time that this statue was unveiled in the city of New York a delegation from Venezuela placed a wreath on the tomb of Henry Clay at Lexington, Ky.; and

Whereas in grateful recognition of the services rendered by him to Venezuela and her sister states of South America the city of Caracas, the capital of Venezuela, has named one of the principal squares of said city, the Plaza Henry Clay, and dedicated same to Mr. Clay's memory; and

Whereas the people of Venezuela and other South American countries have always cherished a feeling of admiration and gratitude for Henry Clay and the people of Kentucky because of their early, earnest, and protracted efforts to promote the cause of liberty in South America; Therefore, be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky (both Senate and House concurring), That the President and Congress of the United States be, and they are, requested to appropriate a sum sufficient to purchase and erect in Caracas, Venezuela, a suitable statue of Henry Clay, to be presented on behalf of the people of the United States to the people of Venezuela, and, with that end in view, that this memorial be transmitted, through our Senators and Representatives in Congress, to the President of the National Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That in the event action conformable to this resolution is taken by Congress and such an appropriation is made the Commonwealth of Kentucky shall participate in the approaching centennial celebration to be held in the states of Panama and Venezuela in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the Congress of Panama, the first Pan-American conference, and in order that Kentucky be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to appoint a commission, to consist of five members, all of whom shall be citizens and residents of Kentucky, and any three of whom may act to attend the aforesaid centennial celebration in the city of Panama, Republic of Panama, and in the city of Caracas, in the Republic of Venezuela, as the official representatives of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, and of said commission the Governor of Kentucky shall himself be ex-officio a member and the chairman thereof; and that the actual necessary expenses of said commissioners in the discharge of their duties as such shall be paid by the Commonwealth of Kentucky, on itemized account approved by the governor, out of any money in the State treasury not otherwise appropriated; and be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of the foregoing preamble and resolutions be forwarded by the secretary of state of Kentucky to the President of the United States and to both of the United States Senators and to each of the Members of the National House of Representatives from Kentucky; and be it further

Resolved, That this resolution shall take effect from and after its passage and approval by the governor.

HENRY H. DENHARDT,
President of the Senate.

G. L. DRURY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved March 26, 1926.

W. J. FIELDS, Governor.

COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.
Certificate

I, Emma Guy Cromwell, secretary of state for the Commonwealth of Kentucky, do certify that the foregoing writing has been carefully compared by me with the original record thereof, now in my official custody as secretary of state and remaining on file in my office, and found to be a true and correct copy of Senate Resolution No. 19, passed by the Kentucky State Senate which convened on January 5, 1926, and adjourned on March 17, 1926.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed my official seal.

Done at Frankfort this 1st day of April, 1926.

[SEAL]

EMMA GUY CROMWELL,
Secretary of State.

BERT MOORE

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 3882) for the relief of Bert Moore, heretofore introduced by him, which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2620) for the relief of certain newspapers for advertising services rendered the Public Health Service of the Treasury Department, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 564) thereon.

Mr. WILLIS, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9831) to provide for the completion and repair of customs buildings in Porto Rico, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 565) thereon.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Immigration, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9761) to supplement the naturalization laws by extending certain privileges to aliens who served honorably in the military or naval forces of the United States during the World War, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 566) thereon.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3802) to amend the act known as the "District of Columbia traffic act, 1925," approved March 3, 1925, being Public, No. 561, Sixty-eighth Congress, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 568) thereon.

Mr. NORBECK, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8132) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the war with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, or the China relief expedition to certain maimed soldiers, to certain widows, minor children, and helpless children of such soldiers and sailors, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 569) thereon.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER SURVEY

Mr. RANDELL. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 9957) authorizing a survey for the control of excess flood waters of the Mississippi River below Point Breeze in Louisiana and on the Atchafalaya Outlet by the construction and maintenance of controlled and regulated spillway or spillways, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 563) thereon.

The provisions of the bill are confined entirely to the State of Louisiana. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. If it involves any debate, I shall not press it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may go to the calendar.

Mr. RANDELL. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Utah that the bill applies entirely to Louisiana? I believe it will lead to no debate. The bill does not require any appropriation. It simply makes provision for funds from an appropriation that has already been made.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Utah that this is a matter about which there was some controversy between the States of Mississippi and Louisiana. There is now no objection to the provision which was in controversy at that time, because it has been changed. I think everyone is united now behind the measure.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is a flood-control matter.

Mr. RANDELL. And it does not require any additional appropriation at all. It is simply a diversion from a fund already appropriated.

Mr. SMOOT. I would like to have the bill read.

Mr. RANDELL. Let the bill be read. It passed the House unanimously.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the bill.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made, and estimates of the costs of such controlled and regulated spillway or spillways as may be necessary for the diversion and control of a sufficient volume of the excess flood waters of the Mississippi River between Point Breeze and Fort Jackson in Louisiana, in order to prevent the waters of said river exceeding stages of approximately 16, 17, 18, 19, and 20 feet on the Carrollton gauge at New Orleans and of approximately 46, 47, and 48 feet on the gauge at Simmesport on the Atchafalaya Outlet, and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to cause the Mississippi River Commission to transmit to him all engineering records, data, field notes, and such other information in its possession as he may deem desirable and useful in carrying out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of War is authorized to use $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, from funds heretofore appropriated for flood control, Mississippi River, to carry out the objects and purposes of this act: Provided, That no spillway shall be constructed as a result of the survey authorized by this act whereby the waters of the Mississippi River would be diverted into Mississippi Sound.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to report to the Congress as soon as practicable the results of the survey authorized by this act.

Mr. SMOOT. I would like to ask the Senator if there has been an appropriation already made for the survey.

Mr. RANDELL. Yes; it has been already made and is included in the general appropriation for floods in the Mississippi River. The bill merely authorizes the Secretary of War to take the amount needed from that fund and have it used by the Chief of Engineers instead of the Mississippi River Commission. It does not require any additional appropriation.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 3935) amending the Federal highway act; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 3936) granting an extension of patent to the United Daughters of the Confederacy; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. FRAZIER:

A bill (S. 3937) granting an increase of pension to Martha M. Lambert; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 3938) for the relief of Norman S. Cooper; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 3939) for the relief of the United Gas & Electric Engineering Corporation; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CAMERON (for Mr. MCKINLEY):

A bill (S. 3940) for the relief of Sterling Morelock; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 3941) for the relief of Ollie Keeley; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3942) granting an increase of pension to Charles Oakley;

A bill (S. 3943) granting an increase of pension to John T. Degnan (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 3944) granting an increase of pension to Ambrose B. Judy (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 3945) granting an increase of pension to John T. Smith (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 3946) granting a pension to Margaret E. Knight (with an accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 3947) granting a pension to Rosa Kemp (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DALE:

A bill (S. 3948) granting an increase of pension to Emma C. Moore; and

A bill (S. 3949) granting an increase of pension to Evelyn McBryer (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GOFF:

A bill (S. 3950) making Leona E. Kidwell eligible to receive the benefits of the civil service retirement act; and

A bill (S. 3951) making H. C. Gibson eligible to receive the benefits of the civil service retirement act approved in 1920; to the Committee on Civil Service.

By Mr. JONES of New Mexico:

A bill (S. 3953) to provide for the condemnation of the lands of the Pueblo Indians in New Mexico for public purposes, and making the laws of the State of New Mexico applicable in such proceedings; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

CONTRACTS CONNECTED WITH THE PROSECUTION OF THE WAR

Mr. PHIPPS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3641) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1919, as amended, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE GERMAN GOVERNMENT

Mr. KING. I submit a resolution and ask that it be read and lie on the table.

The resolution (S. Res. 198) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State transmit to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, copies of all correspondence, notes, exchanges, and communications which have passed directly or indirectly between the Secretary of State and the Government of Germany respecting the settlement and payment of claims against the German Government for indemnification on account of destruction of life and property of American nationals subsequent to August 1, 1914, including the instructions given to Ambassador Kellogg, who represented the Department of State at the Paris Finance Conference, and also advise the Senate as to whether the State Department at the Paris conference, or otherwise, agreed that the United States should assume the burden of the payment of awards made in favor of American nationals against Germany, and accept from Germany, in subrogation of the rights of its own nationals, annual installments of $11,000,000 for the payment of private American awards and annual installments of $12,000,000 in reimbursement of the costs of the American army of occupation of the Coblenz area on the Rhine and in payment of other Government claims, as representing the entire obligation of the German Government to the Government of the United States in the premises, and if the Secretary made such an agreement, to advise the Senate of the considerations which induced him to make the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COPELAND in the chair). Does the Senator ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. KING. I asked that it might lie on the table, but I shall call it up at as early a date as possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over under the rule.

Mr. KING. I offer another resolution of similar import directed to the Treasury Department asking for similar information, which I ask may also lie on the table.

The resolution (S. Res. 199) was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury transmit to the Senate all correspondence, notes, exchanges, and communications which have passed directly or indirectly between the Secretary of the Treasury and representatives of the German Government respecting the settlement and payment of American claims against Germany, together with a statement concerning all conferences and negotiations on the subject of such claims, to which he directly or indirectly has been a party, and to advise the Senate whether representatives of the Department of the Treasury, with his authorization, have carried on negotiations in Germany respecting the settlement and payment of such claims, and to report to the Senate any and all arrangements, recommendations, or agreements, which he has made in the premises, and the considerations which induced him to make the same.

REMOVAL OF THE BARTHOLOI FOUNTAIN

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire at this time to enter a motion to reconsider certain action taken by the Senate yesterday which, in my judgment, was ill-advised. At page 7164 of the Record of yesterday's proceedings it appears that action was taken touching the bill (S. 3423) authorizing the removal of the Bartholdi Fountain from its present location and authorizing its reerection on other public grounds in the District of Columbia.

I do not believe that the Senate gave proper consideration to this measure. I do not believe that many Senators were aware of what was being done when it was passed. The Bartholdi Fountain, as I view it, is the splendid, artistic old fountain in the Botanic Garden. Now, it is proposed to remove that fountain, it being alleged that it interferes with some other work which is contemplated. I do not know what other Senators think about it, but, in my judgment, it is of very great importance that the Botanic Garden should be maintained. There are some people who think that most of the trees and shrubbery there should be taken away and it should be devoted to another purpose. There are in that garden historic trees which ought not to be touched, and, so far as I am concerned, I want more time to look into this matter.

I, therefore, at this point enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, it being my understanding that the papers have not yet passed out of the possession of the Senate. I make that motion and ask that the bill may go to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

SENATOR FROM IOWA

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 194) declaring Daniel F. Steck to be a duly elected Senator of the United States from the State of Iowa for the term beginning March 4, 1925, reported by Mr. EXNER from the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I represent in part on this floor the State of the American Union that was the mother of secession, of which fact I am proud. It has been sometimes stated that the war of secession was fought for the purpose of keeping the Negro race from becoming free. There has never been a more malicious slander perpetrated upon any people than that statement, whether it be by voice of mouth or whether it be in the writings of some man's story called history. It was fought for a great principle. The soldiers of the Southern Confederacy were as true and as devoted to the Constitution of this country as any body of men who have ever been citizens of this great Nation.

I have regretted from time to time the effort which has been made to take from the various States of this Union their individual liberty and their rights. I regret to see here to-day a sentiment in the Senate which would lead Senators to take from the great State of Iowa the right to say who shall represent her upon the floor of the United States Senate by a shifting of ballots when it is admitted by those who are prosecuting this case against Mr. Brookhart that there was not any fraud.

Mr. President, in a speech delivered in Boston, Mass., on one occasion I said:

The greatest debate this Nation ever witnessed was staged in the Senate of the United States between a son of Massachusetts and a son of South Carolina. Both were imbued with the highest patriotism, and each was striving toward the same goal, but along different paths. Looking back to that time, we can see that the gloom of civil war, in which brother was to be pitted against brother, was already settling upon our great Nation. A few years later the inevitable storm was upon us. Fifty years have now passed since its fury was spent, and to-day South Carolina and Massachusetts, by that fervid devotion to principle which helped to bring on the great battles in which the sons of one wore the gray and the sons of the other the blue, can clasp hands with higher respect each for the other and with the friendship of brothers, each of whom knows the courage of the other and his devotion to a common mother.

The Constitution of the United States distinctly provides that—

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof, but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

Yet, Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, who presented the report on behalf of the majority of that committee, makes this astounding statement:

Nothing is clearer than that the Committee on Privileges and Elections is its own judge, and it does not have to follow the law of Iowa, and has not done so, and has not attempted to do so.

A more flagrant violation of State rights has never been known, and I am surprised that Southern Senators, the sons of Confederate veterans, will sit upon the floor of the Senate after that war, after that fight, and admit by this kind of a report that they were wrong in the position then taken and to-day turn their backs upon it and attempt to cast it aside as if it had never been taken.

Mr. President, another section of the Constitution reads:

Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members.

That does not, however, Mr. President, wipe out the other section which I have read. And in the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States it is provided:

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors—

Not the Senate, not the Members of the Senate but—

The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.

Then, Mr. President, we find that it has been laid down by the court in New York:

When the people create a single, entire government, they grant at once all the rights of sovereignty. The powers granted are indefinite and incapable of enumeration. Everything is granted that is not expressly reserved in the constitutional charter or necessarily retained as inherent in the people.

Going back to the Constitution and saying that the principle is there distinctly and plainly laid down, the court in another case says:

The guaranty of equal privileges and immunities to citizens of the United States . . . does not limit the power of the State government over the rights of its own citizens.

Yet the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate comes in here and tells us that they do not propose to be bound by the laws of Iowa, when this election was held, and properly so, under the Iowa law and could not be held under any other.

Mr. President, if the Senate shall establish that rule, then suppose in the next election in November, in my own State, the Republican convention were to meet and nominate for the United States Senate Joseph W. Talbort, the chairman of the Republican committee of that State and a member of the Republican national executive committee from that State, who has been in the service longer than has any other man on that committee. He goes into the general election in November. He can control 10,000 or 15,000 votes. He sends to the ballot boxes all over the State of South Carolina men who are disqualified under the laws of the State of South Carolina, which this committee says they will not recognize. He has at the polls in the precincts men to take down the names of those persons who offer to vote and say that they would vote for Talbort. They come here to the Senate and present 40,000 or 50,000 votes of persons who are disfranchised under the law of South Carolina. The Senate goes into the contest, and the Committee on Privileges and Elections says, "We will not pay any attention to the law of South Carolina; we are the judges of the qualifications of our own Members"; and the committee turns back to the Constitution where it provides that no man shall be prohibited from voting on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. In such a case, why would not the Senate seat Talbort as a Senator from South Carolina instead of the man who the election board certifies here has been elected to that position? If the Senate can do this in the Iowa case, it can do it in such a case from South Carolina. I want my southern friends to stop and think before they set such a precedent here, because if they set it to-day in this case then they certainly will have no right to complain if it is used against them after the 4th day of March, 1927.

Mr. President, I believe in State rights, and I wish to be excused a brief personal reference along that line. Back in the nineties in the Legislature of the State of South Carolina I saw that what Mr. Hayne said on the floor of the Senate was true, and that the United States Government was stealing from the States their rights as States and their right to do as they pleased. They have taken from us our water powers. The United States claims the right to turn them over to individuals who may become millionaires, and to charge the people who have to use the current generated most outrageous rates. They have assumed the power to build bridges over the rivers in the States; they have taken from us many other rights, including the control of our railroads and the control of a great many other matters in the States. Day by day they are encroaching more and more upon the liberties and rights of the States. I was opposed to it then and I made speeches against it. In the State Senate of South Carolina in 1905, when they sent the Dick law down there to get ready for war, I stood on the floor single handed and fought against the invasion of the rights of South Carolina by any such measure. It became a law and is a law to-day, and if it had not been for that law I do not think that the administration which has just passed out would be charged with as many murders in the sight of God as it is charged with by the fresh-made graves in this country and in France.

When I was the governor of my State I wrote message after message and I want to read a few extracts from them along this line:

Once again, gentlemen, I call to your attention the encroachment by the Federal Government upon State rights, and I desire to quote you, in this connection, the words of that great South Carolinian, our acknowledged leader and champion, Robert Y. Hayne.

Mr. President, I am quoting from a message I sent to the General Assembly of South Carolina while governor of the State:

In the speech which he delivered in the United States Senate, in his celebrated debate with Webster, he said:

"The people whom I represent—

Said Mr. Hayne—

are the friends of the Union; and who are its enemies? Those who are constantly stealing power from the States and adding strength to the Federal Government."

What think the people of our State to-day, and who is it that is "stealing power from the States and adding strength to the Federal Government?" Can it be possible that, under the lead of a man sometimes called a southerner—

I was referring then to one whom you all know, I presume—the Democratic Party is to become the party that is "stealing power from the States"—

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I am sorry, but I decline to yield to anybody until I get through. A Senator's speech yesterday was ruined by interruptions, and I do not propose to be caught in the same trap. I am sorry, but I can not yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the interruption I desire to make—

Mr. BLEASE (continuing reading)— and giving it to the Federal Government; and that the Republican Party—

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President—

Mr. BLEASE (continuing)—

under the lead of a Hughes or a Whitman, is to become the State rights party, and stop this "stealing of power" spoken of by Mr. Hayne?

If the Senator wants to call me to order, all right; otherwise, I positively refuse to yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do want to take exception to and to utter my protest against the use of certain language that the Senator has used.

Mr. BLEASE. I am quoting from Mr. Hayne's speech on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do not refer to that. I refer to a remark of the Senator, if I understood him aright, in which he referred to the soldiers who made the supreme sacrifice in the late war as having been murdered by this Government of ours.

Mr. BLEASE. Well, we just have a difference of opinion on that; that is all.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If that language is unparliamentary—

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I refuse to yield. I am responsible for what I say here.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I think it ought to be expunged. At any rate, I want to enter my earnest protest against its use.

Mr. BLEASE. To proceed with the quotation, Mr. President—

I desire to call your attention to that part of my annual message of 1914 which dealt with this grave question. Since that time more power has been "stolen" from the States and given to the Federal Government, and more of this power is now sought to be "stolen." And, to the surprise of those who loved and fought for the Southern Confederacy and those of a later generation who now love its memory and hold sacred the cause for which the southern armies battled, we find many of those whose fathers and brothers, yea, some who themselves fought for this cause, and who themselves to-day owe their lives and freedom to it, now taking part in this "stealing of power" as described by Mr. Hayne. Can it be possible that, by the records of Southern Senators and Congressmen, generations yet unborn will be led to believe that the northern historian recorded the truth when he wrote that the southern soldiers, led by those matchless leaders, Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson, and the other gallant men who made that fight, made it only to keep the negro from being a freeman and not in defense of their honest convictions in behalf of State rights? God forbid it. We love the cause too dearly. We know the Southern Confederacy fought for a higher and nobler purpose, and surely those who represent us will be too manly and too brave and too patriotic to permit the motives of their forefathers and of their own people, in one of the greatest struggles the world has ever known, to be regarded by coming generations as low and contemptible. Surely they will protect the glorious heritage which has been handed down to us of the South.

Further, along this line, I desire to quote you from the remarks of another southerner, one who fought for State rights in times of peace and in times of war. I refer to the remarks of Justice L. Q. C. Lamar, in an oration delivered on the Hon. John C. Calhoun:

"The American Union is a democratic Federal Republic, a political system compounded of the separate governments of the several States and one common government of all the States, called the Government of the United States.

"Each was created by written constitution, those of the particular States by the people of each acting separately, and that of the United States by the people of each in its sovereign capacity, but acting jointly. The entire powers of government are divided between the two—those lodged in the General Government being delegated by specific and enumerated grants in the Constitution; and all others not delegated being reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people. The powers of each are sovereign, and neither derives its power from the other. In their respective spheres neither is subordinate to the other, but coordinate; and being coordinate, each has the right of protecting its own powers from the encroachments of the other, the two combined forming one entire and perfect Government. The line of demarcation between the delegated powers to the Federal Government and the powers reserved to the States is plain, inasmuch as all the powers delegated to the General Government are expressly laid down, and those not delegated are reserved to the States unless specially prohibited.

Mr. Thomas Jefferson—and I believe to-day in New York, and in a day or two in this city, banquets have been and will be given at which great speeches were and are to be made on Thomas Jefferson and his democracy—said, in 1821:

It is a fatal heresy to suppose that either our State governments are superior to the Federal, or the Federal to the State; neither is authorized literally to decide which belongs to itself or its copartner in government. In differences of opinion between their different sets of public servants the appeal is to neither, but to their employers peaceably assembled by their respective in convention.

In a letter, written just after that, he said:

I see, as you do, and with the deepest affliction, the rapid strides with which the Federal branch of our Government is advancing toward the usurpation of all the rights reserved to the States, and the consolidation in itself of all powers, foreign and domestic, and that, too, by constructions which leave no limits to their powers, etc. Under the right to regulate commerce, they assume, indefinitely, that also over agriculture and manufactures, etc. Under the authority to establish post roads, they claim that of cutting down mountains for the construction of roads and digging canals, etc.

Patrick Henry, Mr. President, in the Virginia convention, said:

The officers of Congress may come upon you now, fortified with all the terrors of paramount Federal authority. Excisemen may come in multitudes—

Here is a prediction made years and years ago that is just as true as if he had made it to-day:

Excisemen may come in multitudes, for the limitation of their numbers no man knows. They may, unless the General Government be restrained, go into your cellars and rooms—

And they are going—and search, ransack, and measure everything you eat, drink, and wear. They ought to be restrained within proper bounds.

And he was right; they should have been restrained, and we would not be as we are to-day without protection to our castles and our homes.

Louis Kossuth, speaking in this country on local self-government, said:

We Hungarians are very fond of the principle of municipal self-government; and we have a natural horror against the principle of centralization. That fond attachment to municipal self-government, without which there is no provincial freedom possible, is a fundamental feature of our national character. We brought it with us from far Asia a thousand years ago, and we conserved it throughout the vicissitudes of 10 centuries.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in 1890, in speaking at a banquet given in his honor in this country, said:

There was a civil war in the last century. There was a civil war between England, then, and her colonies. The union which then existed between England and her colonies was severed. If it was severed, American citizens, as you know it was, through no fault of your fathers, the fault was altogether the fault of the British Government of that day. If the British Government of that day had treated the American Colonies as the British Government for the last 20 or 50 years has treated its colonies; if Great Britain had given you then the same degree of liberty which it gives to Canada, my country; if it had given you, as it has given us, legislative independence absolute, the result would have been different—the course of victory, the course of history would have been different.

Mr. President, we hear a great deal about State rights. Why have we not heard from some of these men who are clamoring for State rights to-day, who want to be candidates for President of the United States on the Democratic ticket? Where were they when these rights were being stolen? Did you hear anything about it then? No! Did you hear anything about State rights when they were destroying everything we had and taking from us the control of all of our agencies? No. When did you hear it? Liquor! Liquor! You never heard it from the other side. You never heard it from these great governors of some States who now want to be candidates for President on the Democratic ticket—not a word—but when you took their liquor away from them, then you began to hear them exclaim: "State rights!" "State rights!"

Why, Mr. President, the greatest curse in this world had to be saved back to the last; the greatest curse ever known to man had to be dragged in as the last chance to whip some people into line for State rights. That is true, and we all know it.

This committee say they ignore the law of Iowa. I wish the distinguished senior Senator from that State [Mr. CUMMINS]—a man for whom I have the greatest respect, and I might almost say love—had waited and come upon the floor of the Senate and made a speech as to what was the law of Iowa, even though he had not voted. Some people have been so unkind as to say that some Senators will be governed in their votes on this matter by the effect they might have on the senior Senator from Iowa. I want to say personally that while, of course, that has no effect on my vote, if I had a vote in Iowa I would cast it for ALBERT B. CUMMINS; I would not care who ran against him.

This committee say that they will not, do not, and have not paid any attention to the laws of the State of Iowa. Where have these ballots been, Mr. President? Nobody is agreed on that. They admit that these sacks came here in bad order. They held this election in Iowa. It is presumed that they were honest in handling the election. Those honest men counted these ballots. Some of them, they say, were in the machine. I have not yet heard whether it was a Republican or a Democratic or a Progressive machine; it simply was a machine. These honest, true men counted those ballots and certified them up to the State canvassing board.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLEASE. No; I refuse to be interrupted.

They certified those ballots to the State canvassing board. The State canvassing board canvassed them at home, right where they knew the people and knew the intent of the people, and they have sent a certificate down here saying that Brookhart was elected.

What happened eight or nine months afterwards? Nobody knows where these votes were. They say they were in a courthouse. Yes; I have seen things put into courthouses, too. I have seen jury boxes in courthouses, and I have known them to be tampered with the night before a trial commenced, and people brought up and punished for it. There these ballots lay out there all this time. They hung around, nobody knows where. Then they were shipped down here in sacks, some of them not sealed, just burst open. What would have hindered any man who wanted to do it from taking a bunch of ballots and sticking them in one of those boxes and taking out that many that were already there? What would have hindered somebody from interfering with those ballots even after they came down here to Washington? And then we, the representatives of the people of this country, sit down here and say we will pay no attention to what the voters in Iowa did; we will not pay any attention to what the county canvassing boards in Iowa did; we will not pay any attention to what the State canvassing board did. No; "we discard it all," says this committee here, "and we pay absolutely no attention to the laws of Iowa. We are the judges; and we are going to say, regardless of this, who shall be seated and who shall not be seated in the United States Senate."

I am opposed to it. It does not make any difference to me what Mr. Brookhart's politics is. It does not make any difference to me what Steck's politics is; but it is a mighty strange thing to me, if he is such a good Democrat, that so many Republicans out in Iowa flopped over and voted for him to try to get him in the Senate against one who claims to be, was nominated by Republicans, and was running on the Republican ticket. I do not believe Steck is a Democrat; and if he had been, I do not believe the Republicans would have voted for him, any more than I believe the Democrats of South Carolina would vote for a Republican under similar circumstances.

That is my opinion about it. I have heard these speeches. I have listened pretty carefully to most of them. I have heard these figures. Why, anybody can make figures. They say figures do not lie, but the man that makes them sometimes is a liar. There is no question about that. I have listened carefully and attentively, and I can not see any reason in the world why the Senate, sitting here to-day or on Monday, should turn Mr. Brookhart out of his seat and set any such precedent as is sought to be set here to-day.

I hope, Mr. President, that Senators will stop and think. It is not simply a question of this case. It may be a very small matter as to whether or not you will turn out Mr. Brookhart. That is simply a question, possibly, as to one man; but it reaches further than that. It sets a precedent that will be held up for years and years before the Senate. It will be said that the Senate in 1926 decided that they were not bound by the laws of Iowa, that they made their own laws, that they could take the ballots eight months afterwards and count them better than the counters at the ballot box could count them; that they were more competent to pass on their validity than was the county board, and that they were more honorable to make the count than the State board who canvassed these results.

They say that the people meant to do so and so. Nobody in God's world can tell what a man meant except the man in the box. He may have made crosses and meant to mark out names, and he may not have meant to do that. In my State we print all the names on one ticket—United States Senator A. B. C. and D. all the way down, governor, and all State officers. When a man goes in to vote, he draws a mark through the name of the man for whom he does not want to vote. The man whose name is left, and not marked out, is the man for whom that voter intends to vote. We have a separate ticket for county officers, and it is handled in the same way. Even with that, Mr. President, I have seen tickets come out of the box many a time with two names left on them for one office. Of course, those tickets had to be discarded. On the other hand, I have seen them marked in such a way that they marked out all the candidates, and left nobody for one particular office. Of course, such a ballot could not be counted for that particular office. Therefore I submit to the Senate that when a man goes into the booth his intention may change after he gets in there; he may vote entirely differently from the way he says, as he goes in, he is going to vote.

I myself, and I have no doubt every man in the Senate, have sometimes found so many names on a ticket, possibly running for the House of Representatives or some office where they have had three or four candidates, that even after the voter got into the booth he would change his mind, and possibly vote for one of his favorites, or maybe two, and then change off and vote for another man, as he had no special preference left. Therefore who can come down here to Washington City on a committee and say what a man in Iowa meant? Who can say what he intended to do? It is said that we are to judge his intention by his ballot. His ballot may not always express his intention, because he might himself have made a mistake.

Where are all these missing votes? Were they before the State canvassing board? I have not heard whether they were or not. If they were, and the State canvassing board counted them, why should they have been lost in coming to Washington and not be counted after they get here? Why should we sit here and say that those people in Iowa did not have sense enough to hold an election, and, when they did hold it, that the officials who held it did not have brains enough to count what the people wanted and what they intended?

In conclusion, Mr. President, let me say that not a charge of fraud is brought here, so far as I have heard—not one—and that, it seems to me, ought to be the turning point in this whole case. The State of Iowa holds its election, certifies its votes, gives the certificates to Mr. Brookhart, and Mr. Brookhart brings it here and presents it to the Senate. He is sworn in the Senate, and sits here for more than a year.

Now, without a single charge of fraud the Senate is requested to set aside the election in Iowa and say that we are going to give this seat to a man who did not receive a majority of the votes.

If anyone can show me that there was fraud, I will be delighted to vote to correct fraud. I have always been against it. I have always been in favor of letting the people have a fair vote, untrammelled, untrammelled, a chance to vote for whom they please, and when the majority have spoken I believe in abiding by their verdict, let it elect whom it may. Let the people rule, let the people be the masters, and when we do, we will have performed our solemn duty as Senators.

It has been said that certain pressure is being brought to bear on some people. I do not believe that. I do not believe in these slanders on Senators. I have never mentioned his name on this floor before; I have said very little about him publicly or privately, but I do not believe that the President of the United States, a man elected by the people of this country, overwhelmingly elected, would be so little as to take part in a partisan fight on the floor of the Senate over the seating or unseating of any one man. I deny it. While I have never spoken to him in my life, have not seen him since his inauguration, never wrote him a line or received a line from him that I know of, and have never heard anybody else express an opinion for him, I know that a man who can be President of the United States can not be that small a man. That is my opinion of our present President.

Unless we can show fraud, we have no right to go behind this State election. To set aside the return of the State officials would establish a precedent which we should not set, because if we do that we will have to face it in the days to come. I do hope that Senators in this Chamber, unless they can show fraud, will stand by the people in Iowa in the election of Senator Brookhart. If he has come here wrongly, four years from now the people from Iowa will pass on that and our hands will be clean. We will have done our duty.

Once again I turn back to this side of the Chamber and plead with the southerners not to put themselves on record as saying that the Senate can set aside the law of a Southern State, set aside the returns of the board of managers of a Southern State, and by a majority seat whom they please without fraud being shown and in absolute violation of and disregard of the laws of the State wherein the election was held, as this majority report said they advocate in this case.

There never has been an election held and never will be an election held where irregularities and mistakes do not occur. They happen in all elections. They can not be avoided. But they do not necessarily indicate fraud. They happen on both sides. When there are too many ballots the managers pull some out of the box. In the drawing they may take out every ballot for the same candidate; but that is not fraud. That is done in executing the laws that govern them and under which they should act. I believe, as earnestly as I believe in any doctrine on this earth, in the doctrine of State rights, not confined to liquor, either, but applied to all State rights and all the powers of the State. I believe in leaving such powers with the States.

For the reasons I have given I propose to cast my ballot for Mr. Brookhart to retain his seat as the representative of the thousands of people in Iowa who themselves said he was the man they wanted in the Senate.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, on account of the very high regard and appreciation I have for the Senator now occupying a seat in the Senate as the junior Senator from Iowa, I speak with some reluctance in the contest now pending. My mind was absolutely open as to the course I should pursue until the case was presented by the Senator representing the majority of the committee and the Senator representing the minority of the committee and some subsequent discussions on the floor of the Senate by Senators on each side of the controversy.

From the facts in the case, from the record in the case, on the presentation of both facts and law, I have been impressed that unquestionably Mr. Steck received a majority of the votes that were cast for United States Senator in the election of 1924 in Iowa. If he did receive a majority of the votes, he should not be deprived of a seat in the Senate on account of some technicality or on account of some pretext or alleged claim based on the doctrine of State rights.

I believe in State rights. I always defend that principle. But the question is how the doctrine of State rights will be applied. Should it be applied so as to deprive a man of a seat in the United States Senate who receives a majority of the votes of the citizens of Iowa, or should it be applied so as to seat a candidate who did not receive a majority of the votes?

I think that if we are going to fortify ourselves by an appeal to the doctrine of State rights, if we are going to perpetuate and sustain the principle of State rights, then we should recognize the expressed voice and the will of the people who cast their ballots at the ballot box in Iowa, and we should not switch their verdict upon some mere technicality or flimsy hair-splitting technical construction of the law.

Our recognition of the fact that we should give heed to the rights of the people led us to seat the present junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Nye]. I for one did not believe that the law of North Dakota authorized the governor to appoint him as a Member of the Senate. Even by the most liberal construction the Legislature of North Dakota had not complied with the constitutional requirement that a law should be passed providing for the filling of a seat in the Senate if a vacancy occurred after the adoption of the constitutional provision for popular election of Senators. But we felt that in justice and right North Dakota deserved representation here, and we waived that technicality of the law.

The entire contention in behalf of Senator Brookhart has been founded on a technical construction of the law. No decision has been read before the Senate which sustains the idea that ballots that were not cast for a candidate should be counted for the candidate. In this case there were 1,344 votes upon which the name of Senator Brookhart was not crossed, but it is said these ballots should be counted for him because of some technicality of the law, in which it is provided that if the voter puts a cross in the circle at the top of the ballot it becomes a vote for the entire party ticket. But that provision of the law is no more sacred, it is no more binding, than the provision of the law that if one desires to vote only a part of the ballot he may go down the ticket and place a cross in front of the name of the candidates of his choice.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I will ask the Senator not to interrupt me in the midst of a thought.

On the question of the 1,344 votes which were given by the official canvassers in Iowa to Senator Brookhart, but which were not marked for him—unless we hold that they were marked for him merely through a technical construction of the law—I contend that section 812 of the law, which authorized the voter to mark a part of the ticket and to omit a part of it if he desired, is just as binding, and should be considered in connection with arriving at the intention of the voter, just as much as if he marked a cross in the circle at the head of the ticket. In fact, in reason, in logic, when you find a ballot with a cross in the circle, and also crosses down below, the crosses below are more indicative of the opinion and the desire of the voter than the cross which appears in the circle at the top. You may look out upon a crowd of people and say, "I like that group of people. I admire them. They are a wonderful lot of people." That is a general expression of admiration of that group of people. Then you begin to select those you like best, and you point out Mr. A and Mr. B, and you skip down and point out Mr. H and then Mr. M, or down the alphabet, selecting those you prefer. If a voter places a circle at the top of a ticket, the law provides that if a voter desires to vote for only a part of the ticket he can place a cross opposite the names of those for whom he desires to vote. How could you say he intended to vote the whole ballot when he proceeds to exercise his privilege, and in a specific, express manner, indicates those for whom he desires to vote?

None of those who cast those 1,344 ballots marked a cross in front of Senator Brookhart's name. It is only by a very strict, technical construction, or attempt, at least, to construe the law, that they are counted for him; not as the will of the voter, not as ballots that were cast for him, not on the ground that it was the intention of the voter, but that under the law they ought to be counted for him.

If we do not count those 1,344 ballots, which were not cast for him—I contend they were not cast for him in fact, unquestionably not in fact, and I contend they were not technically cast for him—then upon the official returns that came to the committee Steck had a majority of the votes. Even on the official count in Iowa Steck had a majority of the votes. Therefore he was the preference of a majority of the voters who expressed themselves at the ballot box. One of the most sacred principles of State rights is to give recognition to the expression at the ballot box of the electors of the State. So I contend upon the official ballots, as canvassed in Iowa, when we determine whether those 1,344 ballots should or should not be counted, that Mr. Steck was fairly and honestly the preference of the people of Iowa to represent them in the United States Senate; that is, on the official ballots as tabulated by the canvassers in the State of Iowa.

Of course, if Senators are going to contend that those ballots ought to be given to Mr. Brookhart, although there was no cross in front of his name, it can be done only by the most desperate stretch of technical construction, and then, of course, the election would be in favor of Senator Brookhart.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President—

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. DILL. The Senator does not contend that any of those 1,344 votes were not legally marked? In other words, he admits they were legal ballots?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Yes; they were legal ballots, but that does not require counting the ballot for every name on the ticket.

Mr. DILL. There is nothing wrong about a ballot being marked that way in the sense that makes it an illegal ballot?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do not think it makes it illegal to the point of requiring it to be thrown out.

Mr. DILL. That being the case, since they are legal ballots, the only way we can deprive Mr. Brookhart of those 1,344 votes is to declare illegal, so far as the Senate is concerned, the votes which the laws of Iowa make legal.

Mr. TRAMMELL. No; not the votes that the laws of Iowa make legal so far as those two particular candidates are concerned. I contend that the votes that were cast, so far as those two particular candidates were concerned, under the law of Iowa were not cast for Senator Brookhart, and therefore he is not entitled to them and they should not be counted for him.

Mr. DILL. But the Iowa law specifically provides that a ballot marked that way is legal and is counted for all the names on the ticket, and therefore the Senate must declare it illegal in the Senate when the law declares it legal in Iowa.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The court in Iowa held that if a man marked a cross in the circle at the top of the ballot, under the law that meant that he intended to mark all of the candidates following in the column of that particular party.

Mr. DILL. But that was 24 years ago.

Mr. TRAMMELL. But that if the voter went over into another column and marked a candidate over there, that action nullified the vote in the first column. I contend by that same principle of reasoning and logic that if a voter, as is apparent from the ticket, marked a square in the circle and went down and marked a cross in front of the names to show who he was voting for, and omitted to mark in front of a particular candidate's name as was done in this case in 1,344 ballots, by the same logic of reasoning that nullifies the idea that he intended to vote for Brookhart. I contend that the court decision does not support the idea that that was his intention.

Mr. DILL. It is true, as the Senator said, that as early as 1902, 24 years before, the courts had decided as the Senator states they did decide, and it is also true that they later wrote into the law of Iowa a specific provision that a ballot marked that way should be counted for all the names on the ballot under that party. The point I come back to is that the only way we can take those votes away from Mr. Brookhart is to declare illegal in the Senate what the law and the courts of Iowa have repeatedly declared is legal in Iowa.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I disagree with the Senator in regard to that. I say if the election officers in Iowa did not give to the candidate the votes that he received, then it is the duty of the Senate, when the contest is brought before the Senate, to recognize and give credit for those votes. On the other hand, I say if the candidate did not receive the votes, 1,344 in number, and the election officers in Iowa gave him those votes when he did not receive them, it is the duty of the Senate to readjust that injustice that would be placed upon the people of Iowa and upon the candidate who was given 1,344 votes to which, as I contend, he was not entitled under the law of Iowa. Unquestionably the voters did not intend to give them to him and yet some Senators would give him votes that he did not receive, and would give them to him under a mere technicality of the law. If he did not receive them, so far as I am concerned I shall place my construction upon the laws of Iowa and I will not give him votes that he did not receive.

Mr. DILL. The Senator knows there is no court in the State of Iowa that would have taken the votes away from Brookhart.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I disagree with the Senator about that. With all the learning and with all the decisions that have been presented to the Senate by the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and those that might be reflected by the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL], there has not yet been presented to the Senate a court decision that would sustain the Senator's contention in regard to those ballots. There has been none brought to the attention of the Senate that would sustain that contention.

Mr. DILL. I heard the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] call attention to one.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I just exploded the theory of that case. That case did not support the Senator's contention. It rather contradicted it.

Mr. DILL. The statute supports my contention.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The statute does not support the Senator's contention. The case presented by the Senator from Arizona supports my contention instead of the contention of the Senator from Washington. It says that if a voter goes over into another column and marks a cross in another column of the ballot, that nullifies the idea that he intended to cast his entire ballot for the candidates of the party indicated by the circle in which he placed the cross. Following that to its logical conclusion and reasoning, if a man marks in the circle at the top of the ticket and then goes down the column and, desiring to make more specific his preference, omits the name of a candidate, that contradicts and nullifies the idea that he intended to vote for all the candidates indicated in the column in which he marked the cross in the circle. That decision supports my contention and not the contention of the Senator from Washington, in reason and in logic.

Mr. DILL. But in none of those ballots did the voter go over into the other column.

Mr. TRAMMELL. But he went down the column to show for whom he was specifically voting.

Mr. DILL. And the law provides that when he does that it must be counted for all of the candidates in that column.

Mr. TRAMMELL. When he went down that column of the ballot, it was shown specifically who he was voting for. Eliminating technicalities, the Senator knows why he did it. He did it for the purpose of showing that he wanted to vote only for those candidates opposite whose name he was placing a mark, even though he had placed a mark in the circle at the top of the ticket. In my State sometimes there are certain electors who do not care to vote for every Democratic candidate. An elector goes down the ballot and "scratches" the candidate, as we call it. He will mark nine out of ten Democratic names and will not vote for one. Whenever we reach that ballot, the election officers know what he means. They say, "That fellow scratched Jones." That is what the voters in Iowa meant to do. They meant to indicate that they were affiliated with the Republican Party, but they would not vote for Mr. Brookhart, and therefore they did not make a cross in front of his name.

Mr. ASHURST. If they did not intend to vote for Brookhart, why did they vote for the straight Republican ticket?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Of course we know why they did that. There were specific instructions sent out that if they wished to vote for the Republican Party ticket they should make a cross in the circle at the top of the ballot and then indicate who they wanted below. They were following the printed instructions sent out by the election officers. Senators here would ignore the construction of the law that is put on it by the election officers themselves who sent out the ballots and who sent out the instructions, and would take only the view of the election managers and the election clerks. We know that throughout the Nation the average election clerk is not an experienced, trained lawyer. We know that they do not know much about the election laws. On the other hand, the State board of State officials preparing the ballot and sending out instructions are more generally familiar and acquainted with the law, and one can depend more upon their instructions. Even if they made an error as far as the voter is concerned, we consider them higher authority than we would ever consider the expression of some bystander or some uninformed local election clerk. So there is some reason why the voter thought he was expressing his particular preference and that his vote would only be counted as he intended it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] suggested to the Senator from Florida that Mr. Brookhart was a Republican and running on the Republican ticket and that the voter intended to vote the straight Republican ticket. Mr. Brookhart, after he secured the nomination as a Republican, bolted the Republican national ticket, opposed the presidential nominee of the Republican Party, and when he did that thousands of Republicans bolted him and refused to vote for him.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Of course I have nothing to do with the political complexion of the situation. It is rather natural, when he did bolt the Republican ticket and the Republican Party and was jumping on the Republican presidential candidate, that a lot of the Republicans in Iowa would not think he was a Republican and would vote against him. I have nothing to do with that side of the case, and I do not care anything about it one way or another.

I have tried to reach a decision on the question as to who received the votes, as to the intention of the voters. As I analyze the situation I can not see any other side to the question if we are to take the will of the voters as it appeared on the official ballot counted by the election officers of the State and canvassed by the State board.

Of course, the canvass of the State board does not mean that they canvassed, in detail, every ballot, but they usually take the election returns from the respective precincts. But if we take that count, then, unless we give Mr. Brookhart 1,344 votes that were not marked for him, he was not elected, but Steck was elected by a majority of 527.

There has been a lot of talk about going back to the official ballots. I say, go back to them, take the official ballots, because when we return to the official ballots it will be found that Steck was elected and not Brookhart. The only way in the world we can consider Brookhart elected is to give him those 1,344 votes that electors of Iowa to the number of 1,344 did not vote for him; but yet these ballots were given to him in the official count. I say, even taking the official count and then determine whether or not those 1,344 votes that were not, in fact, voted for him should be counted for him. The voter did not vote for Brookhart. Therefore, deduct these 1,344 votes, and Steck was elected. Then, of course, we go to the count that was made by the Senate committee, which, in my opinion, was a very fair and honest count and does not call for all this equivocating and attempts at muddying the waters about the question of how the ballots were handled. There is absolutely nothing to indicate any fraud or irregularity. I have seen men more diligent and energetic here in behalf of the contestee than he and his attorney and his representative were in his behalf. I believe that the contestee himself and his attorney and his representative in the recount of the votes were just about as zealous and just about as intensely interested in protecting the contestee's interests as the Senators who are now trying to muddy the waters by saying a ballot might have blown out the window or might have been misplaced. If Senators do not want to take the ballots that were brought here and counted, let them go back to the original ballots counted by the election officers of Iowa. Then let us decide whether or not Brookhart should have had these 1,344 votes. In fact, there is no question but what they were not cast for Brookhart. Even though the official count gave them to him, I contend that, in fact, they were not cast for him. I believe in recognizing the laws of the State governing the election. But the law did not require that those votes be counted for him. I do not want to dwell too long on that, but there are three methods provided, as brought out yesterday by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], by which a person could vote a straight party ballot. He could place a cross in the circle at the head of the ballot and leave it stand there. That indicated that he wanted to vote for every candidate beneath that circle. That was one way the law gave him in which he could exercise his prerogative as an elector. In the very next section of the same law it is provided that he may vote an entire ticket by making a cross in front of the names of the candidates following. That is the second method by which the elector may exercise his privilege. Then method No. 3 provides:

If the names of all the candidates for whom the voter desires to vote appear upon a single ticket but he does not desire to vote for all the candidates whose names appear thereon, he shall place a cross in the square opposite the name of each such candidate for whom he desires to vote without making any cross in the circle at the top of such ticket.

The Senator from Montana when arguing yesterday contended that the fact that the elector placed a mark in the circle foreclosed the idea that he had any other purpose or object in mind than to vote for the entire ticket. In this instance the electors placed a cross in the circle there and they also, under another provision of the law which I have read, attempted specifically to indicate that they did not intend to vote for all the candidates on that ticket. The sole and only way in which they could specifically indicate their specific preference was to place a cross in front of the names of those for whom they wished to vote and to omit to place it in front of the names of those for whom they did not desire to vote.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COPELAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I will ask the Senator to wait just for a moment. Why should we presume that a cross marked in the circle had any greater sanctity or carried with it any stronger expression of the desire of the voter than a cross in front of the individual name? Both of them were methods prescribed by which the elector could vote. The only way by which we can determine what was really the intent and purpose of the voter is to analyze his action from the standpoint of logic, reason, and human conduct. I have stated that when the voter went down the ticket and marked the individual names he was attempting to indicate specifically and definitely what he desired. He marked a cross in front of the names of those for whom he wanted to vote and omitted it in front of those for whom he did not desire to vote. Voters to the number of 1,344, I think, omitted to put a cross opposite the name of the contestee in this case, and yet those ballots have been counted for him. The only way we can seat Mr. Brookhart is to recognize those 1,344 ballots as having been cast for him and deprive of the seat the man who I say and believe was honestly elected by the voters according to the laws of Iowa. Now I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida has indicated one of the phases in this contest that have been very confusing to me and is yet confusing. For one who wants to do what the Senator from Florida wants to do and others of us want to do, justice in the case, it can not help but be confusing. The placing of a cross in the circle voted a straight ticket under the law.

Mr. TRAMMELL. It voted a straight ticket if no other mark had been placed on the ticket except the cross in the circle.

Mr. FESS. Then the voter goes down the line and makes other marks, omitting some names, which it appears to me would indicate that he meant to vote for those names on that ticket, but the law says he voted the ticket. Now what are we to do?

Mr. TRAMMELL. No; I contend that the law does not say that. I say that in the light of the decisions of the courts of Iowa, as presented by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHBURST] and by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], we can not construe that the voter voted the entire ballot merely because he marked a cross in the circle at the head of the ballot. That was indicative of his intention to exercise one privilege that he had; but he had another privilege and method by which he could vote. Another way was, if he did not desire to vote the entire ticket, he could mark a cross in front of the names of those he preferred. That would be indicative of his wish and desire and intention to vote only for those in front of whose names he marked a cross. The question is, which one of those, in reason, shall weigh greater in the matter of determining the intention of the voter? We can not say that the placing of a cross in the circle is conclusive under the law. We can not say that the other method was conclusive. Both methods have been employed. We have got to arrive at the intention of the voter. Unquestionably, in my mind, and from my sense of reasoning—and I only reason the matter out in an ordinary, common-sense way—the intention of the voter was to vote for those in front of whose names he put the cross and not to vote for those in front of whose names he did not place the cross. That was one of the methods by which he could mark his ballot.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield further to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. I concede the strength of the interpretation which the Senator from Florida places upon that controverted question. It would appear to me if the voter goes down the ticket and votes for certain names and does not vote for others, that he meant not to vote for the ones in front of whose names he omitted the cross, but when the voter puts the cross in the circle is it not true that under the law he voted the entire ticket?

Mr. TRAMMELL. If the voter had done nothing except to place a cross in the circle, that would be true; but is it not also true—

Mr. FESS. I think the Senator must admit that there is a basis for a reasonable doubt in that respect.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I know; and if the voter had stopped right there that would certainly be true; but we must see what the law further provides, and the law provides that there is another way by which a voter can exercise his privilege and indicate his preference.

Mr. DILL. The law provides for three ways in which the voter may indicate his intention.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I know that, but I am only discussing the one particular method involved. Another way is that the voter can go down the ballot and mark a cross in front of the names of the candidates of his choice. If he does that, though he has put the cross in front of the circle, if he also exercises the other privilege and the other method of voting, how are we going to construe that he intended the first method when the first method is not as specific of his expression as is the second method? The second method affords a more specific, in fact, a definite expression of the will and wishes of the voter.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him further, the question which he is now discussing and also the other matter which I think he will discuss, in regard to the agreement or the stipulation between the parties to the contest as to whether that should be final, notwithstanding what the voters in Iowa might have done—those two things are still very much confused in my mind.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I wish to call attention to the fact that the law of Iowa, in section 811, in setting forth how a straight ticket shall be voted provides three ways. The Senator from Florida speaks of only two of them. One is that he may mark a cross in the circle at the head of the ballot.

Mr. TRAMMELL. If the Senator will excuse me, I am making my speech.

Mr. DILL. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I am not going to discuss something that is merely a sideshow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida declines to yield.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I am not going to discuss a sideshow; I am trying to keep within the main show on this question. I am not going to discuss a method that is not involved in the controversy; and the other method is not involved in it, as I see it.

Mr. DILL. If the Senator will permit me, I merely wish to call attention to the wording of the law.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have read the law.

Mr. DILL. The Senator omits any discussion of the third method provided by the law. He talks as though that was going outside the law when a third method is specifically provided by the law by which the elector may vote a straight ticket.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Yes; the third method is to put a cross in front of the name of every candidate.

Mr. DILL. It does not say "every candidate."

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is one way to vote a straight ballot.

Mr. DILL. The law allows the three methods, and the Senator omits the third.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Well, what does the Senator say the third method is.

Mr. DILL. Under the third method, according to the statute in section 811, if the voter marks a cross in the circle and also a cross before the names of some of the candidates under the circle it still is a straight ballot.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is not what the law provides as the third method.

Mr. DILL. That is the law.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The third method is:

He may place a cross in the circle at the top of such ticket and also a cross in any or all of the squares beneath said circle.

Mr. DILL. "Any or all," but it is still a straight ticket, and that is what the voters did here in all but one instance.

Mr. TRAMMELL. But section 812 says that if the names of all the candidates for whom the voter desires to vote appear upon a single ticket, but he does not desire to vote for all of them, he can go down the line and he can mark those for whom he desires to vote.

Mr. DILL. But not put a cross in the circle.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The Iowa decision which was quoted here a day or so ago held that if a voter put a cross in the circle, that of itself carried the idea that he intended to vote the entire ticket, but when he goes over in the other party column and marks a cross in front of the name of a candidate in that column, the court held that that ballot should not be counted, because the fact that he placed a cross opposite the name in the other party column nullified the presumption that he intended to cast a vote for the entire straight ticket.

Mr. DILL. That decision was in 1902, I think.

Mr. TRAMMELL. It was the decision read here in support of the contention of those advocating that everything should be counted.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator another question. Suppose this contest had been brought to unseat Mr. Brookhart because 1,344 votes were counted for him under the State law when the intent of the voters was, as the Senator thinks it was, not to vote for him; does the Senator think, then, the Senate would consider unseating Mr. Brookhart when all the votes were legal?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Not if they were legal, but that is merely an assertion of the Senator from Washington. I state that it is not legal to count those votes for the contestee. The Senator might assert that it is legal. That is an honest difference of opinion concerning the construction of the law.

Mr. DILL. I can not read the law in any other way.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The fact that the Senator says it is legal does not make it legal, any more than my saying that it is legal makes it legal. The Senator asks me a hypothetical question based upon his own opinion as a foundation.

Mr. DILL. My reason for asking the Senator that question was that the Senator said taking the 1,344 votes away from the official count Mr. Brookhart did not have a majority.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly; he has not a majority.

The Senator may realize why I am talking about the official count. It is because those who desire to seat the contestee have taken retreat in every instance behind the official count, and I say that, if they retreat behind the official count and there are 1,344 ballots in the official count that do not belong to Mr. Brookhart he is defeated and Steck therefore is elected by the official count.

I think that every element of fairness and justice prevailed in the entire contest and the recount; and the equivocating and trying to muddy the waters by saying that some ballots might have been out of place or might not have been out of place, and all that, and this talk about discrepancies between poll lists and the number of ballots, and all that, to be frank, I think is begging the question. I think there is very little in any contention of that kind.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. GOFF. With the permission of the Senator from Florida, I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Washington. Does he consider the statute—section 811 of the Code of 1924—mandatory or directory?

Mr. DILL. I think it is mandatory on the election officials of the State of Iowa.

Mr. GOFF. It uses the word "may" as far as it grants a permissive privilege to the voter; does it not?

Mr. DILL. It uses the word "may" all through; does it not? Let me ask the Senator a question, then, in reply.

Mr. GOFF. Certainly.

Mr. DILL. Does the Senator mean to say that if this contest stood alone on these 1,344 ballots that are legally counted in the State of Iowa any serious consideration would be given to unseating the Senator?

Mr. GOFF. I certainly do; and I want to say further that the Senate of the United States, as an independent body, is not bound by any official count or any election returns from the State of Iowa if they are not according to the intent and the law as the Senate of the United States understands the law to be.

In that very connection I want to call the Senator's attention to the decision of the Supreme Court of Iowa which was introduced into the Record by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHBURST] and which has been referred to by the Senator from Florida.

This decision says, in Subdivision V:

A number of Republican tickets, upon which the name of incumbent was printed, were marked in the circle with a cross, and a cross likewise put in the square before each name thereon except that of incumbent.

That, as I understand, is almost the very language which the Senator from Florida used. Then the court, further on in this opinion and in the same paragraph, descends to a quotation from one of the prior decisions of the State of Iowa—I am reading, I will say to the Senator, from page 7104—

Mr. DILL. Is that in yesterday's Record?

Mr. GOFF. Thursday's Record—in which they quote the decision, saying:

It is said there is no authority for making a cross in the circle and also in the squares of the same ticket, as was done in the second, third, and fourth illustrations we have given. We think it is clear the statute does not contemplate that plan of voting. * * * Hence, when a voter has marked his ticket by placing a cross in the circle opposite the title, he does not add to the legal effect of that marking by placing crosses in squares opposite the names of candidates on the same ticket." This, we think, is true under the present statute. And we may say, further, that crosses in the squares under such circumstances not only do not add to the effect of the mark in the circle, but they do not detract from it—they have no consequence whatever, except in the case of a name written in, and that is specially provided for in section 1119, code.

Mr. DILL. They have no consequences, then.

Mr. GOFF. The Supreme Court says that they have no consequences, because the voter is doubling in his own tracks. He is doing twice what his original intention possibly meant that he only intended to do once, under the strict legal construction for which the Senator from Washington contends. If that statute is properly reflected in the decision of the court, that means nothing except that it indicates the intention of the voter; and it shows that as the voter came down that ticket he intended to vote the Republican ticket, and he undertook to eliminate the names before which he did not put the marks. In other words, he started with a generality which was republicanism. He descended to a particularity in which he eliminated, wherever he could, the names of those on the Republican ticket that he did not intend to include in the broad generality which he espoused when he marked at the top of the Republican column. That, I think, is the contention in the light of the law of the State of Iowa, and I thank the Senator from Florida for his permission to make the statement.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is my contention.

Mr. DILL. I desire to answer the Senator, but I will do so in my own time.

Mr. TRAMMELL. In the same case the court held that if an elector put a cross on another ballot, that would nullify any idea or any technical construction that he intended to vote the entire ticket when he placed a mark in the circle.

Mr. GOFF. That is correct.

Mr. TRAMMELL. And I state that if his act in the voting booth, and the manner in which he marked the ballot, would indicate that he did not intend to vote for that particular candidate, that nullifies the idea of a general construction that he did intend to do so because he put a cross in the circle.

Mr. DILL. But so long as he did not put a cross in the other ballot, this decision says that the extra marking is of no consequence, and the vote is legal and is counted for the man who is not marked.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I know; but the court also goes on to state that if there is a manifest intention of the elector, the manifest intention of the elector should govern. That is my construction of that decision; and, of course, anybody knows that in common sense and in dealings of fairness, man to man, that is the proper construction to put upon the action of a voter—to try to ascertain his intention and his purpose, and to credit on the tabulation his intention and his purpose.

Of course, there might be a difference of opinion as to what the voter intended to do. I would rather give to the situation what I think is the construction that carries out the will of the elector.

In some States of the Union—of course, I know that the laws of other States do not govern and control in Iowa, and should not—but in some States particular methods are provided for marking a ballot. In my State, for instance, the law provides that you shall mark a cross in front of the name of the candidate of your choice. Certain ballots were marked after the name of the candidate of the elector's preference, and a contest arose over that question. It went into the courts, and the courts held that, regardless of the law saying that you should place the mark in front of the candidate of your choice, if the voter marked it after the candidate's name that clearly and specifically indicated the intention and purpose of the voter, and the court construed that the law primarily intended that the will of the voter should be recorded and that his intention and his purpose was paramount and should be recognized, and that the fact that he put the cross after the name instead of in front of the name, although the law said it should be placed in front of the name, did not vitiate or nullify the ballot, and that the ballot should be counted.

I think that sound reasoning has been the basis of the decisions of the courts of all the States throughout the Union. We have not a court decision on the specific point that is involved in this case from the State of Iowa. Therefore, in the light of the decisions of the courts throughout the country, we ourselves have to arrive at a construction as to what application should be made of the law under the given circumstances and facts which confront us. We have a responsibility to perform just as much as the election officers of that State have a responsibility to perform. In the light of the opinion of the court in the majority of the decisions in the various States, I think that we are bound, in justice and fairness and proper respect for the predominating decisions of the courts of this country, necessarily to consider that those 1,344 votes were not cast for the contestee. Of course, they were not cast for the other candidate, but they were not cast for the contestee. Eliminating those 1,344 votes which he did not receive, according to my construction, I again assert that even under the official count Steck was elected, and unquestionably under the count that was conducted by the committee here Steck was elected.

Talk about the question of turning out people! According to my ideas and views it would be a very pathetic and a very tragic incident in the history of the United States Senate, when a man comes knocking at the door and says, "I was honestly elected; I received the majority of the votes of the electors of the State of Iowa as United States Senator; a majority prefers me; I am entitled to a seat in the Senate upon the basis of the facts and in all reason and in all justice," for the Senate to say, "We bar the door against you. We refuse to give you a seat in this body. We are not going to recognize the intent and the will of the electors of your State as expressed at the ballot box; but on a mere technicality we are going to say that while there are 1,344 votes there that in all reason apparently were never intended for the other man, because some election officer gave them to him we are going to recognize the other man and give him a seat in the Senate."

I have a great deal of respect and appreciation for the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Brookhart], the contestee in this case. I really dislike to make this talk on account of my personal feelings for him; but I have considered the facts, I have considered the law and the justice of the case, and I feel very sincerely that Steck was elected, that he is the preference of the voters of that State, and that he is entitled to a seat in this body.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. GOFF. As I understand the Senator's argument, there is no mandate in the present law of the State of Iowa that would prevent any court in that State from proceeding to find the actual intent of the voter as reflected in the ballots that illustrate the 1,344 votes; that the statute, being directory in its message, merely permits the court in the absence of an intent to the contrary to find that a voter might have so intended, but does not compel the court to find that a ballot so voted was intended as has been suggested by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. TRAMMELL. There is absolutely nothing in the decision of the court to indicate it. There is nothing in the law to preclude from them that prerogative of ascertaining the will of the voter; and, as I have already asserted, the trend and disposition of the courts throughout the country has been to try to determine the object and the intention and the purpose of the voter, not to disfranchise voters by extremely technical, strict constructions of law. The leaning has been the other way, and necessarily and properly should be the other way.

In a free country, with a representative form of government, with people selected by the sovereign will of the sovereigns of the various States, every safeguard should be cast around a policy which will preserve and will give expression to the intent and the will of the voters as cast at the ballot box; and in this contest it is my desire to recognize the will and the preference as expressed at the ballot box, as I see it from all the facts, by the people of Iowa. That will unquestionably, as I see it, according to their intent and their purpose, represented by a majority, was that Steck should represent them in the United States Senate. For that reason I shall vote to seat him.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], who filed the minority report on the Steck-Brookhart contest, ably addressed the Senate for several hours upon this contest, and his speech, owing to numerous interruptions which he suffered, is scattered through many pages of the Record. I have compressed into two pages of typewriting the vital points he made, and I ask permission to insert the matter in the Record at this juncture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLEASE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The abstract of Mr. STEPHENS's speech is as follows:

1. Senator Brookhart having received the certificate of election has a prima facie right to the seat and is the sitting Member. This can be overcome only by positive proof that he did not receive a plurality of the votes.
2. The returns of the judges of the election are prima facie correct. No recount of the ballots should be made until there is preliminary proof of the preservation of the ballots as required by law. There was no such preliminary proof.
3. Brookhart did not waive such preliminary proof.
4. This is not a private contest between Brookhart and Steck. The voters of the State of Iowa are parties. Therefore no waiver of any fact material to the decision of this matter could be made by contestee.
5. In 22 counties known as machine counties—that is, where voting machines were used—the ballots were preserved under an order of court. In those counties Brookhart gained 778 votes on the recount. In the 67 "paper ballot" counties where the ballots were not preserved under an order of court there were 1,068 precincts where there were discrepancies between the number of names on the poll lists and the number of ballots found in the boxes showing 3,570 missing ballots. It is significant that Brookhart gained where the ballots were properly preserved, and lost where there is no proof as to their preservation.
6. Where such discrepancies existed the official count should have been taken. If it had been taken, Brookhart would have had a plurality of 1,131.
7. This is true without regard to whether the 1,344 votes that were not given Brookhart are considered, for the reason that those of the 1,344 votes that came from the 1,068 precincts in which there were discrepancies are not to be considered. Thus Brookhart will have a plurality of more than 600.
8. If the official count be taken at the five precincts challenged, Brookhart has a plurality.
9. If the official count be taken at the 67 precincts where the bags were unsealed, Brookhart has a plurality.
10. Neither of the propositions—7, 8, or 9—is dependent upon the other. Accepting either one of the three contentions settles the matter in Brookhart's favor.
11. Under the laws of Iowa the 1,344 votes should be counted for Brookhart. The laws of the State should control.
12. The Congress having failed to enact laws on the subject of elections with reference to the "time, manner, and places, etc.," adopted the laws of each State on the subject of elections.
13. The fact that the Senate is by the Constitution made the sole judge of the returns, election, and qualifications of its own Members does not mean that the Senate is not bound by law. The Senate has no right to adopt rules in contravention of the statutes.
14. In one precinct there were 20 missing ballots. The recount gave Brookhart just 20 votes less than were given him by the officers of the election. * * * In another precinct there were 22 missing ballots. The recount gave Brookhart 24 fewer votes than were given him by the judges of the election. * * * In another precinct there were 12 more ballots found in the bag than there were names on the poll list. Steck was given 12 more votes by the counters than by the judges of the election. * * * In another precinct where the package of ballots came to the committee unsealed Brookhart lost 80 votes. * * * In another precinct where the package of ballots came to the committee and the counters noted on the work sheet "roll bound with cord," Steck was given 129 more votes than were reported for him by the judges of the election.
15. The committee is but an instrument and creature of the Senate. The Senate has a right to consider all the evidence and lack of evidence that may appear from the report of the committee. When this is done it appears clearly that Brookhart received a majority of the votes cast at the election.
16. This is a judicial question and not a political one. Each Senator is under the duty of deciding the matter on the law and the facts. The political effect should not be considered.

Mr. HOWELL. I ask unanimous consent that I may insert in the RECORD a table in connection with the Steck-Brookhart contest.

There being no objection, the table and accompanying statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STECK-BROOKHART CONTEST

In connection with this contest the 2,442 election precincts of Iowa logically divide into three classes, as follows:

(1) Machine-tallying precincts: Five hundred and eighty-five precincts in which voting machines were generally used; however, about 2.3 per cent of the vote cast was by use of paper ballots. It is to be presumed in connection with these precincts that the votes cast tallied with the number of names on the poll books, inasmuch as recent evidence to the contrary is lacking. The committee's supervisor failed to record the machine totals when the vote for Senators was reread.

Paper-ballot tallying precincts: Seven hundred and eighty-nine precincts in which the ballots received by the committee tallied with the names on the poll books.

Paper-ballot nontallying precincts: One thousand and sixty-eight precincts in which there was a shortage of ballots in every precinct as compared with the poll books, the total shortage amounting to 3,570 ballots.

(2) From the reports to the Senate submitted by the Committee on Privileges and Elections the following data is obtainable for each of these three classes of precincts:

(a) The number of Steck's uncontested votes and the number of his challenged votes.

(b) The number of Brookhart's uncontested votes and the number of his challenged votes.

(c) Also for all of the precincts taken together there is obtainable from the same reports the total number of both Steck's and Brookhart's challenged votes held to be good votes. However, the committee does not afford information that would enable, in each case, the apportionment of these good votes to each of the three classes of precincts. Only the total for all precincts is afforded, as previously stated.

(3) Under the circumstances, therefore, it is only possible to apportion these good votes to each of these three classes of precincts by determining the percentage of good votes to challenged votes in each case and then applying this percentage to the challenged votes for each of these three classes of precincts.

Thus, Steck's total challenged votes number 2,268. Of these there were found good 2,225, or 98 per cent. Brookhart's total challenged votes numbered 6,453. Of these 4,932 were found good, or 76.4 per cent.

Inasmuch as the committee's report affords the number of Steck and Brookhart challenged votes, as before stated, for each of these three classes of precincts, by applying the respective percentages in each case an apportionment of good votes is possible. This is done in the following tabulation, in which all totals agree with the committee's reports.

(4) From an inspection of this table it will be noted that if the recount made by the committee is accepted in the machine-tallying and ballot-tallying precincts and, in lieu of the recount, the official count is taken in the nontallying precincts, in which 3,570 ballots are unaccounted for, Senator Brookhart has a plurality of 582. And this is without including the 1,344 straight Republican ballots claimed by Brookhart and not allowed by the committee.

Steck-Brookhart contest

	Number of precincts	Official count		Committee's recount								Results
		Steck	Brookhart	Steck				Brookhart				Using recount in tallying precincts and official count in nontallying precincts
				Challenged votes	98 per cent challenged votes good	Uncontested votes	Final recount	Challenged votes	76.4 per cent challenged votes good	Uncontested votes	Final recount
Machine tallying	585	128,865	123,779	98% of 19=	18+	129,008=	129,026	76.4% of 29=	22+	124,690=	124,712	129,026	124,712
Ballot tallying	789	110,171	122,232	98% of 840=	824+	110,494=	111,318	76.4% of 2,370=	1,811+	120,561=	122,372	111,318	122,372
Nontallying	1,068	207,784	201,626	98% of 1,409=	1,383+	208,442=	209,825	76.4% of 4,054=	3,099+	198,566=	201,665	207,784	201,626
Total	2,442	446,820	447,637
Brookhart's plurality		817
		447,637	447,637
Challenged votes, total				2,268				6,453
Uncontested votes, total						447,944				443,817
Challenged votes, good, total				2,225				4,932
Final recount							450,169				448,749
Steck's plurality on committee recount											1,420
							450,169				450,169	448,128	448,710
Brookhart's plurality using recount in machine and tallying precincts and official count in nontallying precincts (3,570 ballots are missing in nontallying precincts)												582
												448,710	448,710

This result is without including the 1,344 straight Republican ballots claimed by Brookhart and not allowed by the committee.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. JONES of Washington. If there is no Senator present who desires to speak on the election contest, I see no reason why we should not take up the calendar for a while, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dale	Harreld	Mayfield
Bayard	Dill	Harris	Metcalf
Bingham	Edwards	Heflin	Moses
Blease	Ernst	Howell	Neely
Borah	Ferris	Johnson	Norbeck
Bratton	Fess	Jones, N. Mex.	Nye
Broussard	Fletcher	Jones, Wash.	Oddie
Bruce	Frazier	Kendrick	Overman
Butler	George	King	Phipps
Cameron	Gillett	La Follette	Pine
Capper	Glass	Lenroot	Ransdell
Copeland	Goff	McKellar	Reed, Pa.
Couzens	Gooding	McMaster	Sackett
Cummins	Hale	McNary	Sheppard

Shipstead	Smoot	Trammell	Wills
Shortridge	Stanfield	Tyson
Simmons	Stephens	Warren
Smith	Swanson	Williams

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If there is no one present who desires to discuss the election contest, I submit a request that we take up the calendar, commencing where we left off two or three days ago, with Order of Business No. 470, to consider unobjectioned bills on the calendar.

Mr. KING. I understand there are a number of Senators on the other side who desire to speak on the election contest. There will not be time enough on Monday for all to speak, and why can we not consume the afternoon with a discussion of the pending resolution?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am perfectly willing that that should be done, but I understood that there was no one who wanted to speak.

Mr. KING. I understand the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] desire to speak.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I had the quorum call made to give any Senators absent at the time an opportunity to speak to-day if they should so desire.

Mr. FESS. I will say to the Senator from Utah that they are present, but none of them wants to go on.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that we take up the calendar, beginning with Order of Business 470, where we stopped a few days ago, and that we consider unobjected bills on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I do not object, but at this point, noting the presence of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK], I want to inquire what the plans are for the consideration of the various pension bills that are on the calendar. Two Spanish-American pension bills, one a House bill and the other a Senate bill, are on the calendar awaiting consideration. I am advised that a Civil War pension bill will be reported very soon. I was wondering if we could not arrive at some conclusion, fixing a date when we might consider those bills. It is getting late in the session. What are the plans of the Senator from Utah touching the action of the Senate following the disposition of the Brookhart-Steck case?

Mr. SMOOT. I shall ask the Senate to take up the Italian debt settlement on Tuesday morning and shall attempt to keep it before the Senate until a vote is had.

Mr. BRUCE. Will not the Senator from Utah speak a little louder so that we on this side of the Chamber can hear what he is saying?

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the Senator from Ohio, I said that it was my intention, subject, of course, to the Senate's will, to take up the Italian debt settlement on Tuesday morning, and to keep it before the Senate until it shall be disposed of.

PENSION LEGISLATION

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I wish to direct a question to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK]. What are his plans touching the disposition of pension bills? He is chairman of the Committee on Pensions, and a good many of us are interested in knowing what he plans to do in that respect.

Mr. NORBECK. We expect to report out the bill which passed the House covering Spanish-American War pensions, with a few amendments that make it similar to the Senate bill now on the calendar. The Committee on Pensions of the Senate has already reported one bill which has passed the House.

Mr. WILLIS. Is the Senator at this time prepared to make any statement touching a report upon a general Civil War pension bill?

Mr. NORBECK. The first of the next week the committee will take up the question of a report on Civil War pensions. I believe I can assure the Senator that the committee will be favorable to some legislation to help the Civil War veterans out.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the Senator will press for action upon those measures as soon as the Italian debt settlement is out of the way.

Mr. NORBECK. I assure the Senator from Ohio that there will be no delay.

Mr. BRUCE. May I ask the Senator from Ohio what he means when he speaks of pension bills? What bills, specifically, does he mean?

Mr. WILLIS. The bill I have especially in mind, although I do not recall the number, is a general Spanish-American War pension bill. Such a bill has passed the House recently by a vote of 365, there being no vote against it. That is on our calendar.

Mr. BRUCE. That relates to the Spanish-American War?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes; that relates to pensions of Spanish-American War veterans. The chairman of the Committee on Pensions has just advised the Senate that his committee expects soon to report a Civil War pension bill. They have not yet fully formulated it.

Mr. BRUCE. An increase of pensions?

Mr. WILLIS. An increase of pensions for veterans of the Civil War and their widows, and he expects soon to report that bill and states that he will press for early consideration.

Mr. BRUCE. Are there any more pension bills besides those?

Mr. WILLIS. I am not a member of the committee and can not enlighten the Senator.

Mr. BRUCE. Are those the only two in which the Senator from Ohio is interested?

Mr. WILLIS. Those are two in which I am specifically interested.

Mr. KING. I can state with certainty to the Senator from Ohio that he need have no concern about the passage of pension bills through the Senate before adjournment. I have no doubt that the appropriations for the next fiscal year for ex-service men and to meet the pension demands will amount to approximately $800,000,000. When we were discussing the bonus bill several Senators, among them the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], stated that the appropriations to ex-service men would aggregate between $75,000,000,000 and $100,000,000,000. Of course that included the payments to be made to their widows and dependents and would cover a considerable period of time. Congress will soon be appropriating $1,000,000,000 a year if we are to continue our present course in the matter of pensions and to meet the requirements of the Veterans' Bureau. No one is opposed to liberal appropriations to care for the disabled and to meet the requirements of those who were injured while serving their country.

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator from Utah, of course, will aid us in getting those bills before the Senate for consideration?

Mr. KING. The Senator from Utah will aid in securing legislation to care for those who received injuries while in military service. But I do not look with favor upon this growing tendency to grant civil pensions or service pensions. I shall vote for liberal appropriations for those who were injured while serving their country upon the battle field, or who incurred disabilities while in military service.

Mr. WILLIS. Of course the Senator will not object to taking up the bills?

Mr. KING. If I were to object it would do no good, because election is approaching and the anxiety of Senators to satisfy the demands of constituents will prompt them to run the Juggernaut over anyone who has the temerity to interpose an objection.

Mr. WILLIS. It is possible that a motion may be made to take up the bills.

Mr. BRUCE. I would like to ask the Senator from Ohio a question. Is this Spanish-American War veterans' bill a service pension bill, or is it for disabled men?

Mr. WILLIS. I shall answer the question so far as I am able. I am not a member of the committee. It is my understanding that it is a service pension bill.

Mr. BRUCE. I thought the Spanish-American War was a war about which the complaint was that there was not war enough to go around.

Mr. WILLIS. I never heard that complaint.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Maryland that the Spanish-American War was fought by volunteers. They have never been before Congress since 1899 to ask for anything. The maximum compensation given for total disability is $30, whereas veterans of other wars are receiving much more. The bill which the Senator has been discussing is merely intended to equalize, in a measure, the veterans of other wars and what they are receiving with what the Spanish War veterans are receiving.

Mr. BRUCE. I am not speaking of disabilities. I asked the Senator from Ohio the question as to whether the bill was a service pension bill.

Mr. BROUSSARD. It is a disability pension bill. It should be enacted into law, because since 1899 those men have never been here asking Congress for anything, and that is why they are getting much less than half what the other veterans are getting to-day.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we may begin the call of the calendar at Order of Business No. 470, the call to proceed for unobjected bills only.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRUCE. I object. If it is the desire to take up the calendar, I want to take it up in the regular way.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There are about 150 bills on the calendar, and I think the idea is if we can get through the unobjected bills following No. 470 on the calendar that we will then begin at the beginning of the calendar and go through from the beginning. If objection is made at this time, it will mean a call of the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. BRUCE. I have bills in my charge on the calendar that have been bringing me over here very often, to my very great inconvenience at different times, and which have never been reached on the call of the calendar because of the zigzag method being constantly pursued with reference to the calendar. If we are going to take up the calendar, let us take it up in the regular order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This is the course we have usually pursued heretofore, I may say to the Senator.

Mr. BRUCE. I know, but it has worked out lamentable results so far as I am concerned and so far as my convenience and comfort are concerned and my ability to get consideration for bills in which I am interested.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me the request of the Senator from Washington is a very fair one. If we started always at the beginning of the calendar, we would get only so far and then we would adjourn or take a recess. Then we would start again at the beginning and traverse the same ground, and those bills which are further on in the calendar would never be reached. It seems to me it is fair to go through the entire calendar at some time and then start again at the beginning. We have not gone through the entire calendar yet, so the Senator is not subjected to more annoyance or inconvenience than others. There are many bills that we have nearly reached upon a number of occasions, but we have not reached them and will not reach them if we start at the beginning of the calendar each time.

Mr. FESS. If we do not begin where we left off the last time, and if we go back to the beginning of the calendar under Rule VIII, we will get nowhere this afternoon, because all the time would probably be consumed in the discussion of one bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Maryland if he will not withdraw his objection?

Mr. BRUCE. After consultation with other Senators I must state that for the first time in my life I find myself mistaken! [Laughter.] I withdraw the objection.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask the Senator from Washington to modify his request so that we may begin with Order of Business No. 469 instead of 470.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Personally I would have no objection to that, but I do not know whether any other Senator would object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that the call of the calendar begin at No. 469. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

AMERICAN SAMOA

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent out of order to introduce a bill and in connection with it to make a statement which will occupy not more than 15 minutes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have no objection to the Senator's request; and I take it the Senate will have none.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator's request is granted.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, in connection with the bill which I am about to introduce, relating to what is generally known as American Samoa, I desire to make a brief statement.

Prior to 1899 the Samoan Islands had an independent government, under a king. In 1878 the United States entered into a treaty of friendship and commerce with the Samoan Government, under which the United States was granted the right to establish and maintain a coal and naval station at the port of Pango-Pango. In 1879 treaties were concluded between the Samoan Government and Germany and Great Britain under which Germany was granted a right to establish a coal station in the islands at a point designated and England was granted a similar right at a place to be later determined. Both these treaties, like that with the United States, were treaties of friendship and commerce. In the following years internal disorders prevailed, growing out of rivalries to the throne of Samoa. In 1898 King Malleton died, and the Samoans could not come to any agreement as to his successor and disorder continued. In March, 1899, the naval forces of the United States and Great Britain shelled the forces of one of the Samoan claimants to the throne, and also several Samoan villages. On April 1, 1899, American-British forces landed in the islands, and in the ensuing hostilities 2 American officers, 1 British officer, 2 American sailors, and 1 British sailor were killed and 5 men were wounded. The Samoans were compelled to yield to superior force, and the occupation by the United States of what is now known as American Samoa has continued since that time. In May, 1899, the three powers concerned decided the way to restore order was to take the islands and divide them among themselves. Without the consent of Samoa the United States, Great Britain, and Germany entered into treaties dividing the islands, which treaty was ratified by the Senate on February 13, 1900.

The share of the United States in the loot was the island of Tutuila, and all other islands of the Samoan group east of longitude 171 minutes west of Greenwich, now known as American Samoa. The remaining islands were given to Germany, Great Britain relinquishing its claim in consideration of Germany relinquishing its claim to certain islands of the Solomon group.

All three nations at the time of this outrageous act had treaties of amity and commerce with the Samoan Government. Speaking of this treaty dividing the islands, the Secretary of the Navy in a report in 1923 stated:

There appears to be nothing in the foregoing treaty to indicate that the Government or representatives of the Samoan people had any part in its formulation, conclusion, or adoption.

On February 19, 1900, six days after the Anglo-German-American treaty had been ratified by the Senate the President issued the following Executive order:

The Island of Tutuila of the Samoan group, and all other islands of the group east of longitude 171 minutes west of Greenwich meridian, are hereby placed under the control of the Department of the Navy for a naval station.

The Secretary of the Navy shall take such steps as are necessary to establish the authority of the United States and to give the islands the necessary protection.

Upon the same date the Secretary of the Navy issued an order as follows:

The Island of Tutuila, of the Samoan group, and all other islands of the group east of longitude 171 minutes west of Greenwich, are hereby established into a naval station, to be known as Naval Station Tutuila, and to be under the command of a commandant.

These two orders I have recited are the only foundation for our present government of American Samoa. At the time they were promulgated we had no more title to these islands than I have to the Capitol of the United States.

By the treaties referred to we exchanged quitclaim deeds with Great Britain and Germany, but none of the parties had any title to quitclaim and they were no more effectual to pass any title than if another Senator and myself should exchange quitclaim deeds dividing between us the Washington Monument and the Lincoln Memorial.

Again quoting from a report of the Secretary of the Navy:

Although by the tripartite treaty of February 13, 1900, England and Germany renounced all claim to these islands of the Samoan group, comprising what is now known as American Samoa, the United States did not thereby necessarily acquire sovereignty over these islands. Their independence had been recognized up to that time by all three powers and no formal definite steps abrogating such independence were expressly authorized under the terms of the treaty.

While I will return to this date of 1900 directly, I now wish to state the present status of German Samoa, as Germany had taken possession of all of the Samoan Islands not occupied by the United States, as I have heretofore stated.

Under the treaty of Versailles Germany renounced in favor of the principal allied and associated powers, of which the United States was one, all her rights and title to German Samoa. Thereafter New Zealand was given a mandate by the League of Nations to govern German Samoa, and it is now under its jurisdiction. I may say in passing that Germany had no better title to German Samoa than the United States had to American Samoa, for both were based upon conquest of a weak and helpless people in violation of solemn treaties.

According to the latest census reports the population of German Samoa is 37,000, and the population of American Samoa is 8,056.

Returning now to the year 1900, following our occupation of the islands in the manner I have described and after ratification of the treaties between Great Britain, Germany, and the United States that I have referred to, on April 17, 1900, certain chiefs of the island of Tutuila purported to make a formal cession of that island to the United States and of other islands of the Samoan group east of longitude 171 minutes west of Greenwich, and on July 16, 1904, chiefs of the Island of Aunu'u by a similar act made a cession to the United States of their island.

I wish to say in this connection that, to the credit of the United States be it said, while we took those islands in the manner that I have described, we did almost immediately thereafter begin negotiations for a cession to the United States by the Samoan people, with whose Government we had a treaty of amity and friendship.

These cessions were made upon certain conditions, which conditions have never been complied with. But, aside from that fact, the Secretary of the Navy states that while these cessions were accepted by the President they have never been acted upon by the Congress of the United States, and I think no Senator will claim that the President of the United States has any right to accept any cession of territory without the express authority of Congress.

But, quite aside from this, these alleged cessions were made for certain purposes and upon certain conditions, which have not been fulfilled by the United States. The principal cession is, as I have stated, dated April 17, 1900, and the preamble, among other things, recites that the chiefs—are desirous of granting unto the said Government of the United States full power and authority to enact proper legislation for and to control the said islands.

There has never been any legislation for the government of these islands, and our rule there has been an absolute dictatorship. But, further, the document of cession recites—

To hold that said ceded territory unto the Government of the United States, to erect the same into a separate district to be annexed to the said Government, to be known and designated as the District of Tutuila.

Very similar language is used in the cession of the 14th of July, 1900, covering a portion of the same territory as the cession of April 17, but signed by certain other Samoan chiefs.

Since that time the government has been administered by a naval officer, who has exercised supreme executive, legislative, and judicial power. From his decision there is no appeal. He holds the power of life and death in his hands.

We not only have flagrantly violated the rights of the Samoans in our original occupation, but we have since exercised sovereignty over them without express authority of law. True, the Navy Department claims that Congress has recognized this cession and impliedly confirmed it by various references to American Samoa in acts of Congress, but I assert that none of these acts can take the place of formal acceptance of the cession.

To illustrate the acts of Congress relied upon, in the Payne-Aldrich tariff law the island of Tutuila is excepted from its provisions. In 1906 Congress provided for the acknowledgment of deeds in American Samoa. In 1916 it provided for a radio station there and in 1919 provided for a census of its inhabitants.

Without at this time going into the question of whether the United States can acquire territory by acquiescence in unauthorized acts of the executive department, I do insist that we can not accept the benefits of the cession without performance of obligations, which it imposes.

Congress has not erected these islands into a separate district as the cession provides. We have not enacted legislation for the islands, which was one of the stated purposes of the cession. We have utterly failed in our duty to these islands, and the very least we can now do is to formally accept the cession of the islands and create such a form of government for them as may be practicable under the circumstances.

I realize that a complete system of civil government similar to that which we have in Hawaii and Porto Rico is not practicable for this small number of people without entailing great expense upon the Treasury of the United States, but we can place the power and responsibility for their government with the President of the United States, instead of a subordinate naval officer, and we can provide judicial protection for life and property there under the wing of the law.

The Samoans are a peaceful and hospitable people. There is no illiteracy there because schools have been established and conducted by the missionary societies. I quote from the report of the Governor of Samoa for 1922:

The Samoans are intensely religious. It may be said that all Samoans are Christians, and though many of them are not church members all go to church. There are family prayers in the morning and evening in every Samoan home, and Sunday is very religiously observed as a day of rest.

In making this brief statement, I have confined myself to a recital of facts wholly secured from reports of the Navy Department. Charges of the most serious nature have been made against our administration of the islands. These charges are for the most part denied by the Navy Department, and wholly so in so far as the present conduct of affairs is concerned. I may say that I wish it understood that in this statement I wish to make no reflection whatever upon the present administration of the islands by the Navy Department. I hope it may not be necessary to enter this field of investigation for the admitted facts call for immediate action. Such a dictatorship as now exists, benevolent despotism though it may be, is utterly at variance with all of our American ideals, and furnishes one chapter of our history of history of which no American can be proud.

I should say, in fairness, that the primary fault for this situation is that of the Congress of the United States in not providing for a proper government for these points. A full report of the situation was made in 1903 by President Roosevelt, but Congress has done nothing from that time to this—a period of 23 years.

Believing as I do that there should be some constructive legislation at this session, and realizing that if this is to be had all controverted questions must be avoided, I have prepared a very short bill accepting the cession and creating a separate district of American Samoa to be known as Tutuila, as provided for in the cession referred to. It provides that until the President shall otherwise provide the regulations issued by the naval governor of Samoa in 1900 entitled "A declaration concerning the form of government for the United States naval station Tutuila," in so far as the same are not inconsistent with this act, shall remain in force.

I wish to repeat in this connection that this subordinate naval governor is absolutely supreme, and his regulations are not even submitted to the Navy Department for approval. The bill provides that except as otherwise provided all military, civil, and judicial powers shall be vested in the President of the United States to be exercised through a governor appointed by him and confirmed by the Senate.

The President shall also appoint a district judge, to whom writs of error and appeal will be allowed from the inferior courts, and writs of error and appeal shall be allowed from the district judge to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

The salaries of the governor and the district judge are fixed, and the President is empowered to appoint such other persons as he may deem necessary to carry on the government and fix their salaries.

This is a brief outline of the bill I now introduce. I do not offer it as a permanent organic act for these islands, but for the purpose of doing some measure of justice to these people, with the hope that a more comprehensive and satisfactory plan may be worked out in the future, growing out of the experience with the form of government that I now propose.

I send the bill to the desk and ask that it may be read twice and referred to the appropriate committee.

Mr. BINGHAM. I understand the Senator desires to have the bill referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; I ask that that reference may be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 3952) accepting the cession to the United States of certain of the Samoan Islands and to provide for a temporary government therefor, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I should like to add a word or two to what the Senator from Wisconsin has said.

In the first place, the islands which are now known as American Samoa, with the beautiful harbor of Pago-Pago and the lovely island of Tutuila and the neighboring islands, were first visited and explored by Captain Wilkes, of the American Navy, about 1845. I had hoped to have at hand the volumes of his travels before the Senator concluded, but have not succeeded in doing so.

Captain Wilkes passed a very pleasant and agreeable time in the islands and met the chiefs. If my recollection serves me—it is now some years since I visited those islands and made a study of their history—the chiefs came to Captain Wilkes and told him that they were very anxious to be protected against foreign nations, and asked him to accept a protectorate over them, which he was not authorized to do.

Senators will realize that in all parts of Polynesia, under the purely Polynesian form of government, each island, and sometimes each part of a large island, was under a separate chief or king. The more powerful chiefs sometimes succeeded, as in the case of the Hawaiian Islands, in conquering the chiefs of other islands and for the time being bringing the islands all under one chief. In Samoa, if my memory serves me correctly, the different islands were under various chiefs. It is not as though they were all under one king.

Not to go any further into the history of the islands, nothing was done, as the Senator from Wisconsin has said, until it became necessary, due to the desire of the great Chancellor Bismarck to secure a Pacific empire for Germany, to come to some agreement regarding Samoa. So the United States, England, and Germany made a tripartite agreement about the time of the great hurricane in Samoa, when several of our warships, as will be remembered, and one or two German ships were destroyed, while the British warship Calliope, by having steam up, succeeded in escaping from the effect of the hurricane. That really marked the time when the present arrangement was entered into.

I must congratulate the Senator from Wisconsin on the thoroughness with which he has gone into the case so far as the Government and the Navy Department are concerned. I agree with him that Congress has been remiss in not having enacted any legislation for the government of the Samoan Islands. Before the bill which the Senator from Wisconsin has introduced shall be enacted, I trust that Congress will send a small committee of its own Members to study the situation and not rely upon stories in the newspapers, which, while frequently of great interest, often have something behind them that is not always seen on the surface. I hope very much that he will agree with me that his statement that we have utterly failed in our duty to those islands is not quite correct.

Mr. LENROOT. I said Congress had failed in its duty, and I think the Senator will agree with me that is the fact.

Mr. BINGHAM. I understood the word "we," as used by the Senator, to apply to the United States.

Mr. LENROOT. No; I referred to Congress.

Mr. BINGHAM. With that I am in entire agreement. As a matter of fact, the Navy Department has had a wonderful record in Samoa. If there were time, I should like to go into it, because, although perhaps certain Senators would not agree with me, I have been there and examined into it, and the facts in brief are these:

There is no other group of islands in Polynesia where the native population is increasing as it is in American Samoa, under the Navy Department. There is no other group of islands in the Pacific where health conditions are what they are in American Samoa. During the great flu epidemic during the period of the war when the flu spread all over the world and reached certain islands in the Pacific, in Polynesia in particular, when it reached Tahiti nearly half of the population of one island and a third of the population of another island were destroyed by the flu. When the flu reached British Samoa, or New Zealand Samoa, as it is to-day, 4,000 people died on the Island of Apia alone, where Robert Louis Stevenson spent the latter years of his life. In American Samoa not a single person died of the flu; there was not a single case of the flu, because the Navy with its doctors so successfully prevented any contact with the outside world and protected those little brown brethren of ours absolutely against this disease of civilization. There is not another island in the Pacific, there is not another group of islands in the Pacific, where venereal disease does not exist, except in American Samoa; and those diseases which civilization has spread throughout the Pacific and which have decimated the native populations do not exist in American Samoa.

The Senator has explained his remark that "we have utterly failed in our duty to those islands," but I want Senators to realize a few of the things that the Navy Department has done for Samoa before we attempt to pass any legislation merely on the general theory that the natives are not represented in the government.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. Are the islands self-supporting? Do they produce sufficient to take care of their population?

Mr. BINGHAM. That is my understanding.

Mr. LENROOT. And their revenues pay the expenses of such government as they have, outside of the regular military or naval government.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is there any real harbor there?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes; there is a beautiful harbor. The harbor of Pango-Pango is one of the finest harbors of the world. It is a little bit too deep. It is sometimes difficult to get up anchors because of the great depth. It is a volcanic island, and the mountains rise a thousand feet on each side of the harbor and go down to quite a depth, so that steamers can come very close alongside the shore without any danger of running aground. It is one of the finest harbors in the world.

Mr. FLETCHER. I had an impression that there was deep water on one side.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida has asked whether the islands are self-supporting. In certain cases the United States has assisted the inhabitants of the islands. I recall that recently there was a great hurricane there, and in the last deficiency bill we provided a certain amount of relief for the islands in fixing up their roads and some of the buildings that had been destroyed by the hurricane.

Mr. LENROOT. I think, however, that was the first instance of an appropriation out of the Treasury.

Mr. HALE. I think they themselves take care of their ordinary running expenses.

Now, Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether he expects to have action on his bill at this session of Congress other than possibly by the appointment of a commission to investigate?

Mr. LENROOT. I will say that if a committee visits Samoa I shall not press the bill; but I have studiously avoided any controverted facts here, and I do not propose to go into this question that has been raised concerning the administration of the islands in the past.

Mr. HALE. I understand that the Senator makes no charges against the Navy Department.

Mr. LENROOT. None whatever.

Mr. HALE. The department is very proud of the way in which it has administered the islands, and in case any legislation is to be enacted I am sure the department should be heard.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, my position is that under the admitted facts we owe a clear duty to legislate for the islands, to accept formally the cession which was made, and to provide some kind of a government for them under express authority of law.

I want to say that if a commission or a committee can not visit the Samoan Islands, or if that is not provided for at this session, as this bill of mine that I now propose provides only for a temporary government—and I frankly say that I based it very largely on the act dealing with the Virgin Islands—it seems to me that this bill ought to pass at this session; but if there can be an investigation by a committee between now and next December, I shall not press it at this time.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I should like to call the Senators' attention, and particularly that of the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who inquired about the harbor, to volume 2 of the narrative of the United States exploring expedition by Charles Wilkes, on page 71, of which he will find the first picture of the beautiful harbor of Pango-Pango that was ever published; and in chapter 3 he will find an account of the visit of Captain Wilkes to those islands and the meeting which he had with the chiefs.

THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar under the unanimous-consent agreement.

HEIGHT OF BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT

The first business on the calendar under the unanimous-consent agreement was the bill (H. R. 9398) to amend an act regulating the height of buildings in the District of Columbia, approved June 1, 1910.

Mr. EDWARDS. I offer an amendment to this bill, which I send to the desk.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not think that under the five-minute rule we will be able to present all the facts in regard to this matter. It is a very important one, and I think the Senate should be clearly advised about it. I wish it could go over until Monday.

Mr. EDWARDS. That will not affect the amendment.

Mr. KING. No; but I merely am not now assenting to its consideration.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not press his objection, because he will recall that he told me last week that if we would let it go over to Monday of this week it would be taken up. This is a matter of importance. It relates to the erection of this fine building. The question of completing the financing and completing the plans of the building is involved. I know how interested the Senator is, and I have discussed with him his views, which are appealing; but I hope that this matter may come up now and be disposed of. It is not a matter which should be permitted to drag along any further, as I see it.

I appeal to the Senator to let us take action now.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the objection I have indicated was that there was not ample time under the five-minute rule to debate this measure. I want the Senate to understand just exactly what it means—that it is opposed by the Fine Arts Commission of the District, that it is opposed by the commissioners themselves and by the Zoning Commission. It means a change of policy with respect to the buildings in the District which I think will prove exceedingly harmful. Of course the Senate is at liberty, if it wants to do so, to change that policy and to abandon the plan of having, I might say, a beautiful city here. I do not expect that we will ever have one, in view of the materialism and the mercenary spirit manifesting itself so often now; but if we do want to have a city that is worthy to be the capital, it does seem to me that we ought to consider this bill at considerable length, to determine whether we are willing to depart from the policy that has been adopted. If we can have an hour for its consideration, so that the Senators may understand it, I have no objection.

Mr. FESS. Let the bill go over.

Mr. COPELAND. I hope the Senator from Ohio will not object to giving us a little time—

Mr. FESS. I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio objects to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I should like to ask whether we are proceeding under a unanimous-consent agreement to consider only unobjected bills or whether we are proceeding regularly under Rule VIII?

Mr. FESS. Unobjected bills.

Mr. KING. Unobjected bills.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator objects to this bill?

Mr. KING. It has been objected to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Fess] has objected, and the bill will be passed over. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS] will be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

The amendment offered by Mr. EDWARDS is as follows:

Strike out all after line 6 and insert the following:

"And further provided, That buildings to be erected in square 254, bounded by Fourteenth Street, F Street, Thirteenth Street, and E Street NW., be permitted to be erected to a height not to exceed 140 feet above the F Street curb."

MARYLAND CASUALTY CO. ET AL.

The bill (S. 1361) for the relief of the Maryland Casualty Co., the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., of Baltimore, Md., and the Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the words "per cent," to strike out "unregistered," and in line 7, after "$1,000," to insert "payable to bearer," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem one 5½ per cent United States certificate of indebtedness, series B-1922, issued August 1, 1921, and maturing August 1, 1922, serial number 21492, of the denomination of $1,000, payable to bearer, and the coupon for $27.50, representing six months' interest, due August 1, 1922, in favor of the Maryland Casualty Co., the Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, and the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., of Baltimore, Md., without presentation of the said certificate or the coupon therefrom, which have been lost, stolen, or destroyed: Provided, That the said certificate of indebtedness shall not have been previously presented for payment, and that no payment shall be made hereunder for the coupon if it shall have been previously presented and paid: Provided further, That the said Maryland Casualty Co., the Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland, and the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., of Baltimore, Md., shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal and interest of said certificate of indebtedness and the interest payable thereon, in such form and with such surety or sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the lost, stolen, or destroyed certificate of indebtedness and coupon herein described.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

M. W. HUTCHINSON

The bill (S. 1650) for the relief of M. W. Hutchinson was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill is reported adversely.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Florida.

The motion to postpone indefinitely was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER subsequently said: Mr. President, I did not know the facts about Senate bill 1650 when I moved to have it indefinitely postponed. I ask for a reconsideration of that vote, so as to leave the bill on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida moves to reconsider the vote whereby Senate bill 1650 was indefinitely postponed, and leave it in its regular place on the calendar.

The motion to reconsider the indefinite postponement of the bill was agreed to.

HEIGHT OF BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that 20 minutes be given to the consideration of House bill 9398, to amend an act regulating the height of buildings in the District of Columbia, approved June 1, 1910.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, just a moment. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENBOUR] a short time ago asked unanimous consent to interject the discussion of a bill which he introduced with regard to Samoa. That took nearly 40 minutes. We can get through a lot of bills if we proceed regularly at this time. I am forced to object. I am sorry.

Mr. COPELAND. We will not get through many bills unless some consideration is given to that particular one.

Mr. BAYARD. I shall object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware objects. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

AMERICAN STEAM TUG "CHARLES RUNYON"

The bill (S. 112) for the relief of the owner of the American steam tug Charles Runyon was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Crew Transportation Corporation, owner of the American steam tug Charles Runyon, and/or the receiver of the said corporation, against the United States of America for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between said vessel and the United States ship Trafalgar on or about the 6th day of May, 1919, at or near Pier C, navy yard, Brooklyn, N. Y., may be sued for by the said owner and/or receiver in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court; and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the owner of the said American steam tug Charles Runyon, and/or receiver aforesaid, or against the owner of the said American steam tug Charles Runyon, and/or the receiver of said corporation, in favor of the United States, upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Missouri whether he has given attention to this measure?

Mr. WILLIAMS. To the extent of learning that the Secretary of the Navy approves of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 115) for the relief of the owner of the steamship Neptune was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, DISTRICT OF MONTANA

The bill (H. R. 5701) to designate the times and places of holding terms of the United States District Court for the District of Montana was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 1, line 8, after the word "Helena," to strike out down to and including the word "December," in line 3, page 2; and after the words just stricken out to insert "Butte, Great Falls, Missoula, Glasgow, and Havre at such times as may be fixed by rule of such court"; and on page 2, line 6, after the word "Glasgow," to insert "and Havre," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 92 of the Judicial Code of the United States be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 92. Montana: That the State of Montana shall constitute one judicial district, to be known as the district of Montana. Terms of the district court shall be held at Helena, Butte, Great Falls, Missoula, Glasgow, and Havre at such times as may be fixed by rule of such court: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Glasgow and Havre are furnished free of all expense to the United States. Causes, civil and criminal, may be transferred by the court or a judge thereof from any sitting place designated above to any other sitting place thus designated, when the convenience of the parties or the ends of justice would be promoted by the transfer; and any interlocutory order may be made by the court or judge thereof in either place."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1727) for the relief of the Carib Steamship Co. (Inc.) was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BRITISH STEAMSHIP "MAVISBROOK"

The bill (S. 1730) to authorize the payment of indemnity to the Government of Great Britain on account of losses sustained by the owners of the British steamship Mavisbrook as a result of a collision between it and the U. S. transport Carolinian, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Government of Great Britain out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $16,397.26, as full indemnity for the losses sustained by the owners of the British steamship Mavisbrook as a result of a collision between said steamship Mavisbrook and the U. S. transport Carolinian at or near Brest, France, on or about February 15, 1918.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALTON HARWELL

The bill (S. 3179) to extend the benefits of the employers' liability act of September 7, 1916, to Alton Harwell was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill is reported adversely.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, in view of the fact that there is an adverse report on the bill I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Delaware.

The motion to postpone indefinitely was agreed to.

EDWARD I. GALLAGHER, ADMINISTRATOR

The bill (S. 505) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Edward I. Gallagher, of New York, administrator of the estate of Charles Gallagher, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the word "hereby," to insert "authorized and"; and in line 4, after the words "directed to pay," to insert "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Edward I. Gallagher, administrator of the estate of Charles Gallagher, deceased, of New York, the sum of $23,387.03, being the amount found due by the Court of Claims for loss and destruction of his schooner Nimrod and cargo during the Civil War, while he was under military orders, within military lines, and executing military commands, as reported to Congress in Senate Document No. 56, Fifty-eighth Congress, third session, Congressional Report No. 10303, filed in Senate December 5, 1904.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there is no report on this bill from the Treasury Department. I should like to ask the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] in regard to it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD], who made the report—the report is on file—to explain the bill to the Senator if he has any definite question to ask regarding it.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I shall be glad to answer any question that the Senator may desire to propound in regard to the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The statement I made was that there is no report from the Treasury Department on the bill.

Mr. BAYARD. May I make a short statement of the history of the case?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The history of the case is stated in the statement of facts as found by the Court of Claims.

Mr. BAYARD. There were two claims originally, both of which were referred to the Court of Claims by resolution of the Senate, and those two claims were passed upon by the Court of Claims and certain amounts found, one for about $9,000, and one for some $23,000. I will not give the odd figures. In the omnibus claims bill of 1905 the smaller claim, of nine thousand and odd dollars, was reported, and was carried in the bill, but the larger claim was not reported.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me, I have no objection to the bill. I was just raising the point that there is no report from that department of the Government to which this bill would naturally be referred for recommendation. That is all.

Mr. BAYARD. There was no department to which it would have been referred if the Senator please, for this reason, that having been referred to the Court of Claims, all questions arising of departmental action or opinion would be considered while the case was before the court.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I raise no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDEBTEDNESS OF ITALY TO THE UNITED STATES

The bill (H. R. 6773) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of Italy to the United States of America was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the unfinished business and will be passed over.

ADDISON B. MCKINLEY

The bill (S. 6) for the relief of Addison B. McKinley was announced as next in order.

Mr. BAYARD. Before that bill is taken up, let me call attention to some things in it. I had the honor to file the minority views, and I would like to read those views, and the Senate can then do what it pleases. They are as follows:

The evidence in this case discloses the following unquestioned facts:

1. At the time of the accident the Government plane was being used for a purely private purpose.
2. At the time of the accident the pilot was not performing any functions for which he was engaged by the Federal Government.
3. That at the time of the accident neither the pilot nor the airplane were being used for any governmental function or purpose.
4. That at the time of the accident both the pilot and the airplane were in the performance of purely private operations.
5. A favorable report and passage of this bill would establish a precedent giving governmental approval to the use of both governmental employees and governmental properties for private use with a guaranty in case of accident of governmental compensation for damages caused by said accident. In other words, the Senate Committee on Claims would hold itself out as willing to give a favorable report for compensatory damages for any and every accident caused by the use of the services of governmental employees and governmental property in the prosecution of private operations and affairs.

I merely call the Senate's attention to that for the reason that if we pass this bill—the report is short, and I beg all Senators to read it—we would establish a precedent that the Government will pay compensation in cases of tort of any kind, personal or property tort, to anybody who is injured when Government property is being used and Government employees are performing services for private parties.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, the conditions surrounding this case are particularly appealing. This is a bill which unquestionably should be passed by the Senate.

An air mail pilot in Nevada was flying over the grave of a comrade at Reno, Nev., at the time of his funeral for the purpose of dropping flowers on the grave, having secured authority from the Government to use the plane for that purpose. While he was flying over this grave something happened to his plane, which crashed into the home of one of our well-known citizens. The plane was destroyed and the home was burned in a few minutes, with everything in it, making a complete loss to the owner. There was no insurance on the home or its contents.

The owner is a hard-working, deserving, splendid citizen. He had spent all of his money in building that home, and it had just been completed about two months. This is a particularly worthy case. I hope the Senate will pass the bill.

There is a favorable report from the Committee on Claims, and in my opinion, aside from the legal obligation of the Government, there is as strong a moral obligation as ever existed.

The owner of this home was absolutely not responsible for its destruction and our Government is responsible for it. The plane suddenly fell from the sky, destroyed the home and everything in it, and this man has not been able to collect a cent. I hope the bill will pass.

MR. KING. Mr. President, the report indicates some very strong reasons why the bill should not be passed, and in the limited time for discussion of a case which will constitute and be a precedent, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over under objection.

BATHING BEACHES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (H. R. 6556) for the establishment of artificial bathing pools or beaches in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

MR. KING. I do not think we can consider this bill in the limited time we have.

MR. COPELAND. The Senator from Utah objects. Therefore we can not proceed.

MR. KING. I did not object, but I shall now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3641) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1919, as amended, was announced as next in order.

MR. WILLIAMS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ATLANTIC & CARIBBEAN STEAM NAVIGATION CO.

The bill (S. 1726) for the relief of the Atlantic & Caribbean Steam Navigation Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 2, line 5, to strike out the words "including interest," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Atlantic & Caribbean Steam Navigation Co., owner of the American steamship Caracas, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between the said steamship Caracas and the United States patrol boat Xarifa in or near New York Harbor on the 20th day of March, 1918, may be determined in a suit to be brought by said claimant against the United States in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York sitting as a court in admiralty and acting under the rule governing such court in admiralty cases, and that said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine said suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages, and costs, if any, as shall be found due from the United States to the said Atlantic & Caribbean Steam Navigation Co. by reason of said collision, upon the same principles and under the same measures of liability as in like cases between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and upon such notice it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That such suit shall be begun within four months of the date of the approval of this act.

SEC. 2. That should the proceedings herein authorized result in a judgment or decree in favor of said claimant and against the United States, then the amount of such judgment or decree shall be paid to the said claimant or to its proctors of record out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OCEAN STEAMSHIP CO. (LTD.)

The bill (S. 2368) for the relief of Ocean Steamship Co. (Ltd.), a British corporation, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

MR. KING. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of Ocean Steamship Co. (Ltd.), a British corporation, owner of the British steamship Alcinous, against the United States for damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of a collision between the said steamship Alcinous and the United States steamship Artemis, in or near the harbor of New York, on or about December 3, 1917, may be determined in a suit to be brought by said claimant against the United States in the United States District Court for either the southern or eastern districts of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the said suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages, if any, with costs, as may be found due to said claimant from the United States by reason of said collision, upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases between private parties, and subject to the same rights of appeal and review: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: And provided further, That such suit shall be brought not later than four months after the approval of this act.

SEC. 2. That should the proceedings herein authorized result in a decree or decrees in favor of said claimant and against the United States, then the amount of said decree or decrees shall be paid to the said claimant or to its proctors of record out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHESTER A. ROTHWELL

The bill (S. 2338) authorizing the President to reappoint Chester A. Rothwell, formerly a captain of Engineers, United States Army, an officer of Engineers, United States Army, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to reappoint Chester A. Rothwell, formerly a captain of Engineers, United States Army, an officer of Engineers, United States Army, in the grade, and in the position on the promotion list, provided by the next to last paragraph of section 24a of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920: Provided, That said Chester A. Rothwell shall not by the passage of this act be entitled to any back pay or allowances of any kind: Provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall operate to increase the number of officers in the Regular Army now authorized by law.

MR. KING. I would like to ask the Senator from Connecticut whether this is one of those cases where the beneficiary was an emergency officer who separated himself from the service and is now to be reappointed?

MR. BINGHAM. I will say to the Senator that it is not one of those cases. This is the case of an officer who came into the Army during the war. He had a very fine war record in France and was recommended for the distinguished-service medal, but it was not granted to him because his rank was not sufficient to entitle him to receive it.

The Senator will remember that it was the practice of the War Department to give the distinguished-service medal only to general officers, or to colonels, and to a very few majors. I know of only one or two majors who received it. I know of no captains who got it. Captain Rothwell was considered not entitled to it because he did not have a rank high enough, although he had charge of an enormous depot in France for the engineers, and did his work so well that he was recommended for it.

He stayed in the Army after the war and continued on until last summer. He was recommended for class B by a board of officers. In accordance with the law, he protested against their recommendation and asked to be heard. A board of review was thereupon held, in accordance with the law, in the corps area in which he was then stationed. The board of review sat at San Francisco. They examined his record, they examined the recommendations of the board of officers recommending that he be placed in class B, they made investigations of his record, and came to the conclusion, as shown in the records, that the specifications charged against him were not proved, and recommended that he be retained in the service.

The papers then came back to Washington, and a board of general officers again overruled the board of review and ordered him out of the service. I have in my hand, and if the Senator desires, I shall be glad to read, a letter from Gen. William H. Johnston, who was his last commanding officer, and also a letter from the commanding officer of his regiment, both of whom recommended that he be kept in the service. This is one of those cases in which I feel, after examining the record, and the committee felt, that an injustice was done to a worthy officer, and I hope the Senator will not offer an objection.

MR. KING. Is the report of the committee unanimous?

MR. BINGHAM. It is.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3027) making eligible for retirement under certain conditions officers and former officers of the Army of the United States other than officers of the Regular Army who incurred physical disability in line of duty while in the service of the United States during the World War was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS IN HAWAII

The bill (S. 3463) to extend the time for the exchange of Government-owned lands for privately owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIS. I should like to have an explanation of the bill by some member of the Committee on Military Affairs. I notice the chairman of the committee is not here. Can any member of the committee give us any information concerning it?

Mr. BINGHAM. What is the bill?

Mr. WILLIS. It is Senate bill 3463, relating to an exchange of Government-owned lands for privately owned lands in Hawaii. I suggest that it be temporarily passed over, until the Senator can look into it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of the chairman of the committee the bill will be passed over.

Mr. BINGHAM subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask that we may return to Senate bill 3463, which was passed over temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of Congress approved January 31, 1922, authorizing the President to exchange certain Government-owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii, or any interest therein, for privately owned lands or lands owned by the Territory of Hawaii, which were extended by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1925, are hereby further extended to January 31, 1929.

Mr. BINGHAM. This is a bill to extend the time of an act formerly passed by Congress, the reason for the delay being that the private parties with whom the Government of the United States desire to make this exchange of land were not able to give the United States proper title. They are now endeavoring to get that title by legal process, and the bill will permit them to have time to get the title, so that when the exchange takes place, as contemplated by the act, the United States may have good title in the property.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand that the Attorney General found some defect in the title, and it was necessary to have an abstract of title made, and they could not make the abstract and submit the matter for examination until after the time fixed by Congress had elapsed. This is simply to afford an opportunity to get that abstract.

Mr. WILLIS. I have no objection to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL AND RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 172) authorizing the Committee on the Library of the Senate to have prepared a manuscript on the works of art and the artists of the United States Capitol was announced as next in order.

Mr. COPELAND. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 4835) to remove the charge of desertion from the records of the War Department standing against William J. Dunlap was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I would like to have an explanation of that bill. Let it be temporarily laid aside, and we can recur to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LAND ENTRIES IN ARIZONA

The bill (H. R. 5210) extending the provisions of an act for the relief of settlers and entrymen on Baca Float No. 3, in the State of Arizona, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time within which to make selections and entries under the provisions of the act of July 5, 1921 (42 Stat. L. p. 107), entitled "An act for the relief of settlers and entrymen on Baca Float No. 3, in the State of Arizona," is hereby extended for a period of two years from the approval of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OFFICES OF RECORDER OF DEEDS AND REGISTER OF WILLS

The bill (H. R. 9685) providing for expenses of the offices of recorder of deeds and register of wills of the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the word "paid," to insert the words "at least," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after July 1, 1927, all of the fees and emoluments of the offices of recorder of deeds and register of wills of the District of Columbia shall be paid at least weekly to the collector of taxes for the District of Columbia for deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the District of Columbia: Provided, That such of the undeposited fees and emoluments arising out of the fiscal year 1927 and prior fiscal years as may be necessary for the payment of outstanding and unpaid obligations for those fiscal years may be retained for that purpose.

Sec. 2. The annual estimates of appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1928 and succeeding fiscal years shall include estimates of appropriations for the operation and maintenance of such offices. And appropriations are hereby authorized for a suitable record building for the office of the recorder of deeds, and for personal services, rentals, office equipment, office supplies, and such other expenditures as are essential for the efficient maintenance and conduct of such offices.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ESTATE OF CHARLES LE ROY, DECEASED

The bill (S. 3112) for the relief of the estate of Charles Le Roy, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the legal representatives of Charles Le Roy the sum of $436.48, said sum being the amount due by readjustment of his accounts as postmaster at Natchitoches, La., under existing law, as reported by the Auditor for the Post Office Department in Senate Document No. 627, Sixtieth Congress, second session, and a sum sufficient for said purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. KING. I would like to have an explanation of this bill. There is no report accompanying it.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, it is to allow Charles Le Roy credit on his accounts as postmaster at Natchitoches, La., where he was formerly postmaster. An audit of his account found that this amount, $436.48, was due him after the audit by the Post Office Department. The Post Office Department audit has found that he was entitled to this amount on a settlement, and the bill merely provides an appropriation to him of the amount.

Mr. KING. Had he overpaid?

Mr. HARRELD. He had overpaid, and is entitled to this amount, according to the audit of the Post Office Department itself. Mr. Le Roy afterwards became a citizen of my State, but this occurred when he was postmaster at Natchitoches, La.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 43) authorizing the President to issue an appropriate commission and honorable discharge to Joseph B. Maccabe was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I would like to have an explanation of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The chairman of the committee is not present, nor is the Senator who reported the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. KING. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7669) to provide home care for dependent children was announced as next in order.

Mr. CAPPER. The senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], who has an amendment to this bill, known as the mothers' aid bill, is unavoidably absent this afternoon, and therefore I will ask that it may go over. I do hope, however, that we shall have an opportunity at an early date to take action on the measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

KIOWA, COMANCHE, AND APACHE INDIAN TRUST FUND

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 71) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to establish a trust fund for the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians in Oklahoma and making provision for the same was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The joint resolution had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 2, line 9, after the word "taxes," to insert the words "upon such tribal funds"; on page 2, line 23, to strike out the words "that the" and insert the word "The," and in line 24 to strike out the words "trust fund hereby created and appropriated and to prescribe for that purpose the necessary rules and regulations which, so far as consistent with the purpose of this act, shall be subject to the requirements of existing law" and to insert in lieu thereof "moneys which are hereby appropriated, subject to the requirements of existing law, and to prescribe needful rules and regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this act," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to set aside and administer as a trust fund for the benefit of the enrolled members of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes of Indians and their unallotted children in Oklahoma that part of any moneys received or to be received under Public Act No. 509, Sixty-seventh Congress, and any act thereby adopted or made applicable, derived from the south half of Red River in Oklahoma which inures to the Federal Government by virtue of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the suit of the State of Oklahoma v. the State of Texas, which decision was rendered May 1, 1922, being the entire amount received from this source, except such part as may have been awarded to successful claimants under said Public Act No. 509, and except 37½ per cent of the royalties derived from such source, which shall be paid to the State of Oklahoma in lieu of all State and local taxes upon said tribal funds and shall be expended by the State in the same manner as if received under section 35 of Public Act No. 146, Sixty-sixth Congress, said moneys being derived from that portion of the south half of Red River in Oklahoma which was included or intended to be included in the reservation set apart for the Kiowas and Comanches under a treaty between the United States and the said tribes on October 18, 1865, and which was through inadvertence or otherwise left out of the reservation set apart for said Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Tribes, entered into on October 21, 1867, and which has since been adjudged to be the property of the United States by the Supreme Court of the United States.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to administer and disburse the moneys which are hereby appropriated, subject to the requirements of existing law, and to prescribe needful rules and regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OSAGE INDIANS IN OKLAHOMA

The bill (S. 2709) to amend section 1 of the act of Congress of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. L. p. 1249), entitled "An act to amend section 3 of the act of Congress of June 28, 1906, entitled 'An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma, and for other purposes,'" was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. L. p. 1249), entitled "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma, and for other purposes," be amended by adding after the last line of said section 1 the following:

"Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may reduce the area to be offered annually hereunder, or suspend the offer of leases for not exceeding two years at any one time when, in his opinion, an overproduction of oil, or inadequate prices therefor, make such extension or suspension desirable in the interests of the Osage Nation."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS IN NEW MEXICO

The bill (S. 2238) to amend an act approved June 20, 1910, entitled "An act to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and to enable the people of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States" was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, a bill covering this identical legislation was introduced simultaneously in the House and in the Senate. The House has passed the bill with two or three amendments to which I should like to call the attention of the Senate. The bill introduced in the Senate was reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys covering the same matters. I therefore ask unanimous consent that House bill 4007, which passed the House and which had been referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, may be recalled from that committee and substituted for calendar No. 498, Senate bill 2238.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 4007.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4007) to amend an act approved June 20, 1910, entitled "An act to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and to enable the people of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. In the consideration of the House bill I desire to propose two or three amendments and will state what they are. The purpose of the bill was to enable the State of New Mexico to exchange certain lands within the forest reserves of that State for Government lands either within or without a national forest. The House struck out the provision which would enable an exchange for lands outside of a national forest. The bill itself is only permissive. It authorizes the Government in its discretion to make these exchanges of the State-owned lands in national forests for lands of equal value either within or without the national forests, the idea being to consolidate the State holdings.

The special purpose in the legislation, or one of the purposes which appealed to me most strongly, was to get title in the Government to all of the lands within the national forests. I think the National Government ought to own those lands. It may be that they could agree upon an exchange of lands outside of the national forests for the State-owned lands within the national forests. Therefore, in order to accomplish that purpose, I move to insert an amendment in the bill as it came from the House, on page 2, line 4, after the word "forests" the words "or other Government," so that the exchange may be made for ungranted national forests or other Government land belonging to the United States. The whole matter is merely permissive. There can be no exchange unless there is an agreement between the States and the officials of the Government. I move, on page 2, in line 24, after the word "forest," to insert the words "or other Government."

Mr. WILLIAMS. As the House bill is not paged and lined the same as the Senate bill we can not follow the amendment proposed by the Senator.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have a copy of the bill which was furnished me by the clerks at the desk.

Mr. BRATTON. If the Senator will allow me, the amendment which my colleague has offered is found on page 2, at line 25, of the Senate bill, after the word "forest," where he proposes to insert the words "or other Government."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. WILLIS. Before a vote is had on the amendment I desire to call the attention of the Senators from New Mexico to the fact that the Secretary of the Interior disapproves the bill in the following language, found on page 3 of the committee report:

No necessity is apparent for the legislation proposed, and it is hereby recommended that the bill be not enacted. No objection will be interposed, however, to the enactment of legislation, if deemed necessary, amending the New Mexico enabling act and authorizing amendment of the State's constitution so as to permit consummation on the part of the State of exchanges of land under the provisions or existing Federal statutes.

That is the recommendation of Secretary Work, the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Secretary of Agriculture strongly recommends the passage of the bill. If the Senator from Ohio will permit me, I should like to state that the bill was prepared by the representatives of the State of New Mexico in collaboration with the representatives of the Department of Agriculture. The Department of Agriculture sees the necessity for the passage of the bill. The Department of the Interior did object to the bill on grounds which were covered by the House amendment. The House amended the bill to conform to the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior. I have just stated wherein the House modified the bill as originally agreed upon between the representatives of the State of New Mexico and the Department of Agriculture. The Department of Agriculture recommends the passage of the bill, and inasmuch as additional provisions which I seek by the amendment can not go into effect until there is an agreement, it seems to me that it can possibly do no harm to give to the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture the right to make exchange of lands outside of the forest reserves for State lands within the forest reserves. That is why I offered the amendment. I am glad the Senator from Ohio called attention to the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, but I submit that it can possibly do no harm to enable the parties to make every such exchange of lands if the provision is inserted. Therefore I hope the Senate will agree to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from New Mexico.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. As the bill was originally introduced and as recommended to the Senate by the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys it contained a provision which was stricken out in the House. That provision which was stricken out was one which authorized the President to withdraw temporarily lands under the act of June 25, 1910, anticipating that an exchange may be considered desirable. It simply gives the President the authority to do something. Of course, he would not exercise it except in a proper case, and therefore I move, after line 4, on page 3, at the end of the paragraph, that there be inserted another paragraph, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, after line 4, insert the following:

That authority is hereby vested in the President temporarily to withdraw from disposition under the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L. p. 847), as amended by the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. L. p. 497), lands proposed for selection by the State under the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. On page 3, line 21, after the word "forest," I move to amend by inserting the words "or other Government." That is simply including the same amendment which I spoke about a while ago, putting it into another place so as to carry out the intent of the act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 21, after the word "forest" insert the words "or other Government."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I move that Senate bill 2238 be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM J. DUNLAP

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Calendar No. 489, the bill (H. R. 4835) to remove the charge of desertion from the records of the War Department standing against William J. Dunlap.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. The bill is a House bill and has been reported favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs without amendment. Dunlap enlisted during the Spanish-American War and served three years. Immediately after the expiration of his first enlistment he again enlisted, and a few days after enlistment he left camp. He was found at an asylum at Council Bluffs, Iowa, and it was ascertained that he was mentally deranged. Orders were in due course issued asking that the soldier be not marked as a deserter but that he be relieved from further military duty because of his mental incapacity to discharge that duty.

Mr. KING. Was it a mental incapacity which arose during his service and before the desertion?

Mr. GEORGE. He served one full period of three years, enlisting in 1898 during the Spanish-American War, and immediately after the expiration of his first period of enlistment he again enlisted and shortly after his second period of enlistment had begun this mental derangement was discovered.

Mr. KING. I have no objection if it is clear that the mental incapacity arose while he was in the service so that when he did desert it was while he was suffering from the mental incapacity.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, yes; that is quite clear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, William J. Dunlap, formerly a member of Company F, Tenth Regiment United States Infantry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on May 26, 1902: Provided, That no back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH B. MACCABE

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, during my temporary absence from the Senate, Calendar No. 493, the bill (S. 43) authorizing the President to issue an appropriate commission and honorable discharge to Joseph B. Maccabe, was temporarily passed over. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] desired an explanation of the bill. I ask unanimous consent that we may consider the bill at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue an appropriate commission and honorable discharge to Joseph B. Maccabe, who performed the services of a commissioned officer of the United States Army from May 1, 1918, to November 1, 1921, under the promise of such commission from proper authority, but which commission was not issued by reason of unavoidable delay, the signing of the armistice, the cessation of hostilities, and orders issued in consequence thereof.

Mr. BINGHAM. The purpose of the bill is clearly stated in a letter from Secretary Weeks, as follows:

It appears, therefore, that the purpose of the bill is not to single out and commission an individual from a class of persons who failed to receive commissions, but to authorize his inclusion in the number of those who received commissions; and this removes the objection heretofore made to the passage of a bill for the individual benefit of Joseph B. Maccabe.

Secretary Weeks had no objection and the present Secretary of War has no objection. There is a unanimous report from the committee. Maccabe was one of a class of persons who failed to receive his commission. He now desires to receive his commission and discharge, and I trust there will be no objection to the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEASING OF LAND FOR MINING PURPOSES

The bill (H. R. 7752) to authorize the leasing for mining purposes of land reserved for Indian agency and school purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARRELD]. I wonder whether this is one of the bills to which such earnest objection has been made? I know nothing of the details, but the Senator has received, as no doubt every Senator has, some circulars protesting against several of these bills pending on the calendar.

Mr. HARRELD. I do not think it applies to this bill. This measure simply applies to lands which have been set apart for agency and school purposes which it since has become unnecessary for them to use. It is a question of giving oil or gas leases on such lands.

Mr. WILLIS. That is what these circulars refer to. I know nothing about the circulars, whether or not they are well founded in fact, but I know there are vigorous protests, and I have received several of them.

Mr. HARRELD. In this case it is provided that the lands may be leased after 30 days' notice.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I can assure the Senator from Ohio that this is not the bill to which he refers. The bill to which the Senator from Ohio refers is the bill which has to do with leasing on Executive-order reservations, which has not as yet been reported by the committee.

Mr. HARRELD. This bill only applies to small tracts here and there over the country where the lands have been abandoned, formerly having been used for agency and school purposes.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, considered the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to lease at public auction upon not less than 30 days' public notice for mining purposes land on any Indian reservation reserved for Indian agency or school purposes, in accordance with existing law applicable to other lands in such reservation, and the proceeds arising therefrom shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians for whose benefit the lands are reserved subject to appropriation by Congress for educational work among the Indians or in paying expenses of administration of agencies, and provides that a royalty of at least one-eighth shall be reserved in all leases.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF POTTAWATOMIE INDIANS IN OKLAHOMA

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1963) authorizing the Citizen Band of Pottawatomie Indians in Oklahoma to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the Court of Claims with right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party as in other cases, notwithstanding the lapse of time or statutes of limitation, to hear, examine, and adjudicate and render judgment in any and all legal and equitable claims arising under or growing out of the treaty of February 27, 1867 (15 Stat. L. p. 531), or arising under or growing out of any subsequent act of Congress in relation to Indian affairs which said Citizen Band of Pottawatomie Indians of Oklahoma may have against the United States, which claims have not heretofore been determined and adjudicated by the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court of the United States.

SEC. 2. Any and all claims against the United States within the purview of this act shall be forever barred unless suit or suits be instituted or petition filed as herein provided in the Court of Claims within five years from the date of the approval of this act, and such suit or suits shall make the Citizen Band of Pottawatomie Indians of Oklahoma party plaintiff and the United States party defendant. The petition shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed to prosecute such claim or claims under contract with the said Citizen Band of Pottawatomie Indians approved in accordance with existing law; and said contract shall be executed in their behalf by a committee or committees to be selected by said Citizen Band of Pottawatomie Indians. Official letters, papers, documents, and records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of said Citizen Band of Pottawatomie Indians to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as they may require in the prosecution of any suit or suits instituted under this act.

SEC. 3. In said suit or suits the court shall also hear, examine, consider, and adjudicate any claims which the United States may have against the said Citizen Band of Pottawatomie Indians, but any payment or payments which may have been made by the United States upon any such claim shall not operate as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as a set-off in such suit or suits, as may any gratuities paid to or expended for said Indians subsequent to February 27, 1867.

SEC. 4. The court shall join any other tribe or band of Indians that may be necessary to a final determination of any suit brought under this act. Upon the final determination of such suit or cause of action, the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to decree the fees to be paid to the attorney or attorneys, not to exceed 10 per cent of the amount of the judgment, if any, recovered in such cause, and in no event to exceed the sum of $25,000, together with all necessary and proper expenses incurred in preparation and prosecution of the suit, to be paid out of any judgment that may be recovered, and the balance of such judgment shall be placed in the United States Treasury to the credit of the Indians entitled thereto, where it shall draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum or be paid direct to the Indians in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

MR. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if these jurisdictional bills are all of the same character and contain the same restrictions and limitations and provisions for the protection of the Government?

MR. HARRELD. This bill is drawn in accordance with the wishes of the Department of the Interior, and the amendment was adopted by the committee in accordance with the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior, in order to make it conform with the original bill which was adopted as a model, namely, the bill in regard to the Cherokees. There are none of the objectionable features in this bill of which complaint has been made in some cases. There gradually crops out in some of these jurisdictional bills additional provisions which are not contained in the first bills that were adopted, but I do not think this is one of them. I do not think there are any objectionable features in this bill at all.

MR. KING. The reason I made the inquiry is this: I was told a few days ago that bills which we have passed conferring jurisdiction might involve a draft upon the Treasury of the United States of between $50,000,000 and $100,000,000.

MR. HARRELD. I do not think that is true, except, perhaps, in one or two instances there might be some draft on the Treasury of the United States; but I do not think that any of these bills would involve any considerable draft upon the United States Treasury, although as to some it might be pretty heavy. However, we ought to be willing to let our own courts pass on the question.

MR. KING. The Senator knows my position, because I think I made the first drive to get these bills through, so that the Indians would have a fair chance to have their rights determined. I felt that heretofore they were obstructed and that the Indians were not properly treated. All that I was interested in was that ample protection be given to the Government.

MR. HARRELD. There has been some objection to some of these bills on that score, but I do not think it applies to the bill which we have before us at this time.

MR. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

MR. HARRELD. Yes.

MR. LENROOT. Does this bill have the effect that some others do, that any settlement that may have been made will be considered reopened and the amount paid by the Government shall be merely an offset? If so, what has the Senator to say about that as a general rule, that the settlements which have been made shall be reopened?

MR. HARRELD. That is not the policy of the committee as to any of these bills.

MR. LENROOT. I noticed that one of the bills did have just that kind of a provision in it.

MR. HARRELD. Unless there is manifest mistake or fraud, I would not think it would be wise. If any provision of that sort is in any of these bills, it got by without my notice, because I did not intend to have any such provision contained in the bills.

MR. LENROOT. Is the Senator certain it is not in this bill?

MR. HARRELD. I do not think it is, although I have not read the bill for several days; but if there is such a provision in the bill, it was not intended to be in it.

MR. LENROOT. I quite agree that we have, for instance, legislated in violation of some of our Indian treaties, and I think the Indians ought to have an opportunity in such cases to go into the courts.

MR. HARRELD. At least to find out whether their property rights have been endangered.

MR. LENROOT. But there are cases where full and complete settlement has been made, and under the terms of one of these bills that I happened to read we practically set aside the settlement and merely direct the amount paid by the United States to be used as an offset.

MR. HARRELD. The policy of the committee on that point, I will say, is that if a treaty obligation was afterwards changed by the enactment of a statute, the enactment of the statute is a conclusion of the matter, unless it affected some vested property right under a treaty. Then in that case we sought to preserve the right to recover for the wrong done to the vested property right by the act of Congress; but not for any other purpose; and if any bill has passed here with a provision as broad as the one the Senator suggests, it ought to have been corrected, for it was not the intention that such a provision should be contained in the bill.

MR. LENROOT. I will look into the matter.

MR. HARRELD. It was not the intention of the committee to go that far.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLEAKE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOTS IN BOWDOIN, MONT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3268) authorizing repayment of excess amounts paid by purchasers of certain lots in the town site of Bowdoin, Mont., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the difference between the amounts paid by purchasers of the lots in the town site of Bowdoin, Mont., and the price fixed as result of reappraisal by the Secretary of the Interior of May 11, 1925, in all cases whether patents had or had not issued at the time of the reappraisal of the lots: Provided, That the purchasers or their legal representatives apply for repayment of such amounts within two years from the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. Upon receipt of the certificate from the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to make payment to such purchasers out of the fund known as the reclamation fund, created by the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. 388).

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF GENERAL LEASING ACT

The bill (S. 2339) to amend section 27 of the general leasing act approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. L. p. 437), was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 7372) to amend section 27 of the general leasing act approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. L. p. 437), and I submit a report (No. 567) thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be received.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Having reported the House bill I ask that it may be submitted for the Senate bill on the calendar, as they are in identical terms, and I ask that the House bill may be put on its passage.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I happen to know that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] is engaged in committee at the present time. I should like to inquire whether he knows about the substitution of the House bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have reported the House bill from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, of which I am a member, and have done so at the request of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD].

Mr. BRUCE. I see the Senate bill was introduced by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is quite true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri has stated that he is submitting the report on the House bill on behalf of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. BRUCE. Very well, then, I have no objection. I could not hear the Senator's statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to consideration of the House bill reported by the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this is a very important bill, involving leasing upon the public domain of coal lands and various other mineral lands. It seems to me it is so important that under the five-minute rule we may not properly consider it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not familiar with the terms of the bill myself. I know it has the approval of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. KING. The Department of the Interior is always glad to extend its jurisdiction of the public domain and to increase its power with respect to leasing. I ask that the bill may go over for the moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, is there any objection to the substitution being made of the House bill for the Senate bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill on the calendar. Does the Senator from Missouri desire to make any disposition of the Senate bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Objection having been made, I presume it goes over.

Mr. WILLIS. I move that the Senate bill may be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio that Senate bill 2339 be indefinitely postponed, House bill 7372 having been substituted for it on the calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

SCHOOL LANDS IN SUN RIVER PROJECT, MONTANA

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 187) making a grant of land for school purposes, Fort Shaw division, Sun River project, Montana. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue patent conveying lots 14 and 15, section 2, and lots 11 and 12, section 11, township 20 north, range 2 west, containing 30.76 acres, to school district No. 82, Cascade County, State of Montana, for school purposes: Provided, That this grant is made upon the payment of $1.25 per acre: Provided further, That said patent shall be issued upon the express condition that the said school district shall use said tract of land for public school purposes: Provided further, That whenever said land shall cease to be used by said school district for school purposes or attempted to be sold or conveyed, then, and in that event, title to such land and the whole thereof shall revert to the United States: Provided further, That such patent shall contain a reservation to the United States of all gas, oil, coal, and other mineral deposits as may be found in such land and the right to the use of the land for extracting and removing the same.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRANT OF LAND IN SAN JUAN COUNTY, WASH.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8646) providing for a grant of land to the county of San Juan, in the State of Washington, for recreational and public-park purposes, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the title and fee to lots 3 and 4 of section 2 in township 35 north, range 2 west, Willamette meridian, in San Juan County, in the State of Washington, being situate within an abandoned military reservation on Lopez Island in said county, said lots containing 63.25 acres, be, and the same are hereby, granted, on the payment to the United States of $1.25 per acre subject to the condition and reversion hereinafter provided for, to the said county for recreational and public-park purposes: Provided, That if said lands shall not be used for the purposes hereinabove mentioned, the same of such part thereof not used shall revert to the United States: And provided further, That lot 3 shall be subject to the right of way for county roads granted to the county authorities of San Juan County, State of Washington, by the act of Congress of February 21, 1925 (43 Stat. p. 957): And provided further, That there shall be reserved to the United States all gas, oil, coal, or other mineral deposits found at any time in the said lands and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXCHANGE OF FOREST LANDS IN NEW MEXICO AND ARIZONA

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6355) providing for the acquirement by the United States of privately owned lands in San Miguel, Mora, Taos, and Colfax Counties, N. Mex., within the Mora grant, and adjoining one or more national forests, by exchanging therefor lands or timber within the exterior boundaries of any national forest situated within the State of New Mexico or the State of Arizona, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized in his discretion to accept on behalf of the United States title to all or any part of privately owned lands, situated within the Mora grant, as described in the patent issued by the United States, located in the counties of San Miguel, Mora, Taos, and Colfax, in the State of New Mexico, and adjoining one or more national forests, if in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture public interests will be benefited thereby, and the lands are chiefly valuable for national forest purposes, and in exchange therefor to patent not to exceed an equal value of national forest land in that State or the State of Arizona, or the Secretary of Agriculture may authorize grantor to cut and remove an equal value of timber within the national forests of the State of New Mexico or of the State of Arizona, the value in each case to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and acceptable to the grantor as a fair compensation. Timber given in exchange shall be cut and removed under the laws and regulations relating to the national forests, and under the direction and supervision and in accordance with the requirements of the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided, That the consent and approval of the Governor of Arizona shall have first been secured before any timber is given in exchange in the State of Arizona under this act.

SEC. 2. Lands offered for exchange hereunder and not covered by public land surveys or identified by surveys of the United States shall be identified by metes and bounds surveys, and that such surveys and the plats and field notes thereof may be made by employees of the United States Forest Service and approved by the United States Surveyor General.

SEC. 3. Any lands conveyed to the United States under the provisions of this act shall, upon acceptance of the conveyance thereof, become and be a part of the Carson National Forest or of the Santa Fe National Forest, as the Secretary of Agriculture may determine.

SEC. 4. Before any such exchange is effected notice of the contemplated exchange reciting the lands involved shall be published once each week for four successive weeks in some newspaper of general circulation in the county or counties in which may be situated the lands to be accepted, and in some like newspaper published in any county in which may be situated any lands or timber to be given in such exchange.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF WILLIAM FRIES, DECEASED

The bill (H. R. 902) for the relief of the estate of William Fries, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I should like to know what that bill is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was reported by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MEANS], who is absent on account of illness.

Mr. BRUCE. I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to have the bill passed over?

Mr. BRUCE. I ask that that disposition of the bill may be made for the time being.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE, EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

The bill (S. 1642) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the President to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional district judge for the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, who shall reside in such district.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF OGDEN, UTAH, WATER SUPPLY

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 675) granting certain lands to the city of Ogden, Utah, to protect the watershed of the water-supply system of said city. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of this bill, reserving the right to object.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the people of the city of Ogden, as in other cities in the West where their water comes from the mountains, are seeking to protect the watershed of their water supply. The Government of the United States is attempting to aid most of those cities in protecting the watersheds and it grants them land upon their paying $1.25 an acre, although much of the land is not worth 25 cents an acre.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it seems to me the explanation is entirely sufficient and justifies the Senate in passing the bill. It has to do with the welfare and health of the people of the city of Ogden and we should certainly give them relief.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments were, in section 1, page 1, at the beginning of line 8, to strike out "ands" and insert "lands"; on page 2, line 6, after the word "southeast," to strike out "quarter" and insert "quarter"; on page 3, line 16, after the word "southeast," to strike out "quarter," and insert "quarter"; on page 4, line 14, after the word "north," to strike out "half" and insert "half"; on page 7, at the beginning of line 9, to strike out "quarter," and insert "quarter"; in same line, after the last amendment, to strike out "southwest" and insert "southeast"; in the same line, after the last amendment, to strike out "quarter" and insert "quarter"; in line 10, after the word "southwest," strike out "quarter," and insert "quarter," so as to make the section read:

That upon the payment of $1.25 per acre there is hereby granted to the city of Ogden, Utah, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to issue patent to said grantee for certain public lands in Utah for the protection of the watershed furnishing the water for said city, the lands being described as follows:

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator from Utah how many acres of land are involved in this bill?

Mr. KING. I will say to the Senator I have not the slightest idea of the aggregate area, but probably from 1,600 to 1,800 acres.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE FOR WESTERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

The bill (S. 1490) to provide for the appointment of an additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Western District of New York, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment on line 3, after the words "United States," to strike out "shall" and insert "is hereby authorized to," so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Western District of New York, who shall reside in said district and who shall possess the same powers, perform the same duties, and receive the same compensation as the present district judge of said district; and that the official residence of said judges shall not be in the same or adjoining counties.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COPELAND subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask to recur to Order of Business No. 509, being Senate bill 1490.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask to have the bill again read.

The Chief Clerk again read the bill.

Mr. KING. That provision in regard to residence is a remarkable one.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I think that bill should go over until my colleague [Mr. WADSWORTH] is here.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator's colleague introduced it.

Mr. COPELAND. That may be, but I should like to hear what my colleague has to say about the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. He has been pressing me for the last two months to get the bill reported. However, if the Senator from New York will take the responsibility of not having the bill passed at all—

Mr. COPELAND. I assume the responsibility, Mr. President, and I should like to have the bill go over.

Mr. CUMMINS. What has been done with it?

Mr. COPELAND. I move to reconsider the votes whereby the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, it seems to me that the senior Senator from New York ought to have an opportunity to say something about that. This bill was passed. Now, there is a motion to reconsider the action upon it. If I had a bill here and I happened to be absent from the Senate Chamber when a situation of this kind arose, I do not think the Senate would be treating me just right if it reconsidered it in my absence.

Mr. FLETCHER. The senior Senator from New York can be heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from New York moves to reconsider the votes whereby the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed, so as to leave it on the calendar.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am not going to resist the request of the Senator from New York to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed, but of course I shall feel myself relieved of any obligation to take up the bill again.

Mr. COPELAND. I quite understand the attitude of the Senator from Iowa, but the bill will still be on the calendar. It will have its position here.

Mr. CUMMINS. Surely.

Mr. COPELAND. It undoubtedly will be reached the next time the calendar is called, and I absolve the Senator from Iowa from all responsibility.

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well; I shall make no objection.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will not the Senator from New York state some reason why in his judgment the bill ought not to pass?

Mr. COPELAND. The reason that I will state now is because the bill has not been called to my attention. I am not aware of the need of western New York for this judgeship, and before I pass upon it I want to know the details, since it involves my own State.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, why does not the Senator simply enter a motion to reconsider and then it can be taken up later on?

Mr. COPELAND. I understand that the motion to reconsider the bill has already been agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. Oh, no, Mr. President; that is not correct.

Mr. BRUCE. I am sure that is not the fact. I certainly interposed my objection before any action of that kind was taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the motion of the junior Senator from New York to reconsider the votes whereby the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think it is rather extraordinary—and I say that with all good feeling toward my friend the Senator from Maryland—that any objection should be made to a request to reconsider a bill of this character under the circumstances.

We pass these bills here hurriedly. A Senator may step out of the Chamber for a moment and three or four bills may be passed before he returns; or he may step into the cloak room; or he may be examining one bill, and we may pass another. Then, as soon as his attention is challenged to it, it seems to me extraordinary to say that he may not move to reconsider it. The motion ought automatically to effectuate the result and put the bill back in status quo.

It seems to me that unanimous consent ought to be given to the Senator from New York to have the bill reconsidered.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Utah understands that I make no objection.

Mr. KING. I understand that.

Mr. BRUCE. But, Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Iowa to say that the senior Senator from New York is very deeply interested in this bill and has spoken to him about it frequently. Now the bill has been passed; and I think the senior Senator from New York is entitled to reap whatever benefit is to be reaped from the fact that it has been actually passed.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the junior Senator from New York says he knew nothing about the bill.

Mr. BRUCE. But he ought to be apprised. Here is a motion to reconsider. It seems to me the motion ought to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], and I do not believe he would resist this motion if the junior Senator from New York, his colleague, should say that he had never been apprised of the bill, that he knew nothing about it, that it had never been called to his attention, and that it was passed without his knowledge. It seems to me this reconsideration ought to be had by unanimous consent. No Senator ought to object.

Mr. BRUCE. We all know the senior Senator from New York, who is about as fair-minded and well-balanced a man as there is in this body; and I know perfectly well that if any reasonable appeal is made to him about this bill, he will acquiesce in it. I think we all agree to that.

Mr. OVERMAN. The senior Senator from New York would agree to this course, Mr. President.

Mr. BRUCE. But when this motion for reconsideration is made it certainly does not seem to me that it ought to be acted on in his absence, until we have an opportunity to see how he feels about it and what he thinks about it.

Mr. OVERMAN. The motion to reconsider does not cause the bill any prejudice. It goes on the calendar and takes the same position it had before.

Mr. BRUCE. I know that; but it should not be put back on the calendar after it has been passed without the Senator having an opportunity to say something about the matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. Question!

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] will withdraw his objection. He will remember that we are on an unobjected calendar; that the slightest objection of any sort causes a bill to go over; and if, in the excitement of the moment and the confusion of passing bills, the junior Senator from New York did not observe that this bill in which he is interested was being passed, surely the Senator from Maryland has no objection to his having it reconsidered.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, my only excuse for interfering here, although I am not a member of the Judiciary Committee, is that I have had some practice in the western district of New York, and I know how very congested the Federal court there is.

I want to say at the beginning that I agree entirely with the position taken by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. I agree that the junior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] is entitled to stop this bill under the conditions, if he wishes to do so, in order to investigate. All I wanted to point out, however, was that, if the bill goes back on the calendar after reconsideration, it will be a practical impossibility to secure its passage at this session in time to have the appointment and confirmation of the judge. It means the postponement for nearly a year of the relief which that district needs; and I want to ask the Senator from New York if he will not adopt the suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio to enter his motion now for a reconsideration? That would prevent the bill from going any further; and I will go further than that myself and say that if he will do that I expect to vote in favor of his motion to reconsider, provided, on investigation, he finds that, in his judgment, this bill ought not to pass. Furthermore, if the Senator from New York insists on making his motion now, I will vote in favor of it. I think the junior Senator from New York has a right to have this bill held up until he can look into it. All that I am doing is appealing to him to hold it up in such a fashion that, if he finds it is all right, the bill can be passed without delay and go to the House.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, why does the Senator say we can not pass this bill? There are several bills of this kind on the calendar. I am on the Judiciary Committee, and I am in favor of this bill. We can pass them. A similar bill, I think, is pending in the House of Representatives. We can get the bill through in very short order. There is no objection to it. We all agree to it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. If that is so, then I do not care what is done about it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it makes no difference; the Senator from New York himself can ask unanimous consent to take it up any day. There need not be any delay.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Then I think he is entitled to stop it now.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, my friend from Pennsylvania need not be concerned. If, after due consideration and explanation of this matter, I am convinced that the bill is a proper bill, of course I shall be very glad myself to ask that it be brought up. We are bound to have calendar days repeatedly during the next week, I hope, in order that the calendar may be cleared; and I do not think this matter will be delayed in any serious way. I do not think there will be such a delay as to interfere with the administration of justice in the western district of New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. BRUCE subsequently said: Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. I should like to ask, for my information, whether a motion for reconsideration can be made by any Member of this body who did not vote against the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No yea-and-nay vote of the Senate was taken, and therefore the motion to reconsider was in order.

CHANGE IN EASTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT IN ARKANSAS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6730) to detach Fulton County from the Jonesboro division of the eastern judicial district of the State of Arkansas and attach the same to the Batesville division of the eastern judicial district of said State, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment on line 7, after the word "State," to insert the words: "Provided, That this shall not affect suits now pending," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That Fulton County, of the Jonesboro division of the eastern district of the State of Arkansas, be, and the same is hereby, detached from the Jonesboro division and attached to and made a part of the Batesville division of the eastern district of said State: Provided, That this shall not affect suits now pending.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE, DISTRICT OF CONNECTICUT

The bill (S. 227) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the district of Connecticut was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "authorized," to strike out "and directed"; and in line 8, after the words "district judges and," to insert "who," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint an additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the District of Connecticut whose compensation, duties, and powers shall be the same as now provided by law for other district judges and who shall reside within the said district of Connecticut.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect upon its approval by the President.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question about this bill. There is no objection to the bill, is there? There is a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is a unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary, after a very careful examination of the situation.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the Judiciary Committee a question? I see a number of bills pending here recommending additional judges in various districts. I have pending a bill of a similar character, on which I have attempted to be heard by the committee. So far I have not been able to have that done. May I ask the chairman when he purposes to investigate the other bills that are pending, and if Senators will be heard when they are investigated?

Mr. CUMMINS. The situation is this: A subcommittee composed of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GORE], and myself have inquired very carefully into all these bills. We have a dozen or more of them pending before the committee, and after some inquiry the members of the subcommittee felt that there must be an additional showing in order to report favorably the bill introduced by the Senator from New Mexico. It has so happened that the Senator from Montana and the Senator from West Virginia have been engaged upon the subcommittee that is looking into a very important subject, and we have not had a chance to reach a conclusion; but, as I said to the Senator from New Mexico, we intend to ask him to appear before that subcommittee just as soon as I can command the attendance of the other two members of the subcommittee.

Mr. BRATTON. Very well.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from New Mexico will not object to the passage of this bill. The Federal courts in Connecticut are greatly crowded. We have only one district at the present time.

Mr. BRATTON. I assure the Senator from Connecticut that I am not going to object. I am interested in the bill relating to my State, and I merely wished to inquire when these other matters will receive attention.

Mr. BINGHAM. The present Federal district judge has broken down in health more than once because of the tremendous pressure of the docket, and I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. BRATTON. The point I am making is that some bills seem to go through and get on the calendar, whereas we can not be heard before the committee on other bills; and I am at a loss to understand how some travel by so much faster schedule than others.

Mr. CUMMINS. We have been doing the very best we could. We can not put in more than 24 hours a day, and as far as I am concerned I have been putting in nearly that many hours every day upon the Judiciary Committee. There are a great many bills pending before that committee, and the members of the committee are busily engaged elsewhere. I have been doing the best I could to reach a conclusion with regard to the Senator's bill.

Mr. BRATTON. I do not propose to object to the bill relating to Connecticut. I rose merely to ask for information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGE, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF IOWA

The bill (S. 475) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint an additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of the State of Iowa, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "Senate," to strike out "shall" and insert "is hereby authorized to"; and in line 10, after the word "district," to strike out down to the end of line 8, on page 2, and to insert:

SEC. 2. When a vacancy shall occur in the office of the existing district judge for said district such vacancy shall not be filled unless authorized by the Congress.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is hereby authorized to appoint an additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Iowa, who shall reside in said district and shall possess the same qualifications and have the same powers and jurisdiction and receive the same compensation and allowances as the present judge of said district.

SEC. 2. When a vacancy shall occur in the office of the existing district judge for said district, such vacancy shall not be filled unless authorized by the Congress.

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect upon its approval by the President.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether there is some judge there now who is incapacitated and whether this bill is to relieve the situation?

Mr. CUMMINS. The district judge for the southern district of Iowa has been ill for a year or more and has not been able to try any important cases in that time. He is still ill, and the people who have business in the court have been very much inconvenienced. The purpose of this bill is simply to supply a judge who can sit in the trial of cases.

It is hoped that the present judge will recover. I very sincerely hope so. He is one of the best judges to be found in the United States. I have provided, therefore, that when there is a vacancy in the office of the existing judgeship it shall not be filled without the further action of Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE FOR PENNSYLVANIA

The bill (S. 1645) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the middle district of Pennsylvania was announced as next in order.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I move that that be indefinitely postponed, as it was reported adversely.

The motion was agreed to.

BALTIMORE BRANCH, FEDERAL RESERVE BANK OF RICHMOND

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 66) authorizing the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond to contract for and erect in the city of Baltimore, Md., a building for its Baltimore branch, was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. House Joint Resolution 191, on the calendar, seems to be identical with Senate Joint Resolution 66.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that the House joint resolution be substituted for this joint resolution.

Mr. BRUCE. I have a memorandum from my colleague [Mr. WELLER] as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 66, providing for the erection of a building for the Federal Reserve Bank of Baltimore, is No. 614 on the Senate Calendar.

That is the measure he wants to have passed.

Mr. FLETCHER. The point is that the House has passed a joint resolution identical with it, and if we substitute the House joint resolution for the Senate joint resolution and pass it the whole thing will be finished.

Mr. BRUCE. Very well; let that course be taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to proceeding to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 191?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond be, and it is hereby, authorized to contract for and erect in the city of Baltimore a building for its Baltimore branch, provided the total amount expended in the erection of said building shall not exceed the sum of $1,025,000: Provided, however, That the character and type of building to be erected, the amount actually to be expended in the construction of said building, and the amount actually to be expended for the vaults, permanent equipment, furnishings, and fixtures for said building shall be subject to the approval of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is my understanding that the House joint resolution contains the language recommended as an amendment by the Senate committee. I should like to be certain that such is the fact.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The language in the House joint resolution is identical with the language of the Senate joint resolution as proposed to be amended by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senate Joint Resolution 66 will be indefinitely postponed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2606) to prohibit offering for sale as Federal farm-loan bonds any securities not issued under the terms of the farm loan act, to limit the use of the words "Federal," "United States," or "reserve," or a combination of such words, to prohibit false advertising, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is quite an important bill, and I suggest that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

SCREEN-WAGON CONTRACTS, POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

The bill (S. 1930) to authorize the Postmaster General to readjust the terms of certain screen-wagon contracts, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the word "mails," to strike out the words "in the State of Florida"; on line 7, to strike out the words "in population in such State" and to insert the words "in cost for such service"; on line 11, after the word "incident," to strike out the words "to such" and to insert the words "to the"; on line 12, after the word "business," to strike out the words "and increase in population," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That if the Postmaster General finds that any formal written contract now in force for transporting the mails in regulation screen vehicles was entered into before the present unusual expansion of business and increase in cost for such service, and that the contract price agreed to be paid for the service to be rendered thereunder is now inequitable and unjust because of the increased cost and expense occasioned the contractor in handling the unusual volume of mail incident to the expansion of business, the Postmaster General is authorized, in his discretion, with the consent of the contractor and his bondsmen, to cancel such contract or make such readjustments in its terms as he deems necessary to allow for such increased cost and expense to the contractor.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 454) to prevent the sale of cotton and grain in future markets was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that is quite an important bill and should go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over under objection.

FOREST RESERVES IN NEW MEXICO AND ARIZONA

The bill (S. 565) limiting the creation or extension of forest reserves in New Mexico and Arizona was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter no forest reservation shall be created, nor shall any additions be made to one heretofore created within the limits of the States of New Mexico and Arizona except by act of Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2534) to promote the development, protection, and utilization of grazing facilities on public lands, to stabilize the range stock-raising industry, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

WILLIAM J. MURPHY

The bill (S. 3015) for the relief of William J. Murphy was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of William J. Murphy, late postmaster at Cleveland, Ohio, in the sum of $3,209.33 due the United States on account of the loss of postal funds resulting from larceny and embezzlement.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. M. McCOLLUM, MARGARET G. JACKSON, AND DOROTHY M. MURPHY

The bill (S. 3049) for the relief of Mrs. M. McCollum, Margaret G. Jackson, and Dorothy M. Murphy was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$4,218.75" and insert "$1,000"; on line 7, to strike out "$4,523" and to insert "$1,500"; on line 8, to strike out "$4,606.30" and to insert "$1,500 in full settlement of all claims," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. M. McCollum the sum of $1,000, to Margaret G. Jackson the sum of $1,500, to Dorothy M. Murphy the sum of $1,500 in full settlement of all claims for financial damages sustained by them and great pain and suffering they were forced to undergo as a result of the explosion of the United States dirigible balloon C-8 at a point near Camp Holabird, Md., on the 1st day of July, 1919.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WORKS OF ARTS AND ARTISTS OF THE UNITED STATES CAPITOL

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Order of Business 488, Senate Resolution 172, authorizing the Committee on the Library of the Senate to have prepared a manuscript on the works of art and the artists of the United States Capitol, which was passed over on my objection. I find the explanation so reasonable that I should like to withdraw my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator?

There being no objection, the resolution was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Library of the Senate be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to have prepared a manuscript on the works of art and the artists of the United States Capitol, at a cost not to exceed $2,500, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that such manuscript when prepared shall be printed, with illustrations, as a Senate document.

ALBERTA SISLER SAULS

The bill (S. 577) to extend the benefits of the United States employees' compensation act of September 7, 1916, to Alberta Sisler Sauls, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission shall be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to extend to Alberta Sisler Sauls, a former Red Cross nurse, serving at Government Munitions Explosive Plant C, Niro, W. Va., the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, compensation hereunder to commence from and after the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2348) for the relief of Nick Masonich was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over, under objection.

ALASKA ANTHRACITE RAILROAD CO.

The bill (H. R. 6573) to extend the time for the completion of the Alaska Anthracite Railroad Co., and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for the compliance of the Alaska Anthracite Railroad Co. or its successors in interest or assigns with the provisions of sections 4 and 5 of chapter 235 of the laws of the United States, entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for the right of way for railroads in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved May 14, 1898, by locating and completing its railroad in Alaska is hereby extended—

First. Said company, its successors and assigns, shall have two years from date of the passage of this act wherein to file final and permanent map of its Canyon Creek branch, and three years from date of the passage of this act wherein to complete the construction of its main line of railroad and branches.

Second. Said company, its successors and assigns, shall be exempt from license tax during the period of construction of the railroad and for one year thereafter, provided that this exemption shall exist and operate only during the continuance of the construction of said road in good faith, and in the event of unnecessary delay and failure in the construction and completion of said road, the exemption from taxation herein provided shall cease, and said tax shall be collectible as to so much of said road as shall have been completed: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be held or construed to affect any now vested rights of other parties: And provided further, That the Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILLIS. I suggest that the report in connection with the bill just passed, which is a very scholarly one, prepared by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM], be printed in the Record at this point for information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR COMPLETION OF ALASKA ANTHRACITE RAILROAD CO.

Mr. BINGHAM, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions, submitted the following report to accompany H. R. 6573:

The Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6573) to extend the time for the completion of the Alaska Anthracite Railroad Co., and for other purposes, having considered the same, recommends its passage without amendment.

It is believed by the committee that the bill is a step forward in the undertaking of providing transportation facilities in Alaska, a task which is deserving of commendation and encouragement. In its study of the bill the committee took under consideration a favorable report made thereon by the Secretary of the Interior, to whom the bill was referred for an opinion, who set forth his views in a communication addressed to the chairman of this committee under date of March 10, 1926, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,

Washington, March 10, 1926.

Hon. FRANK B. WILLIS,

Chairman Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR WILLIS: I have your letter of March 4, 1926, submitting copy of H. R. 6573 and requesting "a statement concerning this at as early a date as possible."

Under date of January 7, 1926, I reported on this bill to Hon. CHARLES F. CURRY, chairman Committee on the Territories, House of Representatives, as follows:

"This bill provides that the Alaska Anthracite Railroad Co., or its successors in interest or assigns, shall be allowed certain additional time within which to file maps of final and definite location of certain branch lines of road, and three years from the date of passage of the act within which to complete the construction of its main line of road and branches; also, that the company, its successors and assigns, shall be exempt from license tax during the period of construction of the railroad and for one year thereafter, provided that this exemption shall exist and operate only during the continuance of the construction of said road in good faith, and in the event of unnecessary delay and failure in the construction and completion of said road, the exemption from taxation herein provided shall cease, and said tax shall be collectible as to so much of said road as shall have been completed.

"As shown by the records of this department, briefly stated, the company's case is as follows:

"The company was incorporated under the laws of the State of Washington to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad having one terminus at the Bering River Coal Fields of Alaska and other terminus on Controller Bay and upon the Bering River. It filed copy of its articles of incorporation and proofs of organization, which were accepted, and it thereby became a beneficiary under section 2 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1898 (30 Stat. 409). Pursuant to the provisions of section 4 of said act, it filed a map of preliminary location of its line of road from Controller Bay to Carbon Mountain; also a branch line from mile 7, on the main line, to Aetna, on the Bering River. This map was accepted by the General Land Office, the department concurring in such action, by letter addressed to the district land officers at Juneau, August 29, 1918. Subsequently, the company filed proof of construction of its said main line and branch lines and a map showing them as actually constructed, which, upon recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, was approved by the First Assistant Secretary of the Interior, August 5, 1921. Later the company filed a map of preliminary location of a branch line up Canyon Creek, which was accepted by letter dated March 17, 1923, and a map of definite location of the so-called Cunningham branch line up Stillwater Creek and Trout Creek, which was approved by the department May 11, 1925. By the filing of the map of preliminary location of the branch line up Canyon Creek the right of way as determined by the location shown thereon was held for one year from the date of its acceptance, March 17, 1923; but inasmuch as a map of definite location of this section was not filed within the year following, rights thereunder have lapsed. The company could, however, file a map of definite location of this section and it would be considered on its merits.

"There is no apparent objection to the proposed legislation, particularly since it is in line with that heretofore enacted in similar cases. Accordingly I recommend favorable action on the bill. National-forest lands are involved, so it may be the Department of Agriculture is interested in this matter.

"I note your request to have representatives from this department present when your committee considers this bill on January 8, and will endeavor to comply therewith."

There is nothing I can add to this report except to say that anything that promises to promote transportation facilities in Alaska is deserving of commendation and encouragement.

Very truly yours,

HUBERT WORK.

VISITS OF TRIBAL DELEGATES TO WASHINGTON

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 60) authorizing expenditures from the Fort Peck 4 per cent fund for visits of tribal delegates to Washington was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 3, to strike out the word "appropriated" and to insert the words "authorized to be expended"; on page 2, line 5, after the word "reservation," to insert the words "when authorized or approved by the Secretary of the Interior," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $5,000 is hereby authorized to be expended out of the Fort Peck 4 per cent fund, created under the act of May 30, 1908 (35 Stat. L. p. 558), and held in trust by the United States, such sum to be available until expended, to enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay the necessary expenses incurred in connection with visits to Washington, D. C., by delegations of the Assiniboine and Sioux Indians of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, when authorized or approved by the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of conferring with attorneys, presenting claims, appearing before committees of Congress, and attending to other tribal matters of such Indians.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee report is an amendment to strike out the preamble.

The amendment was agreed to.

SACAJAWEA, OR BIRD WOMAN

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 19) authorizing the erection of a monument to the memory of Sacajawea, or Bird Woman, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let that go over.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President—

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will state to the Senator that I was not present in the committee when the joint resolution was ordered to be reported out, and since that action has been taken I have had brought to my attention certain evidence to the effect that this Indian woman was not buried at the place designated. I desire to have time to look into that matter before the joint resolution is passed.

Mr. KENDRICK. May I suggest to the Senator that when this joint resolution first came before our Committee on Indian Affairs the Assistant Commissioner of the Indian Office was asked whether it would be possible, through his official force, to determine definitely and without doubt the location of the burial place of Sacajawea. He answered that according to his opinion it would be possible. As a result of our request he ordered an investigation, the record of which indicated without doubt that the place near Fort Washakie was the grave of Sacajawea.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say to the Senator that I dislike to object to the present consideration of the measure, but I have not had time to look through the material which has been brought to my attention, and I desire to do so before the joint resolution is passed.

Mr. KENDRICK. Of course the joint resolution will have to go over if the Senator objects, but for the information of the Senate I wish to explain that a few months ago, while at Fort Washakie, which is the agency of the Shoshone Indians, the tribe of which Sacajawea was a member, I visited the grave of this Indian woman. I afterwards called on Father Roberts, a missionary who had officiated not only at Sacajawea's burial but at the burial of nearly every Indian in a large cemetery. He has been stationed at Fort Washakie, as I recall, for 45 years, and he assured me that from his viewpoint there is no doubt but that the Sacajawea buried at this place was the famous Bird Woman. To corroborate his statement he took occasion to show me the record of the burials at which he had officiated, including this particular one.

I afterwards met two of the grandsons of Sacajawea, and after talking with them I had no doubt as to either the identity of this woman or the location of her grave.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I shall be glad to confer with the Senator about it, but I insist that the joint resolution shall go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

DAMAGES TO LIGHTER "LINWOOD"

The bill (S. 511) for the relief of all owners of cargo laden aboard the lighter Linwood at the time of her collision with the U. S. S. Abasco was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 8, to strike out "Abasco" and to insert "Abasco"; on page 2, line 6, to strike out the words "including interest," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claims of all owners of various shipments of merchandise which were laden on board of the lighter Linwood, at the time hereinafter mentioned, against the United States of America, for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between the said vessel and the United States steamship Abasco on or about the 23d day of November, 1918, at or near the end of Pier 2, Bush Terminal Docks, Brooklyn, N. Y., may be sued for by the said owners of cargo in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court; and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suits and to enter judgments or decrees for the amounts of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the owners of said cargo, or against the owners of said cargo in favor of the United States, upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notices of the suits shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by orders of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suits shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to ask the junior Senator from New York a question. Attached to Order of Business No. 530, Senate bill 2898, there is a report from the Shipping Board, and this report, on page 3, contains a resolution of the Shipping Board of May 20, 1924. I would like to ask the junior Senator from New York whether he has read the resolution of the Shipping Board, and what he thinks of it.

Mr. COPELAND. May I ask the Senator from Missouri what calendar number he has in mind?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Order of Business No. 530.

Mr. COPELAND. That is my colleague's bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am quite aware of that.

Mr. COPELAND. I am not familiar with the details of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The resolution of the Shipping Board pertains to the general subject matter of these bills, the idea being that the right to sue the United States should be given by an amendment to the general law rather than by the passage of these special bills.

Mr. COPELAND. I am in full sympathy with the resolution of the Shipping Board. I think that legislation ought to be enacted so we will have a general rule under which these matters may be considered, but we have no such law now, and the only way that the bills, Orders of Business Nos. 528 and 529, which are my bills, and Order of Business No. 530, which is the bill of my colleague, may be considered under present conditions is by this special legislation which permits the parties to go before the Court of Claims and make such representations as they please. I agree fully with the Shipping Board that that is the way it should be done in the future.

Mr. KING. May I say to the Senator from Missouri that a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, and I am a member of the subcommittee, has been appointed for the purpose of considering the subject, and I hope before the Senate adjourns that we will be able to report a general bill in consonance with the views which are entertained by the Senator from Missouri.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of all owners of cargo laden aboard the lighter Linwood at the time of her collision with the U. S. S. Absecon."

STEAMSHIP "BOXLEY"

The bill (S. 537) for the relief of owners of cargo aboard the steamship Boxley was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of W. R. Grace & Co., owner of various shipments of merchandise which were laden on board of the steamship Boxley, at the time hereinafter mentioned, against the United States of America for damages alleged to have been caused by the unseaworthiness and negligence of the said steamship Boxley on her voyage from Iquique, Chile, to New Orleans, La., between the dates of January 5, 1920, and February 14, 1920, may be sued for by the said owners of cargo in the district court of the United States for the southern district of New York sitting as a court of admiralty, and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the owners of said cargo, or against the owners of said cargo in favor of the United States, upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEAMSHIP "OCONEE"

The bill (S. 2898) for the relief of all owners of cargo laden aboard the steamship Oconee was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claims of all owners of various shipments of merchandise which were laden on board of the steamship Oconee, formerly known as steamship Mada, at the time hereinafter mentioned against the United States of America for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between the said vessel and the steamship Constantia, later known as steamship Maximo Gomez, on the 16th day of July, 1918, off Sewells Point, in Hampton Roads, Va., may be sued for by the said owners of cargo in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine said suits and to enter judgments or decrees for the amounts of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of said owners of cargo, or against said owners of cargo in favor of the United States, upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notices of said suits shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suits shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FREDERICK S. EASTER

The bill (H. R. 3431) for the relief of Frederick S. Easter, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Frederick S. Easter, late of One hundred and forty-fifth Company, Third Replacement Battalion, United States Marine Corps, World War, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the marine service of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALE OF KOSHER MEAT IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (H. R. 7255) to regulate the sale of kosher meat in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That after the enactment of this act it shall be unlawful for any person—

(a) To sell or offer for sale within the District of Columbia as kosher, any meat which is not kosher;

(b) To label or brand as kosher any meat, or the package containing any meat, sold or offered for sale or prepared within the District of Columbia, which is not kosher; or

(c) To sell or offer for sale within the District of Columbia in the same place of business both kosher and nonkosher meat, (1) without displaying conspicuously in said place of business a sign in block letters at least 4 inches in height containing the words "kosher and nonkosher meat sold here," and (2) without displaying over such kosher meat the words "kosher meat," and over such nonkosher meat the words "nonkosher meat," in block letters at least 4 inches in height.

SEC. 2. As used in this act—

(a) The term "meat" includes raw meat and meat prepared for human consumption, whether alone or in combination with other products;

(b) The term "person" means individual, partnership, corporation, or association.

SEC. 3. Any person who violates any provision of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment; but no person shall be convicted of any such violation in respect of any meat which was not kosher at the time he acquired such meat, if he acquired it in good faith as kosher from a person duly authorized in accordance with the orthodox Hebrew ritual to prepare kosher.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEECH LAKE RESERVATION ROAD, CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF MINNESOTA

The bill (S. 2712) authorizing an appropriation from the tribal funds of the Chippewa Indians, of Minnesota, for the construction of a road on the Leech Lake Reservation was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized an appropriation of $6,000 from the tribal funds of the Chippewa Indians of Minnenot on deposit in the United States Treasury under the act of January 14, 1889 (25 Stat. L. p. 642), for the construction of a road on the Leech Lake Reservation from the Chippewa Sanatorium at Onigum to connect with State Highway No. 34, under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That Indian labor shall be employed as far as practicable.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CANCELLATION OF CERTAIN PATENTS TO INDIANS

The bill (S. 2714) to authorize the cancellation, under certain conditions, of patents in fee simple to Indians for allotments held in trust by the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, after the word "without," to insert the words "the consent or," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to cancel any patent in fee simple issued to an Indian allottee or to his heirs before the end of the period of trust described in the original or trust patent issued to such allottee, or before the expiration of any extension of such period of trust by the President, where such patent in fee simple was issued without the consent or an application therefor by the allottee or by his heirs: Provided, That the patentee has not mortgaged or sold any part of the land described in such patent; Provided also, That upon cancellation of such patent in fee simple the land shall have the same status as though such fee patent had never been issued.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROYALTIES ON LEASED INDIAN LANDS

The bill (S. 2716) to provide for the collection of fees from royalties on production of minerals from leased Indian lands was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. HARRELD] is not here. I would like to ask any member of the committee present whether he is familiar with the bill. It seems important, because it involves the leasing of mineral lands from Indian reservations. I want to be sure the Indians' rights are fully protected in the leases. I am not a member of the committee, and am not familiar with the provisions of the bill.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, as I recall, it is merely to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to deduct from royalties a reasonable fee, not to exceed 3 per cent, with which to pay the costs of administering the leasing of lands and the collecting of the royalties. It is designed to make that particular branch of the bureau self-sustaining so far as expenses are concerned.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether he knows, with reference to Oklahoma and allotted lands, that a fee is now collected?

Mr. BRATTON. I am not informed as to that. The bill seems to be confined to restricted Indian lands. I take it that it does not apply to the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma. It is simply to make that part of the bureau self-sustaining.

Mr. LENROOT. I think the bill ought to go over. I do not believe that the fee should at least exceed the estimated expense of administering the lands.

Mr. BRATTON. The Senator will note from the language that it is to collect a reasonable fee not to exceed 3 per cent.

Mr. LENROOT. That is true, but it could be 3 per cent, and an oil royalty might amount to a great deal of money even at 3 per cent.

Mr. BRATTON. It leaves it in the discretion of the department to determine what is a reasonable fee.

Mr. LENROOT. I would rather that the bill should go over until the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs is here.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

TIMBER ON KLAMATH INDIAN RESERVATION, OREG.

The bill (S. 2717) to reserve the merchantable timber on all tribal lands within the Klamath Indian Reservation in Oregon, hereafter allotted, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the merchantable timber on all tribal lands within the Klamath Indian Reservation in Oregon hereafter allotted under existing laws be, and the same is hereby, reserved for the benefit of the members of the Klamath Tribe and other Indians having rights on that reservation: Provided, That the trust patents issued for such allotments shall contain a clause reserving to the United States the right to cut and market such merchantable timber, the proceeds to be disposed of in accordance with existing statutes and regulations: Provided further, That, when the merchantable timber has been removed from the lands so allotted, the title to such timber as remains shall thereupon pass to the respective allottees, their heirs, or assigns.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PORT MADISON INDIAN RESERVATION, WASH.

The bill (S. 2967) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain lands within the Port Madison Indian Reservation in the State of Washington, heretofore set apart for school or administrative purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to sell, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, any part of the land heretofore set apart on the Port Madison Indian Reservation in the State of Washington for school or administrative purposes which may no longer be needed for such uses: Provided, That said land may be sold only after the consent thereto has been obtained from the allied Indian tribes having rights on the Port Madison Indian Reservation under the provisions of the treaty of January 22, 1855 (12 Stat. L. p. 927); and the proceeds of said sale shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of said allied tribes: Provided further, That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $2,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to cover all necessary expenses of surveying and subdividing the tract into blocks, lots, streets, and alleys preparatory to offering the lots for sale; said appropriation to be reimbursed from the proceeds of the sale of said lots.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President, we passed a general bill a little while ago authorizing the leasing of lands reserved for school and agency purposes, and this is a specific bill along the same line.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But this relates to the sale and not to the leasing of the lands.

Mr. HARRELD. The Senator is right about that.

Mr. LENROOT. These are Indian lands?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; some that are not needed.

Mr. LENROOT. Why should we pay for these expenses out of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator will note from the language of the bill that it is a reimbursable expenditure.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; I see now that it is.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

QUINAIALT RESERVATION WATER SUPPLY

The bill (H. R. 96) authorizing an appropriation of not more than $3,000 from the tribal funds of the Indians of the Quinalt Reservation, Wash., for the construction of a system of water supply at Taholah on said reservation was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of not more than $3,000 from the tribal funds of the Indians of the Quinalt Reservation, Wash., for the construction of a system of water supply at Taholah, on said reservation, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That Indian labor shall be employed as far as practicable.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs why there are so many of these private bills carrying appropriations for Indians and Indian tribes when we have just passed an appropriation bill which was presumed to deal—and I thought did deal—in a very generous way with the Indians, and which met their needs.

Mr. LENROOT. There was no authority in the general appropriation bill to do this work.

Mr. KING. Then there is no existing law?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; there is not.

Mr. KING. And the appropriation bill did not deal with it?

Mr. HARRELD. They asked for $25,000 when the bill was originally introduced, but the Secretary of the Interior reports that a full supply of water adequate for their uses can be furnished for $3,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This is merely an authorization and not an appropriation.

Mr. KING. But it will mean ultimately an expenditure.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2657) to amend section 217, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think this is quite an important measure and I ask that it may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over under objection.

STANDARDIZATION OF SCREW THREADS

The bill (H. R. 264) to amend an act to provide for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads," approved July 18, 1918, as amended by an act approved March 3, 1919, and extended by public resolutions approved March 23, 1920, and March 21, 1922, be, and the same is hereby, amended so that it will read:

"That a commission is hereby created, to be known as the commission for the standardization of screw threads, hereinafter referred to as the commission, which shall be composed of nine commissioners, one of whom shall be the Director of the Bureau of Standards, who shall be chairman of the commission; two representatives of the Army, to be appointed by the Secretary of War; two representatives of the Navy, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy; and four to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, two of whom shall be chosen from nominations made by the American Society of Mechanical Engineers and two from nominations made by the Society of Automotive Engineers.

"Sec. 2. That it shall be the duty of said commission to ascertain and establish standards for screw threads, which shall be submitted to the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Commerce for their acceptance and approval. Such standards, when thus accepted and approved, shall be adopted and used in the several manufacturing plants under the control of the War and Navy Departments, and, so far as practicable, in all specifications for screw threads in proposals for manufactured articles, parts, or materials to be used under the direction of these departments.

"Sec. 3. That the Secretary of Commerce shall promulgate such standards for use by the public and cause the same to be published as a public document.

"Sec. 4. That the commission shall serve without compensation but nothing herein shall be held to affect the pay of the commissioners appointed from the Army and Navy or of the Director of the Bureau of Standards.

"Sec. 5. That the commission may adopt rules and regulations in regard to its procedure and the conduct of its business."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETIREMENT OF ARMY OFFICERS

The bill (S. 96) to amend the national defense act, approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920, relating to retirement, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. The bill is one which was discussed fully at the last session and was passed by the Senate. When the arrangement was made for receiving men over certain ages into the Regular Army at the close of the war, a provision was made that when they were retired at the age of 64 they should not receive the same amount of retirement pay as officers who have spent all their lives in the Army, but only 4 per cent per year for the time they served. At that time it was realized that a great injustice was likely to be done officers who had received permanent injuries during the time of their service. If the Senator will permit me I will call his attention to the words of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] at the time of the passage of a similar bill during the last session. He said:

We forgot one thing, however. I admit it on my own part, because I was one of those who helped draft the law. We forgot that these officers who came in over the age of 45 might be seriously injured in line of duty, and if thus injured and rendered helpless for the rest of their lives they might be thrown out of the Army, retired for physical disability, with pay equal to only 4 per cent of their pay multiplied by the number of years they had served. For example, if one of these officers to-day should be severely injured in line of duty and his retirement compelled under the law, having served only four years, he would get only 16 per cent of his active pay as his retired pay.

This bill is to give the officer in this class who has been retired as the result of physical disability incurred in line of duty the same retired pay as that received by other officers who are retired for the same reason. If an officer is retired for age, the 4 per cent rule will still hold.

I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. KING. The bill relates only to those who are in the Regular Army?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes; and physically disabled.

Mr. KING. And not to the reserve officers?

Mr. BINGHAM. No; and not to those who came in over the age of 45 and remain until the age of 64 and are then to be retired on account of their age.

Mr. KING. How many are there in that class?

Mr. BINGHAM. The Secretary of War, in writing with reference to the matter, said there were only eight.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the national defense act of June 4, 1920, be further amended by inserting after the words "per centum," in line 27 of section 24 thereof, the following: "Provided, That any officer so appointed, who has been or may hereafter be retired in accordance with law on account of physical disability incident to the service, shall receive, from the date of such retirement, retired pay at the rate of 75 per cent of his active pay at the time of such retirement."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

APPOINTMENT OF ARMY FIELD CLERKS AS WARRANT OFFICERS

The bill (S. 3283) to provide for the appointment of Army field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, as warrant officers, United States Army, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter Army field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, now in active service, shall have the rank, pay, allowances, retirement privileges, and benefits of warrant officers, other than those of the Army Mine Planter Service, and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to appoint them warrant officers of the Regular Army: Provided, That in determining length of service for longevity pay and retirement they shall be credited with and entitled to count the same military service as now authorized for warrant officers, including service as Army field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, and all classified field service rendered as headquarters clerks and clerks of the Quartermaster Corps: Provided further, That the limitation in the act of June 30, 1922, on the number of warrant officers, United States Army, shall not apply to the appointees hereunder.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 3284) to amend a portion of section 15 of an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the purpose of the bill? If not, I shall ask that it may go over. If it relates to chaplains, I want to say that I have had some correspondence that I want to look up before I consent to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] is not here. I think the bill had better go over.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

RESERVE OFFICERS' TRAINING CORPS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3786) to enable members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps who have interrupted the course of training prescribed in the act of June 4, 1920, to resume such training and amending accordingly section 47c of that act, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 47c of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, as amended be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following additional proviso:

"Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to require that the advanced training provided for herein shall follow without interruption upon the completion of the two years' elective or compulsory course of military training prescribed in section 40 of this act or to require that such advanced training be pursued without interruption after it has been commenced in those cases where the person selected for advanced training at any institution will, under the rules and regulations thereof, normally require, in order to be graduated therefrom, a period of sufficient duration after any interruption, to complete the advanced course without curtailment."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATUS OF CERTAIN COMMISSIONED OFFICERS OF THE NAVY

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 85) to correct the status of certain commissioned officers of the Navy appointed thereto, pursuant to the provisions of the act of Congress, approved June 4, 1920, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with amendments.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Maine for an explanation of the bill. It seems to me that it trespasses upon the grounds that heretofore have been considered as governing in such cases.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, under the law of June 4, 1920, 1,200 naval officers holding temporary commissions and warrant rank in the Navy were authorized to receive permanent commissions in the regular Navy. The officers referred to in the bill were examined and were found qualified. However, the pay bill, which passed on June 10, 1922, changed the pay of all officers of the Navy, and provided that in computing their pay, instead of counting their longevity, as had theretofore been done, only their service in commissioned rank could be counted. These officers, while they passed their examinations before that law went into effect, through no fault on their own part did not have time to accept their commissions before the law went into effect. They therefore lost a benefit that was accorded to other officers who received permanent commissions. The committee felt that they should all be placed on the same basis.

This bill applies only to two or possibly three officers and makes a small increase in their pay, putting them on the same basis with other officers in their class.

Mr. KING. Was it just and right and for the best interests of the Navy to have made the other advancements? The Senator from Maine claims that these two or three officers are entitled to be placed in the same category with the other officers.

Mr. HALE. They are not in the same category with the others through no fault on their own part. They simply did not get time to accept their commissions before the pay bill went into effect.

Mr. KING. What I am trying to get at is, Was it wise to have given the commissions to all the other officers?

Mr. HALE. The others were, of course, entitled to them under the law.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs were, on page 1, line 6, after the numerals 835, to insert "who were examined and found qualified in all respects for such appointment prior to June 30, 1922, but whose appointments were delayed subsequent to that date through no fault of their own"; and on the same page, line 10, after the word "count," to insert "from and after date of appointment," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all officers of the regular Navy appointed subsequent to June 30, 1922, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 4, 1920 (41 Stats. L. pp. 834 and 835), who were examined and found qualified in all respects for such appointment prior to June 30, 1922, but whose appointments were delayed subsequent to that date through no fault of their own, shall be entitled to count, from and after date of appointment, in the computation of their pay, all service which would have been credited to them had they been so appointed on or before June 30, 1922.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATE HISTORICAL SOCIETY OF NORTH DAKOTA

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3627) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the State Historical Society of North Dakota the silver service which was presented to the battleship North Dakota by the citizens of that State, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment on page 1, line 4, after the word "State," to strike out the words "Historical Society," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the State of North Dakota, for preservation and exhibition, the silver service which was presented to the battleship North Dakota by the citizens of that State: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for the delivery of such silver service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the State of North Dakota the silver service which was presented to the battleship North Dakota by the citizens of that State."

PHILIP HERTZ (PHILIP HERZ)

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2124) for the relief of Philip A. Hertz; which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 5, after the name "Philip," to strike out the initial "A," and in the same line, after the name "Hertz," to insert "(Philip Herz)," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Philip Hertz (Philip Herz), late of Company H, Sixty-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 18th day of July, 1864: Provided, That no bounty, pay, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Philip Hertz (Philip Herz)."

CHAPLAIN A. E. STONE

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2955) for the relief of Chaplain A. E. Stone, United States Navy, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment in line 6, before the word "day," to strike out the word "first" and to insert the word "fourth," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That any officer now serving as an acting chaplain in the Navy, and who served under a temporary appointment as a chaplain in the Navy with the rank of lieutenant at any time prior to the fourth day of November, 1920, shall be eligible for advancement to the grade of chaplain with the rank of lieutenant commander, without regard to any statutory requirements other than professional and physical examination: Provided, That any officer appointed in accordance with the provisions of this act shall be entitled to no additional back pay or allowances by reason of such appointment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is this a bill for the purpose of advancing chaplains and giving them additional rank?

Mr. HALE. No. This is a bill to take care of one chaplain who, in the ordinary course of procedure, would have come up for promotion. He is an acting chaplain in the Navy and has been in the Navy for the last seven or eight years. His promotion was held up under the provisions of the law to which I have recently referred, the law of June 4, 1920, which allowed certain temporary and Naval Reserve officers to be taken into the regular Navy on examination and qualification. He was held up as he did not pass the physical examination for promotion. He was put under medical supervision, when it was found that there was no cause for holding him up. In the meantime he reached the age limit for promotion. This bill is simply to restore him and give him a commission as a regular chaplain instead of acting chaplain. He is still in the Navy and has been ever since the war.

Mr. KING. This is not a part of the "running-mate bill"?

Mr. HALE. It has nothing to do with it.

Mr. KING. Which is to make admirals out of doctors and pharmacists and chaplains and everybody else?

Mr. HALE. No; I can assure the Senator that it has nothing to do with that bill.

Mr. KING. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MATE JOHN JOSEPH BRESNAHAN, UNITED STATES NAVY

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3647) to appoint Mate John Joseph Bresnahan, United States Navy, a boatswain in the Navy. It directs the Secretary of the Navy to appoint Mate John Joseph Bresnahan, United States Navy, to the warrant grade of boatswain in the United States Navy, without regard to age or other qualifications.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANTON KUNZ

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2703) granting six months' pay to Anton Kunz, father of Joseph Anthony Kunz, deceased, machinist's mate, first class, United States Navy, in active service. It proposes to appropriate such sum as may be necessary to pay to Anton Kunz, father of Joseph Anthony Kunz, machinist's mate, first class, submarine A-7, United States Navy, who was killed by an explosion on board the vessel July 25, 1917, an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate he was receiving at the date of his death.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SELECTION OF LANDS BY OREGON

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 722) to authorize the selection of certain publicly owned lands by the State of Oregon, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, on page 1, line 11, after the numerals "27," to insert "and west half, northeast quarter, northwest quarter, northwest quarter southwest quarter of section 33," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture, and under such conditions as they may prescribe, the publicly owned lands within the following-described areas are hereby made available for selection by the State of Oregon under the act of February 28, 1891 (26 Stat. p. 796), for a period of five years from the passage of this act:

Township 23 south, range 10 west, Willamette meridian: Sections 3, 11, 15, 21, 23, 27, and west half northeast quarter, northwest quarter, northwest quarter southwest quarter of section 33; section 9, east half and east half west half; section 29, east half east half.

Township 22 south, range 10 west, Willamette meridian: Section 15, southeast quarter southeast quarter; section 21, all; section 23, southwest quarter northeast quarter, west half, southeast quarter; section 27, all; section 33, east half and east half west half.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INSPECTION OF BATTLE FIELDS IN GEORGIA

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3550) providing for an inspection of the Kenesaw Mountain and Lost Mountain and other battle fields in the State of Georgia, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby created, to be composed of the following members, who shall be appointed by the Secretary of War, for the purpose of inspecting the Kenesaw Mountain, Lost Mountain, and other battle fields in the State of Georgia: A commissioned officer of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army; a veteran of the Civil War who served honorably in the military forces of the United States; and a veteran of the Civil War who served honorably in the military forces of the Confederate States of America. In appointing the members of the commission the Secretary of War shall, as far as possible, select persons familiar with the terrain of the said battle fields and the historical events associated therewith.

Sec. 2. It shall be the duty of the commission, acting under the direction of the Secretary of War, to inspect the said battle fields in order to ascertain the feasibility of their acquisition for the purpose of a national military park and of preserving and marking them for historical and professional military study and to ascertain the value of lands necessary to acquire for this purpose. The commission shall submit a report of its findings to the Secretary of War not later than November 1, 1926.

Sec. 3. There is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 in order to carry out the provisions of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRED A. GOSNELL AND ESTATE OF RICHARD C. LAPPIN

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2512) to authorize the Comptroller General of the United States to relieve Fred A. Gosnell, former disbursing clerk, Bureau of the Census, and the estate of Richard C. Lappin, former supervisor of the Fourteenth Decennial Census for the Territory of Hawaii and special disbursing agent, in the settlement of certain accounts. It proposes to authorize the Comptroller General of the United States to relieve Fred A. Gosnell, former disbursing clerk, Bureau of the Census, from accountability or responsibility for losses for which he was accountable or responsible, by crediting his account with the sum of $1,460.68, paid out by him in good faith, through error in auditing and misinterpretation of the provisions of the Fourteenth Decennial Census act, during the census period from July 1, 1919, to July 1, 1922; and also the estate of Richard C. Lappin, former supervisor of the Fourteenth Decennial Census for the Territory of Hawaii and special disbursing agent, from accountability or responsibility for losses for which he was accountable or responsible, by crediting his account with the sum of $91.50 paid out by him in good faith during the period from July 1 to September 30, 1920.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO CONSTITUTION OF NEW MEXICO

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 46) giving and granting consent to an amendment to the constitution of the State of New Mexico providing that the moneys derived from the lands heretofore granted or confirmed to that State by Congress may be apportioned to the several objects for which said lands were granted or confirmed in proportion to the number of acres granted for each object, and to the enactment of such laws and regulations as may be necessary to carry the same into effect; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That consent is hereby given and granted to the State of New Mexico and the qualified electors thereof to vote upon and amend the constitution of said State by the adoption of the following amendment proposed by the legislature of said State by Joint Resolution No. 10, passed by its seventh regular session, approved March 20, 1925, to wit:

"ARTICLE XXIV

"APPORTIONMENT OF MONEYS DERIVED FROM STATE LANDS

"All moneys in any manner derived from the lands which have been granted or confirmed to the State by Congress shall be apportioned to the separate funds established for the several objects, including the Eastern Normal University, for which said lands were granted or confirmed in proportion to the number of acres so granted or confirmed for each of said objects."

Consent is further given and granted to said State to enact such laws and establish such rules and regulations as it may deem necessary to carry such constitutional provision into effect, should the same be duly adopted.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MOSES subsequently said: Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WILLIAMS], who has left the Chamber, I had intended to ask to have passed over the joint resolution which I learn has just been passed by the Senate. The Senator from Missouri desired me to make that request in case the joint resolution came up during his absence, because there are certain matters in connection with it which he desires to discuss, as I understood him. My attention was diverted at the time the joint resolution came up for consideration and was passed. It is because of that that I now ask unanimous consent that the vote whereby the joint resolution was read the third time and passed may be reconsidered and that it may be restored to the calendar in order that the Senator from Missouri may be present when it shall be taken up for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I have no objection to that course being taken, but I should like to recur to the joint resolution if the Senator from Missouri shall return before we finish the consideration of the calendar.

Mr. MOSES. I shall not object to that if the Senator from Missouri shall return to the Chamber. I understand he is temporarily absent, having been called from the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the joint resolution was read the third time and passed will be reconsidered and it will be restored to the calendar.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT

The bill (S. 750) to amend paragraph (18) of section 1 of the interstate commerce act as amended was announced as next in order.

Mr. MOSES. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

Mr. COUZENS. I ask that the bill may go over.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President, who objected to the consideration of the bill last announced on the calendar?

Mr. COUZENS. I suggested, as also did the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], that the bill go over. I think it presents quite an important problem, and I believe there should be more Senators present when the matter is discussed than are now in the Chamber.

Mr. MAYFIELD. I did not understand the Senator from New Hampshire to object to Order of Business No. 557.

Mr. COUZENS. Yes; when that order of business was announced the Senator from New Hampshire said, "Let the bill go over," and I also suggested that it go over.

Mr. MOSES. I will say to the Senator from Texas that in saying, "Let the bill go over," I was acting in purely a vicarious capacity for the Senator from Michigan, who now speaks for himself.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President, let me request the Senator from Michigan to withhold his objection to this bill until I can explain the committee amendment.

The bill as amended simply permits existing carriers to make extensions. The amendment was accepted to meet the objection of the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. The bill means a very great deal to the State of Texas. We have to-day pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission applications to build a thousand miles of railroads in the State by existing carriers. As I have said, it merely gives the existing carriers permission to make extensions without requiring a certificate of public convenience and necessity.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I appreciate what the Senator says, but I think that is a big problem and should not be acted upon without a full Senate and at this hour in the evening—that is my judgment about it—because it changes a very important part of the transportation act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill, being objected to, will be passed over.

BUSINESS PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 194) declaring Daniel F. Steck to be a duly elected Senator of the United States from the State of Iowa for the term beginning March 4, 1925, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIS and Mr. JOHNSON asked that the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3480) for the relief of former officers of the United States Naval Reserve Force and the United States Marine Corps Reserve who were erroneously released from active duty and disenrolled at places other than their homes or places of enrollment was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

CHARLES WALL

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1944) for the relief of Charles Wall. It authorizes the President to appoint Charles Wall a lieutenant commander in the United States Naval Reserve Force, class 3 (in which grade and force he served honorably during the World War), and to retire him and place him upon the retired list of the Navy with the retired pay and emoluments of that grade, but provides that no back pay, allowances, or emoluments shall become due because of the passage of the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GATES AND PIERS IN WEST EXECUTIVE AVENUE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (H. R. 54) authorizing the removal of the gates and piers in West Executive Avenue between the grounds of the White House and the State, War, and Navy Building, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under objection it will be passed over.

Mr. COPELAND. Will not the Senator withhold his objection for a moment? Why does the Senator, may I ask, object to the bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Because I do not think that what the bill proposes to do ought to be done.

Mr. COPELAND. Are we going to give it consideration at some later time?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, before we pass to the next bill on the calendar, let me say that I am sorry the Senator from Washington has any opposition to the removal of the gates and piers in West Executive Avenue. It is not my bill, and I have only the interest in it that any other Senator would have, but I think those gates are a very great menace to the public. Sooner or later somebody is going to be killed there in an automobile accident, and I would not want to have the Senate assume the responsibility for something that may be, after all, purely a matter of sentiment so far as the retention of the gates is concerned.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to say to the Senator that I do not agree with him as to the gates being a menace to life. I think the fact is just the contrary. I have that opinion upon my knowledge of the situation as I have observed traffic going through there, and so forth. I think those gates are a guaranty of security instead of danger.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator a question, then why not have them in all the streets?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator can argue that question when the bill comes up. I will say that if we had them along every street we could travel with a great deal more safety.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, how long have those gates been there?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Ever since I can remember.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has anybody ever been killed or hurt there?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I never heard of anybody being hurt there.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I do not see any reason why those gates should be removed. There seems to be a disposition on the part of a great many people to try to remove and do away with everything—

Mr. McNARY. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is called for. The bill has gone over under objection. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

PRESS CLUB BUILDING

Mr. KING. Mr. President, some time ago I objected, or, rather, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] objected, to the Press Club bill, after I had asked some time to present the case. I want to give notice that on Tuesday morning, during the morning hour, I shall ask for the consideration of the bill, which is on the calendar, for increasing the height of the Press Club Building beyond the present limit authorized by law. I hope that the Senator from Delaware will be here, because I want the responsibility to rest upon him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The notice will be entered.

DISTRICT BATHING BEACH

Mr. KING. I also wish to announce as to the bathing beach bill, that I shall ask the Appropriations Committee which is now considering the appropriation bill for the District to take that matter up before the bill is reported to the Senate.

STEAMSHIP "SAN LUCAR"

The bill (S. 1728) for the relief of the owners of the steamship San Lucar and of her cargo was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claims of the owners of the steamship San Lucar and the owners of her cargo for damages arising out of collision between said steamship and the United States steamship Tonopah, which occurred on or about February 18, 1919, in the Tagus River, at Lisbon, Portugal, may be submitted to the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due either for or against the United States, with costs, upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal.

Sec. 2. That should damages be found to be due from the United States to the owners of said steamship San Lucar or to the owners of her cargo, the amount of the final decree or decrees therefor shall be paid to said parties or to their proctors of record out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN IDAHO

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 171) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to approve the application of the State of Idaho to certain lands under an act entitled "An act to authorize the State of Idaho to exchange certain lands heretofore granted for public-school purposes for other Government lands," approved September 22, 1922, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CUSTOMS WAREHOUSE, SAN JUAN, P. R.

The bill (H. R. 9314) to provide for the enlargement of the present customs warehouse at San Juan, P. R., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the calendar.

GEORGE BARRETT

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Order of Business 195, Senate bill 3031, for the relief of George Barrett. I ask it because the man is dying of tuberculosis. Nothing is asked in his behalf except the correction of a record, and it is a case that is singularly appealing. The bill has been reported favorably without amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, their widows, and dependent relatives George Barrett, Army serial No. 1637071, who was a private of Battery F, Twelfth Field Artillery, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said battery and regiment on the 8d day of April, 1919: Provided, That no back pay or allowance of any kind shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. P. DALTON

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Order of Business No. 253, Senate bill 464, for the relief of W. P. Dalton. A similar bill passed the Senate in the last Congress, but got caught in the jam, and did not get through. It is one of the most meritorious bills that can come up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $5,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the payment in full of the claim of W. P. Dalton for injuries sustained at Laguna Dam, Ariz., on November 16, 1908, while in the employ of the United States Reclamation Service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENLARGEMENT OF TARGET RANGE AT AUBURN, ME.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to take up Order of Business 413, Senate bill 2876, for the purchase of a tract of land adjoining the United States target range at Auburn, Me.

This is a bill that I asked to have put over a short time ago. The bill provides for the expenditure of $3,000 for the purchase of land adjoining a Federal rifle range at Auburn, Me. The committee reported the bill with an amendment providing that the money should be taken out of funds allotted to the State of Maine by the United States from the appropriation "Arming, equipping, and training the National Guard," and I think there can be no objection to it.

Mr. KING. It does not increase the appropriation?

Mr. HALE. Oh, no; it comes out of the money already appropriated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 7, after the words "rifle range, and," to strike out "there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum not to exceed $3,000, to purchase the above-described property," and to insert "to purchase said property the Secretary of War is authorized to expend a sum not to exceed $3,000, from funds allotted to the State of Maine by the United States from the appropriation 'Arming, equipping, and training the National Guard,' for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase the tract of land adjoining the United States target range at Auburn, Me., comprising 84 acres, more or less, the property of the heirs of John Barron, for the purpose of adding to said rifle range, and to purchase said property the Secretary of War is authorized to expend a sum not to exceed $3,000, from funds allotted to the State of Maine by the United States from the appropriation "Arming, equipping, and training the National Guard," for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I understand that it is desired to have an executive session.

Mr. FESS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move, in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore entered into, that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock Monday.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.), under the order previously made, took a recess until Monday, April 12, 1926, at 12 o'clock m.

SENATE

Monday, April 12, 1926

(Legislative day of Monday, April 5, 1926)

The Senate reassembled at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President—

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ernst	Kendrick	Reed, Pa.	Willis

Mr. PHIPPS. I wish to announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. MEANS], is detained from the Senate by illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senate will receive a message from the President of the United States.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On April 9, 1926:

S. 3547. An act to change the title of Deputy Assistant Treasurer of the United States to Assistant Treasury of the United States.

On April 12, 1926:

S. 2029. An act to authorize the use by the city of Tucson, Ariz., of certain public lands for a municipal aviation field, and for other purposes.

RIGHTS OF AMERICAN CITIZENS IN MEXICO (S. DOC. 98)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith from the Secretary of State a copy of the official correspondence exchanged between the Governments of the United States and Mexico regarding the two laws regulating section 1 of article 27 of the Mexican constitution. In this connection reference is made to the resolution adopted by the Senate on March 6, 1926, in respect to an alleged serious dispute between the two Governments with regard to the rights of American citizens in certain oil lands in Mexico.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 12, 1926.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the governor of the Federal Reserve Board, transmitting, pursuant to law, the twelfth annual report of the board, covering operations for the year 1925, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3186) to promote the production of sulphur upon the public domain, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9690) to authorize the construction and procurement of aircraft and aircraft equipment in the Navy and Marine Corps, and to adjust and define the status of the operating personnel in connection therewith, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 8917. An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 61. Joint resolution authorizing the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago to enter into contracts for the erection of a building for its branch establishment in the city of Detroit, Mich.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I present a petition numerously signed by citizens of Lincoln County, Wyo., consisting of two short paragraphs. I ask that the body of the petition be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD without the names, as follows:

Counter petition

To the Congress of the United States:

Whereas it has been reported that certain petitions have been circulated and signed, demanding repeal of present prohibition laws, or amendments, so as to permit the sale and use of light liquors and wines; and

Whereas such legislation would amount to nothing more than experiment, which in all probability would only further the more flagrant violation, if possible, of restrictions or prohibition laws, and would make any kind of restrictions more difficult of enforcement than even the present laws:

Therefore, we, the undersigned citizens of the United States, residing in Lincoln County, Wyo., believing it would be a serious mistake to repeal present prohibition laws, or to amend them so as to permit light liquors and wines, do hereby respectfully petition the Congress of the United States to not in any way relax nor abridge present laws, but on the contrary to in every possible way more rigidly prohibit the manufacture, importation, and sale of intoxicating liquors, and to provide for more rigid law enforcement.

Mr. KENDRICK. I also present a memorial signed by Mrs. H. N. Robinson, Mrs. Verne St. John, and over 1,400 other citizens of my home town of Sheridan, Wyo. I ask that the body of the memorial be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD without the names, as follows:

We, the undersigned residents of Sheridan County, Wyo., of lawful age, knowing that the United States Congress is being petitioned to modify the national prohibition act to permit the manufacture and sale of light wines and beer, do hereby protest against such modification or otherwise weakening said law.

Mr. WARREN presented resolutions adopted by South Superior (Wyo.) Lodge, Slovene National Benefit Society, protesting against the enactment of legislation to provide for the registration of aliens, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition numerously signed by citizens of Hollis, Kans., praying for the passage of legislation granting increased pensions to Civil War veterans, their widows and dependents, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented petitions, numerously signed by citizens of Troy, Paola, and Wichita, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation granting increased pensions to veterans of the war with Spain, their widows and dependents, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BINGHAM presented a paper in the nature of a petition from the Clivian Club, of Bridgeport, Conn., favoring the passage of legislation providing a new post-office building at the city of Bridgeport, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a paper in the nature of a petition from camps of Sons of Union Veterans of the Civil War in New Haven, Derby, Ansonia, Seymour, Naugatuck, Waterbury, Thomaston, and Torrington, all in the State of Connecticut, favoring the passage of legislation granting increased pensions to veterans of the Civil War, their widows and dependents, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented papers in the nature of petitions from officers and members of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, No. 1783, of Winsted, and members of Sidney Beach Auxiliary, No. 11, United Spanish War Veterans, of Bridgeport, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the passage of legislation granting increased pensions to veterans of the war with Spain, their widows and dependents, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a telegram from Local No. 147, Post Office Clerks, of Hartford, Conn., favoring the passage of the so-called Lehlbach-Stanfield civil service retirement bill, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Connecticut branch of the National Association of Postal Supervisors, of New Haven, Conn., requesting the Connecticut delegation in Congress to use their best efforts to prevent "the shelving of the retirement bill at this session," which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Enfield Grange, No. 151, of Hartford, Conn., favoring the passage of House bill 6563, the so-called Dickinson bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Hartford Bird Study Club, of Hartford, Conn., praying for the passage of House bill 7479, to establish refuges for migratory birds, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a paper in the nature of a petition from the Hartford (Conn.) Chamber of Commerce, favoring the passage of Senate bill 4213 and House bill 747, relating to sales and contracts in interstate and foreign commerce, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a paper in the nature of a petition from Division No. 867, International Brotherhood Locomotive Engineers, of Waterbury, Conn., favoring the passage of the so-called railway labor bill, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a paper in the nature of a petition from the Federation of Parent-Teacher Associations, of Bridgeport, Conn., representing 22 separate associations, favoring the passage of the so-called Curtis-Reed bill, to establish a Federal department of education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a telegram and a paper in the nature of memorials from the Catholic Daughters of America, of Bridgeport, Conn., and L'Ordre des Forestiers Franco-Américains, of Woonsocket, R. I., protesting against the passage of the so-called Curtis-Reed bill, to establish a Federal department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Lodge No. 1 of the Fraternity of Royal Elephants, of Waterbury, Conn., expressing its disapproval of the so-called Volstead law and favoring the modification thereof, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a paper in the nature of a petition from the Stamford (Conn.) group of Epworth Leagues, favoring the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution and the laws relating thereto, without modification, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a paper in the nature of a petition from the New Haven (Conn.) Trades Council, favoring the passage of legislation restoring citizenship to Eugene V. Debs and also protesting against the passage of legislation providing for the finger printing of aliens, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions and papers in the nature of petitions from the Concordia Sick Benefit Society, of New Britain; General J. Putnam Unit of the General Steuben Society, of Greenwich; the German School Society, of New Britain; the Turners' Society, of New Britain; Carl Schurz Unit No. 22, Steuben Society, of Hartford; and the Teutonia Maennerchor (Inc.), of New Britain, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the passage of legislation providing for the return of seized alien property to its owners, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. COUZENS, from the Committee on Civil Service, to which was referred the bill (S. 3560) to authorize the granting of leave to ex-service men and women to attend the annual convention of the American Legion in Paris, France, in 1927, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 571) thereon.

Mr. GOODING, from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, to which was referred the bill (S. 3732) making appropriations for the Hillcrest and Black Canyon units of the Boise reclamation project, Idaho, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 572) thereon.

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 2477) to vacate certain streets and alleys within the area known as the Walter Reed General Hospital, District of Columbia; and to authorize the extension and widening of Fourteenth Street from Montague Street to its southern terminus south of Dahlia Street, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 573) thereon.

Mr. ODDIE, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 3759) authorizing issuance of patent to Richard Murphy, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 574) thereon.

Mr. HARRELD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9305) to amend paragraph 1 of section 101 of the Judicial Code, as amended, reported it with amendments.

Mr. STANFIELD, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 2761) for the relief of Nora B. Sherrier Johnson (Rept. No. 576);

A bill (H. R. 2797) for the relief of Mary M. Pride (Rept. No. 577);

A bill (H. R. 8534) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the purchase by the city of McMinnville, Ore., of certain lands formerly embraced in the grant to the Oregon & California Railroad Co. and vested in the United States by the act approved June 9, 1916," approved February 25, 1919 (40 Stat. p. 1153) (Rept. No. 578); and

A bill (H. R. 8817) reserving certain described lands in Coos County, Ore., as public parks and camp sites (Rept. No. 579).

AMENDMENT OF RULE XXXVIII

Mr. CURTIS. From the Committee on Rules, I report back with an amendment the resolution (S. Res. 188) to amend paragraph 2 of Rule XXXVIII of the Standing Rules of the Senate relative to nominations, and I submit a report (No. 575) thereon. The committee was instructed to report back within seven days and I had intended to submit the report on last Saturday, but I understand the seven-day limit does not expire until to-day.

The amendment proposed by the Committee on Rules was to strike out all after line 3 of the resolution, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

2. All information communicated or remarks made by a Senator when acting upon nominations concerning the character or qualifications of the person nominated shall be kept secret, but all votes upon any nomination shall be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD whenever the Senate by a majority vote shall so order. If, however, charges shall be made against a person nominated, the committee may, in its discretion, notify such nominee thereof, but the name of the person making such charges shall not be disclosed. The fact that a nomination has been made, or that it has been confirmed or rejected, shall not be regarded as a secret. This rule shall not apply to a Senator making public his own vote.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. In the same connection I offer the following amendment in the nature of a substitute for the resolution as reported by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

Strike out paragraph 2 of rule 38 and insert:

"Hereafter nominations made by the President to the Senate shall be considered and voted on in open session except when otherwise ordered by a majority vote of the Senate."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution reported by the Senator from Kansas and the amendment in the nature of a substitute submitted by the Senator from Arkansas will be printed and the resolution will be placed on the calendar.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

Mr. GREENE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that to-day that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 61) authorizing the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago to enter into contracts for the erection of a building for its branch establishment in the city of Detroit, Mich.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. EDGE:

A bill (S. 3954) for the relief of Lewis C. Hopkins & Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McMASTER:

A bill (S. 3955) granting a pension to George C. Widlon; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 3956) for the relief of Lawrence McCreanor; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GOFF:

A bill (S. 3957) granting an increase of pension to Orlen K. Tillman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HARRELD (by request):

A bill (S. 3958) to provide for the permanent withdrawal of certain lands adjoining the Makah Indian Reservation in Washington for the use and occupancy of the Makah and Quileute Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3959) to increase the salaries of the chief justice and the associate justices of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 3960) granting an increase of pension to Charles A. Bills; and

A bill (S. 3961) granting an increase of pension to Cynthia Rudler Osgood; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. REED of Missouri:

A bill (S. 3962) for the relief of Busch-Sulzer Bros.-Diesel Engine Co. (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. STANFIELD:

A bill (S. 3963) to provide for the protection, development, and utilization of the public lands in Alaska by establishing an adequate system for grazing livestock thereon; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 3964) for the relief of Buel J. Fenton (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 3965) to establish a national military park at the battle field of Stone River, Tenn.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 91) directing the Secretary of War to allot war trophies to the American Legion Museum; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STEPHENS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 92) consenting that certain States may sue the United States, and providing for trial on the merits in any suit brought hereunder by a State to recover direct taxes alleged to have been illegally collected by the United States during the years 1866, 1867, and 1868, and vesting the right in each State to sue in its own name; to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO RIVERS AND HARBORS BILL

Mr. FLETCHER submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 11176) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8908) granting the consent of Congress to George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge, a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Potomac River; requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. DENISON, Mr. BURNES, and Mr. PARKS were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT OF THE SOUTH

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a clipping in regard to the industrial development of the South, taken from the Washington Herald of yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered. The clipping is as follows:

[From the Washington Herald, April 11, 1926]

SOUTHERN BUILDING ACTIVITY CONTINUES

No indications of a let-up in the tremendous building activities of Florida and the entire South are in sight, according to the official building reports for the 12 Southern States made public to-day by S. W. Straus & Co.

Of special interest are the reports from Florida, showing that building activities in all parts of that State are not only continuing along former spectacular lines, but are rapidly gaining momentum.

In the 132 leading southern cities, building permits amounting to $54,920,131 were issued in March. In the 83 cities which submitted comparable figures, there was a gain of 29 per cent over March, 1925, and of 34 per cent the first quarter of the year.

The 60 principal Florida cities issued $20,827,877 in March building permits. Nineteen of these centers submitted comparable figures, showing a gain of 98 per cent over last March, and of 92 per cent for the quarter.

Amazing building activities continued in Miami where building permits of $3,330,923 were filed in March, a gain of 28 per cent over the same month a year ago. Since the 1st of January Miami's building declarations have totaled $10,925,936, a 48 per cent increase over the same period a year ago. Houston was a close second to Miami among the southern cities, and Louisville a very creditable third. Among the 25 leading building cities of the South 7 were in Florida, 5 in North Carolina, and 4 in Texas.

Among the southern cities where very unusual building activities are pending, as revealed by the Straus reports, are Birmingham, Memphis, Dallas, Fort Worth, Amarillo, San Antonio, New Orleans, Greensboro, Charlotte, Winston-Salem, Asheville, High Point, Atlanta, St. Petersburg, Tampa, Jacksonville, Fort Lauderdale, West Palm Beach, and Coral Gables.

SENATOR FROM IOWA

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 194) declaring Daniel F. Steck to be a duly elected Senator of the United States from the State of Iowa for the term beginning March 4, 1925, reported by Mr. EARNST from the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Goff] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, I note that both the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] are present. I have been recognized as entitled to the floor, but inasmuch as the affirmative is upon those supporting the majority report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections I feel that I should have the opportunity, speaking for the committee, to close the debate. I would, therefore, at this time like to make such an arrangement as may be with the two Senators to whom I have referred to permit a division properly of the time and have them precede me with such speeches as they feel advised they desire to make with reference to the case now before the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, speaking for myself, I had not expected to make any speech on the subject. I may take 15 minutes during the 15-minute limit period, but I had not anticipated speaking longer than that. The matter has been gone over so thoroughly and presented on both sides in such great detail that at this time I doubt if anything would be gained by one not on the committee undertaking to cover the ground again. There are two controlling propositions in the controversy, as it seems to me, on which I may speak briefly, but not at length.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I had understood that the Senator from West Virginia desired to speak at this time, and I gave notice that I would follow him. Subsequently I had a conversation with the Senator, in which he very courteously said to me that he was willing fairly to divide the time, a proposition which I very much appreciated, but I had expected the Senator to proceed this morning and that I would follow him. My papers are not exactly in shape, but if I can be indulged long enough to send to my office and the Senator prefers that I should precede him I will do so, because I think his proposition that the burden is upon the majority to make out the case is perhaps sound and that he is entitled to follow me, if, indeed, anything I may say is worthy of his reply.

Mr. GOFF. I think that course would be very agreeable to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and especially to those signing the majority report. I should appreciate it very much if the Senator from Missouri, who, I understand, is the only one on the minority side who desires to make an extended address, would proceed with his address.

Mr. REED of Missouri. If the Senator will give me time enough to get my papers from my office, I will do so, otherwise I shall have to follow the Senator when he gets through.

Mr. GOFF. That course is perfectly agreeable to the Senator from West Virginia, if the Senate will agree to it.

THIRD WORLD'S POULTRY CONGRESS AT OTTAWA, CANADA

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in the meantime I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry favorably, without amendment, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 213) for participation of the United States in the Third World's Poultry Congress, to be held at Ottawa, Canada, in 1927. I submit a report (No. 570) thereon and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, let it first be read for the information of the Senate; or will the Senator state what it is?

Mr. NORRIS. I can explain the joint resolution more briefly than the reading of the report, because the report contains considerable correspondence and several extracts from the President's message.

In March the President sent a message to Congress asking Congress to provide for the participation on the part of the Agricultural Department in an international poultry congress which will meet in 1927 at Ottawa, Canada. This joint resolution provides for an exhibit of the progress and present condition of the poultry industry in the United States to be made by our Government.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Nebraska at that point?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. MOSES. Is the message to which the Senator alludes the one which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, following which the Senator from Massachusetts introduced a joint resolution providing for our participation in that congress?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I rather think it is. The message was referred, as was the joint resolution offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, to the Committee on Foreign Relations. No objection was made to the resolution there, but in the meantime a similar joint resolution was introduced in the House of Representatives and referred there to the Committee on Agriculture. The joint resolution passed the House and came over to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate.

Mr. MOSES. And the joint resolution has been favorably reported by that committee?

Mr. NORRIS. The joint resolution has been favorably reported, and I will say to the Senator that it also has the approval of the Senator from Massachusetts, who introduced the joint resolution which went to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

tions. I desire also to say that it authorizes an appropriation of $20,000. I think it only fair to make that statement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Does the joint resolution provide for an appropriation or merely authorize an appropriation to be made?

Mr. NORRIS. The joint resolution authorizes an appropriation of $20,000.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Will the Senator once again state for what the joint resolution provides? There was so much noise in the Chamber I could not hear his statement.

Mr. NORRIS. The joint resolution provides for participation on behalf of the Agricultural Department in an international poultry congress, which is to meet at Ottawa, Canada, in 1927.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is the joint resolution unanimously reported?

Mr. NORRIS. It is.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, is the Senator from Nebraska asking for immediate action on the joint resolution?

Mr. NORRIS. I am asking for immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I desire to say in that connection that I think the Foreign Relations Committee favorably reported the joint resolution, which was referred to that committee.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not looked up that matter, but, as I remember, the Senator from Massachusetts, in a conversation with me, said that the Committee on Foreign Relations had not acted.

Mr. SWANSON. I thought that committee had acted. They were favorable to the measure and thought it ought to be adopted.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President—

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. I hope that the request of the Senator from Nebraska for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution will prevail. I doubt if the average American citizen realizes what an enormous business is involved in the poultry industry. In my State we consume $200,000,000 worth every year. So it is a matter of importance.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it is in size the third industry in the United States.

Mr. COPELAND. I think it is the third.

Mr. SACKETT. It ranks fifth.

Mr. COPELAND. I hope the joint resolution may be considered and passed and that the appropriation may be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the invitation of the Government of Canada to the United States to send delegates and an exhibit to the Third World's Poultry Congress, to be held at Ottawa, Canada, during July and August, 1927, be accepted.

SEC. 2. That the President is hereby authorized to designate official delegates to enable the United States to participate in the proposed congress.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to prepare and install a suitable national exhibit for display at the proposed congress, portraying in a correlated manner the fundamental features concerning the organization and development of the poultry industry of the United States, including the broad problems of production, distribution, and marketing of poultry and poultry products, and the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purpose of preparing, transporting, and demonstrating such an exhibit.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, DISTRICT OF MONTANA

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, on Saturday last the Senate passed the bill (H. R. 5701) to designate the times and places of holding terms of the United States District Court for the District of Montana. I had intended to offer from the floor an amendment to the bill, but I was unavoidably absent at the time. One place for holding court was inadvertently left out. I ask unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the action of the Senate by which the bill was reported to the Senate as amended, the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole concurred in, the amendment ordered to be engrossed, the bill ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WALSH. Now I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask if the bill referred to has been transmitted to the House of Representatives?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that it has not been.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. On page 2, line 3, after the name "Great Falls," in the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, I move to insert the name "Billings."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

SENATOR FROM IOWA

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 194) declaring Daniel F. Steck to be a duly elected Senator of the United States from the State of Iowa for the term beginning March 4, 1925, reported by Mr. EAKES from the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I wish to confine my remarks to two or three major propositions and I shall endeavor to limit myself so as to give the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GORE] as much time as I shall occupy.

Mr. President, it seems to me that in approaching this question all of us ought to have but one desire, and that is to decide the case according to the law and the evidence. I have no patience with any argument or talk based upon matters of political consideration; indeed, I think this is a case that peculiarly is removed from the realm of political advantage, for I do not know what we would gain as Democrats by trading off a man who investigated Daugherty and Fall and others for a man who steadfastly criticized that investigation, who denounced it in his campaign in the State of Iowa, and who evidently held to the view that the investigation should not have been made at all, or, if undertaken, should have been made in some other way. But politics or political advantage or disadvantage is not to be here considered. We are to decide which one of these two men the State of Iowa elected to the high office of Senator. We are to decide it without passion, without prejudice, and without favor.

I regret exceedingly that upon this matter I find myself in antagonism with Senators for whom I entertain the highest regard and respect and particularly that I find myself in opposition to the views expressed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

Mr. President, we are here governed by the Constitution of the United States and by the law of Iowa. If we do not follow the Constitution and if we do not follow the law of Iowa, we then are substituting our will for the legally expressed will of the people of the State of Iowa. I can find no warrant for that; and I desire to call the attention of the Senate merely by way of preliminary to the pertinent provisions of the Constitution:

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of Senators from each State—

And as it originally read—chosen by the legislature thereof—

And as it now reads—

elected by the people thereof.

They, not the Senate, choose the Senators.

Then under the heading of qualifications the Constitution provides:

No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the age of 30 years, and been 9 years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

The times, places, and the manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law—

Not by resolution of the Senate; but "by law"— make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members.

We have reserved the right in the Constitution to pass upon the qualifications, and those qualifications are set forth in the Constitution and are our guide. That is all that section 5 means as it applies to qualifications. Another right we have is to decide who is elected. Elected how? Elected under and pursuant to the laws of the State that is authorized to pass the laws. Congress can not interpose its will; Congress can not interfere with the State's right except in one way and that is by the enactment of a law—not by the voice or vote of one branch of the Congress.

I say, with all the respect in the world for the opinion of others, that if the Senate undertakes to say that a man is elected who is not elected according to the laws of the State from which he comes, then the Senate has usurped the powers and functions which the Constitution has placed solemnly in the people of the State who send here the man seeking a seat in this body.

It is as much an act of usurpation as if we were utterly to ignore everything done in the State and proceed ourselves to declare elected some man who might not even have been voted for in his State.

When the State of Iowa comes to act, it passes a law. It prescribes the rules and regulations under which the election shall be held. It fixes the qualifications of the voter. It tells the kind of ballot he shall cast. It tells how he shall mark that ballot. It tells the manner in which the ballot shall be preserved. It tells how the ballot shall be counted. It tells how the returns shall be certified and finally ascertained. So that with all of those questions the State of Iowa alone is authorized to deal; and if we can interfere in any respect and say that, in our opinion, the law ought to have been different, or that, in our opinion, a ballot ought to be counted which was not cast in accordance with the law, then we are substituting the will of one branch of Congress for the will of a sovereign State, and we are doing it in the teeth of the Constitution of the United States.

I therefore say that the law of Iowa must be followed in this matter.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am not going to decline to yield to my brother Senators; but, as I have limited my time, I wish that I might simply answer a question without going into an argument.

Mr. CARAWAY. The question I desire to ask is this: Does the Senator mean that every ballot should have been scrutinized under the law of Iowa and only legal ballots counted, and that if there was any irregularity that should bar the ballot?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I think the ballot must be cast in accordance with the law of the State of Iowa.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then, if I may ask the Senator just one more question, does the Senator realize that if that rule had prevailed Steck would have won by 2,740 votes?

Mr. REED of Missouri. That he would have won is the Senator's construction.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator has not seen the ballots, has he?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Oh, no. I am laying my premise here; I think it is perfectly sound, and I do not agree at all with the conclusion of my good friend from Arkansas.

Mr. President, much has been said about the intent of a voter. When the law expressly states how the intent shall be expressed you must follow that law, or if you do not you are in a maze of absolute uncertainty.

It is true that there is a limited field within which the intent may be ascertained by the act of the voter himself. For instance, let us suppose that a man wrote in the name "Brookhart" instead of writing Brookhart's initials. As there was only one Brookhart running, there would be no difficulty in ascertaining who was meant. I am speaking now of the way in which the ballots shall be cast, the way in which they shall be counted, and how they shall be marked. Those things are matters of substantive law, and we can not set them aside without saying that our will is superior to the law of the State and without going into a perfect labyrinth of speculation and of guesswork.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator pardon me just one minute?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. The law of Iowa declares that—

Mr. REED of Missouri. I will pardon the Senator for a question but I can not pardon him for an argument.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not want to make an argument.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The other day the Senator spoke when his time was unlimited, and I have agreed with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Gorr] to limit my remarks; so I must hurry.

Mr. CARAWAY. I just want to suggest that the law says the name shall appear but once upon a ballot, and yet where Brookhart's name is written in it appears twice on every one of those ballots; and yet the Senator counts those votes.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Oh, Mr. President, that clause of the law clearly did not cover any such case as the Senator has put.

Mr. CARAWAY. When it said "twice," I thought it meant it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. You can give an absurd construction to the Lord's Prayer if you want to, but it is hardly necessary to do it. That related to the printing of the ballots, of course.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator what makes him say that?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I will yield for a question, and I would yield for an interminable and endless argument if it were not that I have agreed with the Senator from West Virginia to give him some time, and I am going to keep the faith.

Mr. President, there is another thing that I want to do. The first thing that I want to call attention to is the law of Iowa. There is a misapprehension created here by the arguments that have been made.

The laws of Iowa may be peculiar, but there they are. If a man wants to vote, let us say, a straight Republican ticket, he can do so by putting a mark in the circle at the top. That is one way to vote; or he need put no mark in the circle at the top, and can put a mark in the square opposite each name. That is another way in which he can vote a straight ticket. There is a third way in which he can vote a straight ticket. He can place a cross in the circle at the top of the ticket, and also place a cross in any or all of the squares beneath the circle. That is the plain language of the statute, and I want to emphasize it so that everybody will understand it. The third way, if you want to vote a straight ticket, is to place a cross in the circle at the top, and then you can go down the line, under the absolute letter of the statute itself, and place a mark opposite one of the names or two of the names or two-thirds of the names or all the names but one, and it is still a straight ticket. That is the law of the State of Iowa, and no man who has read that law will challenge my statement.

There is a method provided whereby, for example, a Republican so desiring need not vote the entire ticket and yet not vote for any Democrat. All the names he does want to vote for are on that ticket, but there are also some he does not want to vote for. The law in that respect reads:

If the names of all the candidates for whom the voter desires to vote appear upon a single ticket but he does not desire to vote for all the candidates whose names appear thereon, he shall place a cross in the square opposite the name of each such candidate for whom he desires to vote without making any cross in the circle at the top of such ticket.

To illustrate: If a Republican in Iowa desired to vote for every man on the Republican ticket but Brookhart, under the law he made a cross in the square opposite each name on the Republican ticket except the name of Brookhart, but he did not make a cross in the circle at the top of the ticket. This would then have been a straight Republican vote with the exception of Brookhart and there would be no vote cast either for or against Brookhart.

On the other hand, if the voter did place a cross in the circle at the top and then proceeded down the ticket, making a cross opposite the names of all of the candidates except Brookhart, the vote would be counted for Brookhart because the cross in the circle in itself under the law constituted a vote for every man on the ticket whether the cross appear opposite the name or not. When the cross is made in the circle at the top, then the cross made opposite the names of any candidate on that ticket is mere surplusage.

Again, if this same Republican desired to vote all of the Republican ticket except Brookhart and desired to vote against Brookhart, he could employ either one of two methods. He could place a cross in the circle at the top of the ticket without making any cross opposite the names of the candidates on the Republican ticket. He could then go over to the Democratic ticket and make a cross opposite the name of Steck. This would constitute a vote for Steck. Or he could employ the second method, viz, he could omit any mark in the circle at the top of the Republican ticket and go down the Republican ticket, placing a cross opposite each candidate except Brookhart and could then go across to the Democratic ticket and make a cross in front of Steck's name. This would constitute a vote for the entire Republican ticket except Brookhart and would also constitute a vote for Steck.

Mr. President, there is not any question on earth about that being the law of the State of Iowa. No man can rise in his place and successfully challenge any statement I have made.

There is another rule by which we are to determine this election, namely, presumption and burden of proof. The official count gave to Brookhart a majority of 755 votes. He has been duly commissioned as a Member of this body. The absolute presumption of law is that he is here with good right and title, and that presumption of law must stand until it is overcome by competent evidence, and if the evidence has not been produced we have no more right to seat a man who has not proven his title to the seat than we have to seat any other stranger. The question of determination of this evidence was solemnly submitted to the Senate for decision on its merits.

Mr. President, we can not substitute for proof either our own guess or the admission of the contestee or the stipulations of the contestee. Nor can we decide the case without competent evidence, even though the contestee has failed to make timely objections. His failure can not supply the lack of proof. Nor can his failure confer title to the office of Senator upon a man who fails to prove his right to a seat here. Men get here because they are elected in accordance with the law, not because of a technical omission or failure of their opponents. Is it necessary to argue that proposition?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. REED of Missouri. For a question; yes.

Mr. NEELY. In view of the Senator's sweeping statement, will he not permit me to inquire if he thinks that Lorimer and Newberry became Members of the Senate according to law?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not think they got here according to law. I say that men get here because they are elected according to the law. They can not get here because of a stipulation or agreement, or the failure of their opponents, or anybody else, to present evidence, or to object in time.

Mr. NEELY. Then it does not follow, from the Senator's earlier observation, that he means that everyone who comes here with a certificate of election has necessarily been legally elected.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I have never made any statement susceptible of that kind of construction. I am sure the Senator will bear me out in that.

Mr. NEELY. The Senator made the broad statement that one "gets here" according to law.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes, and no man is elected according to law who buys his way into this body. He is elected contrary to law.

Mr. NEELY. I, of course, concur in that opinion. My purpose in interrogating the Senator was to ascertain whether his broad premise means that when one presents his certificate of election to the Senate, as Senator Brookhart has done, a conclusive presumption of the validity of the election of the person holding the certificate arises.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I made no such statement. I made the statement—and if the Senator will follow me closely he will not be in error, as he is this time—that a man with a certificate comes clothed with the presumption that he is here according to law, but that presumption may be rebutted by evidence, and only by evidence, and not by stipulation or agreement, and not by any technical failure to make an objection at a particular time.

Mr. NEELY. Does the Senator contend that there is not sufficient evidence in this case to justify the Committee on Privileges and Elections in finding that Mr. Steck was duly elected a Member of the Senate?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I will come to the question of evidence later on. I claim that there is no evidence that will warrant the finding of the majority of the committee.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. It becomes obvious that those who assert that a stipulation can put Mr. Steck into the Senate, by irresistible logic must admit that a stipulation, ergo, would have put Mr. Lorimer into the Senate.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes; and that is a very good illustration. Suppose there had been a contestant in the Lorimer case, and he had come here and solemnly admitted that Lorimer was here lawfully, and suppose the evidence before the Senate had been just what we afterwards found it to be; what would we have done with that sort of an agreement except cast it out as utterly unworthy of consideration?

The right to hold the office can only spring from an election by the people. It can not be conferred by the mistake of Brookhart or by his failure to make an objection. The public is the real party, not Brookhart or Steck. They are but two individuals. But the question we must settle is the right of a man to sit as a member of a legislative body which controls the affairs of a great nation, whether he is of right entitled to be a part of the Government of the United States; and that question can not be settled on the failure of some individual at a particular moment to make an objection. I shall come to the question of the evidence after a while.

To overcome the presumptions aforesaid, competent evidence must be produced. Absent frauds; this may be done by counting all of the ballots or by counting enough ballots to demonstrate that if all of the ballots were present and counted against the contestant he would, nevertheless, be elected.

Perhaps I can make that somewhat clearer. It must be proven that all of the ballots have been produced, and that by a count of those ballots it is found that the contestant is entitled to the seat, or, if there are any ballots absent, the number must be small enough so that if they were all counted for the contestee the contestant would win anyway. To illustrate, if there were 5,000 ballots short, and the contestant had, on the ballots that were produced, 6,000 majority, then manifestly the 5,000 ballots would be immaterial, because they would not change the result.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. REED of Missouri. After I finish the sentence. But if the contestant, on the face of the ballots, wins by only 1,000 votes, and there are 5,000 ballots absent, it can not be said that the ballots show he is elected, because there is a failure to produce the other 5,000 ballots, and they might change the result, the presumption being that the man is rightfully in his place, he having the official count back of him. The presumption is that those ballots were favorable to him, and it is a conclusive and absolute presumption when the evidence is not here to rebut it.

Now I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator, but it is unnecessary now, because the Senator has so clearly stated the rule that I can add nothing to what he has said.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Now, I come to another proposition, to which I invite the attention of the lawyers in this body particularly. Before the ballots can be counted, before they can be received in evidence at all, before they become competent evidence for any purpose, there must be strict proof that the ballots have been properly preserved. There must be a prima facie showing that they have not been tampered with, that they have been kept in the proper custody. If those matters are not shown, then there are only fugitive pieces of paper, not properly avouched, and they can not be received in evidence under the decision of any respectable authority in the United States. That is settled by a large line of decisions, and I can cite the authorities if Senators want them; it is so stated by McCreary on Elections, by Cooley on Constitutional Limitations, and by a very well-reasoned case in the State of Arkansas (50 Ark. 1, c. 94), and by a multitude of other cases, all to the same import. There must be a prima facie showing. The committee is in the same situation that a man is in who comes into court basing his case upon a written document. Before he can introduce a written document he must prove that it is signed by the parties, or he must show there was such a document and that it is lost. He must authenticate the instrument. These three-quarters of a million pieces of paper called ballots can not be counted as such ballots until there has been preliminary proof that they were the ballots cast in that election. No such proof was offered in this case. The only thing that anywhere nearly approximates it is a certificate by the auditor that the inclosed ballots were sealed by him and sent here. There is no evidence that they are all the ballots. There is no evidence that they were delivered to him in the manner and form provided by law. There is no evidence whatever that ballots have not been lost, that ballots have not been destroyed, that ballots may not have been tampered with, or that the ballots were held in strict custody as provided by the laws of Iowa.

When we come to technicalities, which are appealed to so vehemently here against Brookhart, I interpose, not a technicality, but a substantive principle of law that has absolutely not been met in this case. Mr. Steck simply failed to prove his case in that regard. How he came to do it, with the general attorney of the Ku-Klux Klan to represent him, I do not know, but I know that if I had been trying this case, or if my distinguished friend from West Virginia had been trying this case, the first thing we would have thought of when we brought in the ballots would have been to prove their custody, to prove that these were the ballots, and that these were all of the ballots; and if any of them were missing, we would have accounted for the missing ballots; and we would have proceeded to show how the parties voted, if it had been possible to do so. There is an absolute failure of proof in that behalf.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield for a question.

Mr. NEELY. If the Senator had been a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and the contestant and the contestee had brought 989,000 ballots to the committee and in effect certified that those ballots had been duly cast, and that they were the source of the contest we are considering, would the Senator, on his own motion, have gone to Iowa and taken proof to establish the fact that there had been no tampering with the ballots, if no irregularity in connection with them had been suggested?

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, there was a suggestion of that sort, to begin with. In the next place—

Mr. NEELY. I challenge the Senator to find such suggestion in the record.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I will show it before I get through, and show it conclusively by the record. But, in addition to that, these people never came here and made any such statement as that "these are the ballots cast in this election."

Mr. NEELY. Not in words—

Mr. REED of Missouri. No; and not in any other way.

Mr. NEELY. The record shows that they did.

Mr. GEORGE rose.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I must insist that I can not argue this with Senators. I will yield for any proper question. I would argue it with Senators, but I promised the Senator from West Virginia to give him time to close, and I am going to try to do that.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. I merely wanted to ask the Senator what his attitude would be if Brookhart himself came in and said, "We desire that you count these ballots," and helped us to count the ballots.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I did not hear the question.

Mr. GEORGE. What would have been the Senator's attitude if Senator Brookhart himself had come to the committee and asked if we would meet and count these ballots and had actually himself participated in the count of the ballots?

Mr. REED of Missouri. My attitude would have been this: That the burden of proof was upon the contestant, and that he must supply that proof. If he did not supply that proof, when he got through I would have told him that he had not proven his case.

Mr. GEORGE. Then you would not have allowed Senator Brookhart to count the ballots?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I would have allowed anybody to stand, under proper surveillance, and count the ballots, if he wanted to, and he might offer them until he was black in the face, but, unless there was the showing required by law as to the validity of the ballots, I would not have accepted them as against the official return.

Mr. GEORGE. Then the Senator would have permitted him to count them and would not have bound him by what he found?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am not binding him. I am talking about binding the Senate. I care nothing for Brookhart in the matter, and I care nothing for Steck. Mr. Brookhart is here with a certificate of election, with a certificate from the authorities of his State that he is entitled to his seat, and the burden is upon Mr. Steck under every decision of every court to prove his right to the seat.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me read to the Senator just one sentence. That is all I ask to read from an Iowa case, the case of De Long against Brown, One hundred and thirteenth Iowa:

The preliminary proof, unless waived, is essential to the competency of the ballots.

If a contestee can not waive it when he himself goes and counts the ballots, then how could it be waived?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I say it can not be waived, and I say that in this case it was not waived as to the vital issues to which I now come.

Mr. President, there are three principal disputes in the case. The first one is that 1,323 straight Republican ballots, where the circle was marked and some of the squares on the ticket, but not the square in front of Brookhart's name, were not counted for Brookhart. Here I want to invite the especial attention of the Senator from Georgia. Class 3 of the classes which the lawyers in the case made out were votes where the voter marked a cross in the circle at the top of the Democratic ballot and then, proceeding down the ballot, marked a cross in the square in front of certain of the names on the ticket, but failed to put a cross in the square in front of Steck's name. Of these votes Steck got 1,163 and Brookhart conceded them to him, did he not?

Mr. GEORGE. I did not understand the Senator. I thought the Senator was discussing the 1,344 votes.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Class three ballots, as specified by the lawyers, are ballots where the voter marked a cross in the circle at the top of the Democratic ballot and marked a cross in the square in front of certain of the names of the candidates on the Democratic ticket, but failed to put a cross in the square in front of Steck's name. Of these votes there were 1,163 in favor of Steck and 14 in favor of Brookhart.

Mr. GEORGE. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that I do not recall the particular classification 3 because I have never bothered myself about any of those votes, agreeing with the Senator from Missouri, so far as that goes, on how those votes should be counted.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I know the Senator did, and I wanted to get the Senator's statement on this point. My understanding from the record is, and if I am wrong I will be corrected right now, I hope, that when they came to count those ballots they found of the Democratic ballots that there were 1,163 that had a cross in the circle at the top and then a cross in the square opposite the names of certain candidates, but there was no cross opposite the name of Steck; that Steck's representatives claimed the benefit of those ballots and that Brookhart conceded them to Steck and 1,163 of them were counted for Steck, and only 14 for Brookhart.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, just to show the inconsistency of that statement, how could there be 14 for Brookhart with no cross in front of anybody's name, when there was a cross in the circle at the top of the Democratic ticket? It would answer itself that there could be no such ballot as that, and there was not any such ballot as that.

Mr. REED of Missouri. We ought to be able to agree on the facts.

Mr. CARAWAY. We could.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator wants to say something unpleasant?

Mr. CARAWAY. If that is unpleasant, let it go for an unpleasantness.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Certainly; we will let it go any way the Senator wants to.

Mr. CARAWAY. Absolutely. I am tired of this everlasting trying to lecture somebody about being unpleasant.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator has a perfect right to entertain a weary feeling any time he sees fit.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am going to exercise that right.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I decline to yield to the Senator any further.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator need not do it, because I am tired of that kind of lecturing.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Missouri will yield to me.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do. I asked the Senator from Georgia a civil question and I know I am going to get a civil answer.

Mr. CARAWAY. If that has application to me, the Senator will have to address me and not somebody else when he wants to talk to me.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I shall have to call the Senator from Arkansas to order pretty soon.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course.

Mr. GEORGE. The third class of ballots were conceded by both Steck and Brookhart, and there were 1,163 votes claimed by and conceded to Steck and 14 claimed by and conceded to Brookhart. The challenge, whatever it was in that particular class of votes, was identical; that is to say, the challenge leveled by each party was upon the same kind of ballot.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Those were 1,163 votes on the Democratic ballot where there was a cross in the circle at the top and where there were crosses opposite certain names on the Democratic ticket, but there was no cross opposite Steck's name. Mr. Steck desired to have them counted for him. Mr. Brookhart conceded it was fair to count them for him and the challenge was withdrawn.

Now I come to class 5; and what were the ballots in that class? They were ballots where the voter had marked a cross in the circle at the top of the Republican ticket and also had marked a cross opposite the names of certain Republican candidates, but failed to put a cross in front of Mr. Brook-hart's name or Steck's name. The two cases were identical. There is not a hair's shadow between them. Of these votes there were 3,834, but Mr. Steck withdrew his challenge to all of them except 1,344. But why did he let his challenge stand as to the rest of them, amounting to 1,344? The cases were identical except in this particular, that as to those 1,344 votes on which he stood on his challenge most of them had a cross opposite all of the names but Brookhart's, but there was none opposite his name. Nevertheless the principle is identical. We can not cure the defect, if it was a fatal defect, by making an admission as to two or three or four other names.

Mr. Steck, having taken the advantage of Mr. Brookhart's withdrawal of his challenge, having had counted for himself these names that were on his ticket marked with a circle at the top and no cross opposite his name, proceeds to insist on a challenge against Brookhart for exactly the same kind of votes that appear in favor of Brookhart. Talk about waiver! Talk about estoppel! Talk to me about fair dealing on the part of a man who takes the advantage of every vote that is cast for him where there is a circle at the top and none opposite his name, and then denies the application of the same rule to his opponent and wants to cut him out of thirteen hundred and odd votes! No wonder the Senator from Georgia, who is always a fair man—he may not always be right, because none of us are, but he wants to be fair—counts those 1,323 or 1,344 votes for Brookhart. When he takes it out of the case with those facts back of his decision to which I have just called attention, what man is there in the Senate who has the temerity to say when we are deciding the rule the question of who was elected, not on what Brookhart did or what Steck did, that we will throw out the same votes that were counted for Steck, exactly the same character of votes?

That reduces the case down to a question of 74 or 75 votes. That is the end of those thirteen hundred and odd votes according to my judgment. I want to discuss the question as dispassionately as I am able to. I certainly have not any feeling in it—and I want to say to my friend from Arkansas that I do not think there ought to be any feeling between him and me about it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, the Senator is exceedingly wrong about his statements; but he did not want me to correct him about them and showed a good deal of impatience about it, and I thought the Senator was trying to lecture me.

Mr. REED of Missouri. It was just the Senator's manner.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am not much inclined to be lectured by anybody if I can help it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I have never tried to lecture the Senator.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then I just misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Now, we are down to 76 votes, and according to another set of figures to 26 votes. Let us see what we can do about those votes.

There are five precincts in which the votes varied materially from the poll books. The official count was taken in one of those precincts. There were one hundred and ninety-odd votes short, and therefore the judges said or the counters said or somebody down here said: "We will have to take the official count; the ballots are not here." That was logical; that was right; it was perfectly manifest that if the ballots are not there there is no evidence to dispute the official count unless we put in extraneous evidence, which was not done in this case. By taking the official count in Winterset Township over the ballots that were there Mr. Steck gained 34 votes. All right. There was another township, the second ward.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me just a moment? I am sure the Senator does not want it to go into the Record that Mr. Steck gained 37 votes in the first precinct of Winterset, because the official count was taken there?

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is what I say. The official count was that much better than the votes that were in the box.

Mr. CARAWAY. I thought the Senator stated it the other way.

Mr. REED of Missouri. That is the way I stated it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I know the way the Senator stated it, and I think the Senator was in error.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. Steck gained by virtue of the official count being taken in that precinct, but then we go over to Emmet County and there turns up the second ward in Estherville Township, where there are 20 ballots missing. What are we going to do there? Again the ballots are not there. The committee took the official count before and the parties agreed to it; Steck agreed to it, if that counts for anything; Brookhart agreed to it. The committee established there the rule that where the ballots were missing they would take the official count, and rightly, because the presumption is that the official count is correct, and when the ballots are not at hand it is certain that there is no evidence to overcome that presumption. They did not take the official count as to Estherville. Then they hunted around and found in a separate package 34 more ballots which the auditors sent down in a separate package, stating that they belonged in that precinct. Clearly they had not been kept together; clearly the law had not been observed; clearly there was every kind of an opportunity for tampering with those ballots in the State of Iowa before they reached Washington. The committee proceeded in that case to count the ballots and that made a difference against Brookhart of 61 votes. If they had taken the official count, as they did in the other case, he would have had 61 votes more than he is given. That wipes out nearly all of the 76 majority for Steck.

Let us go to Bear Grove Township in Guthrie County. There were 20 ballots missing. Again the same situation was presented; and, again, instead of taking the official count, they proceeded to count such ballots as were there. What about the missing ones? For whom were they cast? That made a difference against Brookhart of 21 votes, and the whole 76 votes for Steck are gone; they are wiped out, sir.

Again we come to Center Township, Wapello County, the ninth precinct of Ottumwa. There are 22 ballots missing. Again they refused to take the official count; they counted the ballots and disregarded the missing ballots. That made a difference against Brookhart of 41 votes. Give him those and the 76 votes for Steck have been entirely overcome and there is a majority for Brookhart.

Again take Jackson Township in Lee County, the second precinct. There are 12 ballots more than names on the poll book—12 ballots too many. Somebody stuffed the ballot box in that case on the face of appearances. The committee counted those ballots without any evidence as to them except that the poll books showed they should not be there, but they found the ballots in the package. That makes a total that Brookhart lost by virtue of the application of a rule one way against him and then reversing the rule and working it against him again when the circumstances were reversed. It makes a difference of 144 votes. I can not, to save my life, understand how, in the face of a situation of that kind, any man can say for a minute that Brookhart has not overcome the 76 majority for Steck, of which the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] speaks.

Mr. President, were the ballots kept sealed? Had they been kept in accordance with the law? There were 67 precincts where the containers were unsealed. If the official count had been taken in those cases, Brookhart would have gained 309 votes over what were given to him. Those 309 votes would have settled this case, unless we throw out the 1,323 votes which the Senator from Georgia refuses to throw out, in which he is manifestly right.

Mr. President, what are you going to do with a case of that kind? Are you going to say because Mr. Steck said he did not want the votes counted when they were 192 short—and Mr. Brookhart conceded that was fair—that afterwards you will permit Mr. Steck to reverse himself and say, "When there are ballots short, I now want the votes counted in these boxes, because they are favorable to me"? Will that enable us to get the truth? Will not the Senate apply the rule one way or the other? Will the Senate say that where the votes are not in the box they can not be counted, but the official returns must be taken in all cases, or will the Senate adopt the other rule and say, "Count all the ballots and disregard the official returns altogether"? This is the cold record in this matter. I have been through the entire record.

There is another proposition here. Remember, now, how they vote in Iowa. Before a voter can get a ticket he must call for it and give his name, and then his name is written in long-hand in a book furnished the judges for that purpose. When he votes he votes a ballot on which the judges have put their initials, and that is a solemn book register of that vote. Therefore the number of ballots in the box ought to tally with the names in the book. But, sirs, if there is any variance, clearly the book ought to be the better evidence than the absence of a fugitive piece of paper—a single piece of paper which either might be lost or something else substituted for it. There is the book solemnly written out. It is a good deal like the books of a grocery store. Which is the better and most satisfactory evidence of the fact, that a man is charged on the books or the fact that the grocery can not find a particular ticket for a particular sale—a ticket that may have been stuck on a spike. So I say when we compare the books with the votes we find it is true that there are 8,500 votes in the State missing. For whom were they cast? There is no evidence as to that; nobody knows. The presumption, therefore, is that the official count is correct and that the judges, when they counted the ballots, counted only the ballots which were there, and that the official count must be taken, for there are 3,500 votes gone; nobody knows anything about them, and the presumption is that the official count is right and that Brookhart is here properly. Who is there who will say we are then to indulge the presumption that these 3,500 votes would not have altered the election when we are down to a difference of 76 votes, and the burden was upon Mr. Steck to prove it? I say that if this case had been tried closely, and tried in a court of law, it is my humble judgment that the lawyers would have proceeded to have accounted for those 3,500 votes by some sort of evidence, but not a word of evidence was introduced in this record to account for them. The record shows that they went into the box; they are not here now; and I say, that being the case, that Mr. Steck must show a majority of more than 3,500 so that he can say, "If you counted all those votes for Brookhart it would not change the result."

Now, Mr. President, I come to the question of the alleged stipulations. I am absolutely astounded to find the claims made which have been made in this case in regard to the stipulations. First, let us see what the duty of the committee was. Turn, if you please, to the resolution authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to act. That resolution did not direct the committee to find out what the parties to the contest wanted; it directed the committee to examine the facts, to count the ballots, to ascertain the truth, and to report all of the facts to the Senate.

What happened? On July 20, 1925, there was some sort of stipulation made to bring the ballots to Washington; but, if Senators who remain to listen to this case will give me their attention, that stipulation did not provide an agreement that the papers that might be sent in were the ballots or that they were all the ballots. It was simply stipulated that the ballots should be sent in. That is on page 54. On January 6, 1925, Steck filed his contest. In March, 1925, Brookhart answered. On July 20, 1925, the subcommittee met; and, Mr. President, anyone who will read the proceedings of that subcommittee will ascertain that the chairman of the subcommittee called in the lawyers on each side and, in substance, said to them, "We have a force here to count these ballots, and, if there is no objection, we will send them to count the ballots." The ballots were to be brought here under a stipulation which entitled both parties to be present and required a joint certificate as to the verity of the ballots by the auditors and by the representatives of the respective parties.

Subsequently the parties waived the right to have their men present; but they did not waive the certificate of the auditor that the ballots, when he sent them, were in the condition in which he received them. There was not a word of waiver of that kind; but, if they had waived it all, the situation then would have been that there was an agreement to send in the ballots. What ballots? The ballots cast at the election; not a part of the ballots; not something in addition to the ballots, but the very ballots cast at the election. That does not involve, on the part of the lawyers or on the part of the contestant and contestee, any admission that the ballots are valid, any waiver of a right of challenge or any concession whatever of that kind.

The ballots were brought in here, and then what happened? The next thing was that these gentlemen proceeded to their count—these men who were there simply to make the count, authorized by the committee to do that. A subpoena was sent out—it had been sent out before—for the auditors to bring in these ballots. The proceedings were informal. On page 67 of the record I find this, and I want to impress it upon Senators who have suddenly invoked the rule of technicalities:

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Chairman, I assume that this hearing is more or less informal, and that whatever denials and affirmative matter we have entered here as defense will be considered as though not withdrawn now.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, yes; the proceedings are informal. You do not have to observe the steps you would in a court. You are losing no right by what is done.

The proceedings were informal. Up to that time these men had been off there counting the ballots. There was no committee to which to appeal. The committee was not in session. The committee itself was not counting the ballots. The committee was to meet thereafter and consider the result of this count and any other evidence that it might be proper to bring in.

When Mr. Mitchell asked the question:

I assume that this hearing is more or less informal, and that whatever denials and affirmative matter we have entered here as defense will be considered as though not withdrawn now—

The Chairman said:

Oh, yes; the proceedings are informal. You do not have to observe the steps you would in a court. You are losing no right by what is done.

In that light this case proceeded—an informal case.

On December 3 the committee met, and Mr. Turner was put on the stand. Prior to that, I believe, or immediately subsequent, a great deal of this record is taken up with statements as to what the committee in Iowa did to Brookhart, and what the newspapers printed. Nearly all of the hearings that we have printed here are confined to that sort of stuff.

The committee met. Mr. Turner, the chief accountant, was put upon the stand, and he testified that he had not examined the ballots, but that he took the word of the examiners. That appears on page 71. His evidence, therefore, was hearsay evidence, and ought to have been excluded.

Then Mr. Blair Coan came in. It appears from Mr. Blair Coan's statement that he had been back of this movement against Brookhart, and that he was there to punish Brookhart because Brookhart was one of the men that had investigated the Daugherty corruption.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not inject that into this contest. Any evidence of Blair Coan was put in on the contest filed by the regular Republican Committee of the State of Iowa against Senator Brookhart. That we dismissed.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I understand that you dismissed it.

Mr. GEORGE. That is not in Steck's contest.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But you received the evidence.

Mr. GEORGE. We received it in their contest; not in the Steck contest.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I have the ballots in class 3, and I am sure the Senator wants to be correct about it. The class 3 ballots were exactly like the 2,240 votes under class 5 which were conceded to Mr. Brookhart. There is not a single ballot in class 3 and class 5 that were alike that the attorneys did not agree upon and that we passed upon exactly alike. I have the ballots right here.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I shall have to ask the Senator—

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course, if the Senator does not want the information, he can exclude it; but the fact is—

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am not trying to exclude anything except begging the Senator to understand that I must yield the floor in a few minutes.

Mr. CARAWAY. The fact is as I have stated. I have seen the ballots. The statement that classes 3 and 5 were alike is incorrect.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Well, that is my information.

Mr. CARAWAY. Well, it is mistaken.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well.

It is admitted, sir, that the ballots from 67 of these precincts came in with the seals broken, and it is admitted that Brookhart challenged every one of them. That is not all. So far from Brookhart conceding the validity of those ballots or waiving his right to challenge, I say he made the challenge the first time it could be made. You could not expect a man to go down with a lot of 30 or 40 clerks, men and women, engaged in counting ballots, and stand down there and make his challenges. It was the duty of these people to note any irregularities to which attention was to be called, but finally this committee was to decide the merits of every question involved in this evidence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OGDEN in the chair). Will the Senator suspend while the Chair makes the announcement that he understands that the Senator's time will be up in five minutes?

Mr. REED of Missouri. There is no absolute time limit, but I am going to treat the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GORR] fairly.

I say that this lawyer for Mr. Brookhart did preserve his rights. I say he preserved them at the only time he could preserve them, when he was before the committee. Then he made his objection. An objection before that, to a counter who had no authority to rule upon it, would have been a puerile thing, except as a mere record of the fact that he made a specific objection.

On page 195 of the record I find this is laid down:

Senator GEORGE. Before we begin, Mr. Mitchell, may I ask, did the supervisors and the clerks tabulate the returns—tabulate their work?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, sir.

Senator GEORGE. Is that available, here?

Mr. MITCHELL. That is what I understood was to be the basis of this hearing this morning; that the tabulation prepared by Mr. Turner as official tabulator was to be introduced.

They had not yet come to putting in the evidence, for the evidence that was to come before this committee and substantially the only evidence it had was the evidence of the men who made this tabulation; and now for the first time it is to be presented to the committee, and it has not yet been presented.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is what I understood was to be the basis of this hearing this morning; that the tabulation prepared by Mr. Turner as official tabulator was to be introduced.

Mr. PARSONS. I will introduce it.

So it had not been introduced yet.

Mr. MITCHELL. If we can arrive at that point, I think we will clarify the whole situation.

Now, in order to answer one question I will say this, that we are going to object to the recount as a whole for this reason, that the burden, as we understand it, is imposed upon the contestant to demonstrate to the satisfaction of the committee, or in the case of a contest, to the court, that there has been no reasonable opportunity for tampering with the ballots. We will object to the recount particularly so far as it affects the paper ballots for the same reason, that there has been no attempt to show that these ballots, after they were sent in by the officials charged with their counting, had not been tampered with, or there was no opportunity to tamper with them.

We would object specifically to 67 precincts, and I have made a list of those precincts here, in which it appears by the returns made on the work sheets of the supervisors here, both of them agreeing that these ballots were received in unsealed sacks, and therefore there is prima facie evidence, at least, that there was opportunity for tampering with those ballots. They involve some 16,000 ballots—over 16,000—in one case, and over 15,000 in the case of the other party.

We would offer further objections to the recount in that upon the attorneys' checking up on the tabulation, we find that there are 47 ballots unaccounted for; in other words, the tabulation shows an excess of 47 ballots over those the attorneys have been able to discover, 4 of which appear by the tabulation to be votes challenged against Mr. Steck and 43 challenged against Mr. Brookhart.

Further:

Senator CARAWAY. You know, this is the first time that I have attended any hearing of the testimony in this case. Was this objection to the recount made at the time the ballots were brought here or is this the first time you have lodged your objection to the recount?

How could it be made when the ballots were brought there? A lot of sacks were sent here by express from different points of shipment, I presume. To whom were they to object? Were they to go down and object to the station agent? Were they to go down and object to the custodian? This is what Mr. Mitchell said:

This is the first time that I, as representing Senator Brookhart, have offered this objection; and it is really the first opportunity, because this is when the recount is offered—when the tabulation is offered.

And that is when it had to be made.

But the objection has been entered in each case of the 67 precincts that I have a list of here on the work sheets, which work sheets were signed by the supervisors, one of whom represented either party.

Mr. President, to say that this man did not object, and object in time, is not tenable; but if he had never made an objection, if he had stood mute, and if the facts appeared as they appear here now, it would be the duty of the Senate, in determining who is entitled to a seat in this body, to decide the question according to the law and the fact, even though an attorney had utterly failed to make an objection.

Why, Mr. President, the case is like that of offering a deposition that has incompetent evidence in it. You do not have to object when the deposition is being taken; you object when the deposition is offered. The only thing you can not object to is the particular form of the question.

Mr. President, there is another important point in this case that I wanted to discuss; but I have gone a little over my time, and I hope the Senator from West Virginia will pardon me.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, in the discussion of this case for the majority of the committee, I wish to say at the very beginning of my remarks that neither the committee nor myself as its advocate was influenced in the least by any political suggestions or colorings.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Ernst	Keyes	Reed, Pa.
Bayard	Fernald	King	Robinson, Ark.
Bingham	Ferris	La Follette	Robinson, Ind.
Blease	Fess	Lenroot	Sackett
Borah	Fletcher	McKellar	Sheppard
Bratton	Frazier	McLean	Shipstead
Broussard	George	McMaster	Shortridge
Bruce	Gerry	McNary	Simmons
Butler	Gillett	Mayfield	Smith
Cameron	Glass	Metcalf	Smoot
Capper	Goff	Moses	Standfield
Caraway	Gooding	Neely	Stephens
Copeland	Hale	Norbeck	Swanson
Couzens	Harreid	Norris	Trammell
Cummins	Harris	Nye	Tyson
Curtis	Harrison	Oddie	Walsh
Dale	Heflin	Overman	Warren
Deneen	Howell	Phipps	Watson
Dill	Johnson	Pine	Wheeler
Edge	Jones, Wash.	Ransdell	Williams
Edwards	Kendrick	Reed, Mo.	Willis

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, as I was stating when the absence of a quorum was suggested, there was and is no view, political or prejudiced, which animated or controlled the actions of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. This entire question was determined according to the facts and the law, and I intend to show to Senators on both sides of this Chamber that not only were the laws of Iowa respected and followed in every regard, but that the laws of the Nation, as well as the Constitution of the United States, were observed in every step which the committee took.

When the Committee on Privileges and Elections assumed jurisdiction of this contest, referred to as the Steck-Brookhart contest, it had before it the pleadings of the contestant and the contestee. Those pleadings raised certain issues, which it became the duty of the committee to investigate and then decide. Those issues were based upon this very necessary and initial fact: That at least two months before the petition of Mr. Steck was filed with the Senate of the United States, in which he raised the issues involved in this contest, Senator Brookhart, as was his right, sought and obtained in the State of Iowa an injunction against opening the machines, in order that the State statute providing that the machines should be opened within 30 days after the election should not in any way interfere with this contest. It is a striking matter that before Mr. Steck filed his petition of contest with the Senate of the United States Senator Brookhart, in anticipation, went out into the State of Iowa and obtained an injunction against the opening of the machines. That kept the machine vote intact, and when the contest was duly filed the issues then raised showed that upon the very face of the official returns from the State of Iowa there was a plurality of 775 votes in favor of Senator Brookhart.

My distinguished friend from Missouri [Mr. REED] has spent some time arguing upon the presumptions that arise from a certificate of election. If I should voluntarily follow him to his legal conclusion, I would be compelled to admit that in few, if any, of the election contests which have appeared before the Senate or the House of Representatives would it be possible to overcome the almost irresistible presumption which attaches to a certificate of election.

I regret I can not take the time now at my disposal to go into all of the provisions of the code of Iowa adopted in 1924, which I have here before me, relating to elections. All of these provisions were passed for the purpose of safeguarding the ballots after they have been cast by those entitled to vote.

These ballots—and I challenge anyone to contradict what I shall now say—were sent to the proper custodians, the auditors of the different counties where the ballots were cast, and they were sent there according to the law of Iowa, when the polls closed, and they were in the custody of those county auditors continuously until they found their way, under the stipulation of the parties, into the jurisdiction of the committee here in the city of Washington.

It has been said that men can not stipulate their way into the Senate of the United States, and that men can not be stipulated out of the Senate of the United States. How axiomatic that statement is. The very making of it not only sounds an inherent truth, but furnishes its own responsive answer. There is no suggestion in the record that anybody was to be stipulated out of the Senate in this contest, or that anybody could be stipulated into the Senate.

Your Committee on Privileges and Elections did the only thing it could do. It heard the parties to the contest, and they did the only thing they could do, to prove or disprove the issues which were raised by their respective pleadings.

It has been suggested in this debate that these great questions of sovereign government can never be subject to encroachment by the stipulations of the parties in interest.

Mr. President, this Government of ours is a government of law and not a government of men, but how can the laws be enforced if they are not enforced through men? Parties come before the Senate in contest, come officially representing the inherent rights of sovereign States; but, nevertheless, they come representing those rights, and solely because they advance and maintain their own personal interest in them. The parties in this contest came before the committee and undertook to meet the issues here involved, whether, under a fair and impartial count in the city of Washington, under the direction of your committee, the official managers and the official counters in the State of Iowa had made honest mistakes. Your committee approved and permitted certain stipulations and certain agreements entered into by the parties to this contest who each assumed and carried before the Senate of the United States such portion of the delegated sovereignty of the State of Iowa to which they were each entitled to make claim by virtue of facts that they were the representatives entitled to act.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. GOFF. I yield for a question.

Mr. NORRIS. When the Senator refers to stipulation does he also include objections? Is there any question involved here about objections sometimes having been made too late?

Mr. GOFF. That might be involved. I want the Senator to ask me any question, but he knows how limited my time is, and I do not intend to become involved in any argument.

Mr. NORRIS. I shall not interrupt the Senator without his consent.

Mr. GOFF. I want to be interrupted, and I wish I had all day to talk about the case.

Mr. NORRIS. So do I. Then I will ask the Senator this question: The Senator mentioned two or three particular precincts where, it seemed to me, one rule was applied in one precinct and the reverse in another one.

Mr. GOFF. Does the Senator refer to the five-precincts beginning with Winterset?

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator about the first ward of Winterset, Madison County, where there was a shortage of votes, it seems, and the committee took the official count, which gave Mr. Steck 198 votes. They took the official count, as I understand it, because there were a large number of votes short. There were not as many ballots as there were people who voted at that precinct, so they gave Mr. Steck the official count, which gives him a gain of 198 votes.

I am not criticizing that gain, but in Guthrie County, Bear Grove Township precincts, there was a shortage of 20 ballots as compared with the number of people voting. If the committee had taken the official count there, it would have given Senator Brookhart an advantage of 20 votes, but there they did not take it, which gave Steck an advantage. In Estherville Township, where there was likewise a shortage of 34 ballots, the committee did not take the official count, which gave Steck an advantage again of the discrepancy. The same applied in Center Township, Wapello County, where there was a shortage of 22 ballots. The committee there refused to take the official count, and again gave Steck the advantage.

Why is it? There may be a good reason for it; but as I understand it the committee did this because, it is claimed and denied, I think, that Senator Brookhart's attorney did not object in those precincts.

Mr. GOFF. While as a matter of course I intended to discuss the precincts to which the Senator has referred and while it is true that he has anticipated my argument in the request which he now makes I shall divert and answer his inquiries at this time.

In the first ward of Winterset, in Madison County, where there was a difference—in fact, a shortage—of 198 votes, the counters gave, by special consent and agreement among themselves, the benefit of the official count to Senator Brookhart. Why did they do it? They did it because the ballots from that precinct came to the city of Washington unsealed.

Mr. NORRIS. But the advantage was for Steck. Steck gained 198 votes.

Mr. GOFF. I know Steck would have gained if we had gone on, but he did not gain by the recount. I am not going into that speculative field. As I understand it, if we had gone on we would have found a gain of over 60 votes for Steck.

Mr. WHEELER. As a matter of fact, taking the official count, there was a gain for Steck, and that is what we are complaining about. The official count gives a gain for Steck in that precinct.

Mr. NORRIS. Nobody is complaining of that particular precinct. I am not complaining about it, but why not apply the same rule in the other precincts?

Mr. GOFF. Let me say in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Montana that those votes came here in unsealed packages and they were unsealed.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President—

Mr. GOFF. I want to say that in reference to every other one of the precincts to which the Senator from Nebraska has referred and which no doubt the Senator from Montana has in mind, every one of the packages, the original containers bearing the votes, came to the city of Washington sealed, with no evidence whatsoever that they had been opened or that there was the opportunity existing at any time or place that the contents of those containers could have been changed, and they were obviously the best evidence.

Mr. NORRIS. Let us get the facts.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GOFF. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator another question. In one of those seven precincts where the ballots were short is it not true that Senator Brookhart lost 20 votes, the exact number of ballots that they were short, and can the Senator account for that by an accident? Would it be sufficient explanation to say that the ballots in this particular precinct came sealed when that shortage occurred?

Mr. GOFF. I can account for that difference in many ways. There was unquestionably a difference between the official count in many of those precincts and the number of ballots in the ballot box, and I intend in the course of my discussion to refer to that fact. There were in none of these precincts any evidences that the original containers had been opened, except in the first ward of Winterset, Madison County, which is shown by two exhibits to which the Senator has referred on pages 248 and 249.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

Mr. GOFF. I yield for a question.

Mr. STEPHENS. I only want to ask a question. Does not the Senator know, with reference to the Estherville precinct in Emmet County, that it was noted on the work sheet that the ballots came here in a sealed box just as the Senator stated many others came, and that later there were 34 other ballots sent here as coming from the same precinct, thus showing that the fact that it was reported to have been sealed is not conclusive at all that the ballots had been preserved in the manner required by law? I call attention to pages 248 and 249 of the hearings.

Mr. GOFF. There is no dispute about that fact. The ballots came down here as shown in Exhibit A on page 248, to which the Senator from Mississippi has called my attention—Emmet County, Estherville Township. They came in a sealed sack. Then later on, as the work sheets show, the chief supervisor found "no votes, 65." He found 5 Brookhart ballots protested by Mr. Pendy, and he found 20 less ballots than the number of names on the poll book. That is not an unusual circumstance to meet with in this contest. Poll book after poll book came to the committee with just such discrepancies upon their face.

Mr. STEPHENS. I am not talking about discrepancies.

Mr. GOFF. I know what the Senator is talking about. I am answering the Senator's question in my own way.

Mr. STEPHENS. I understand, but I am discussing the fact that 34 ballots came separately and were not in the bag that came here sealed originally.

Mr. GOFF. The record shows that 34 ballots did come here later. They came in an unsealed package and they were not considered by the counters and were not considered by the supervisors.

Mr. STEPHENS. Does not the law of the State of Iowa require that all ballots shall be kept together? The point I am making is the fact that 34 came separately and apart from the main sack, showing that they were not preserved as required by law.

Mr. GOFF. I understand the Senator's question thoroughly; in fact, I understood before he asked it, and I knew the motive that prompted it. I have discussed these questions with the distinguished Senator from Mississippi, and I know his psychology and his mental operations upon this very issue. But I want to say, and for the purposes of this case it is all sufficient, that the representatives of these parties when they counted these identical ballots agreed to count them according to the original stipulations and understandings and agreements, and they were satisfied that the ballots came from an untampered custody.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GOFF. For a question only.

Mr. WHEELER. What was the committee sent out to do? Was not the committee to get the facts regardless of any stipulations?

Mr. GOFF. Exactly; and the committee obtained the facts.

Mr. WHEELER. I submit that the committee did not get the facts, and I do not believe the committee knows the facts.

Mr. GOFF. That is where the Senator from Montana and I disagree and where we will never agree.

Mr. WHEELER. That is a certainty, that the Senator and I would never agree, because he does not know the facts, and neither did we agree upon Harry Daugherty, so let us not get into any argument about that.

Mr. GOFF. No; the Senator has to inject matters into this case that show he is lacking in that fine judicial quality which a Senator should possess.

Mr. WHEELER. If I lack judicial qualities, then I am sure the Senator is lacking them in this case.

Mr. GOFF. I refuse to yield any further for argument. I shall yield to the Senator for any question, but I shall not have my time consumed by yielding to matters of political immateriality.

Now, Mr. President, let us merely for one moment in regard to—

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. GOFF. The Senator may do so if it is a short question, but, understand, I am not going to let the Senator from Nebraska consume my time.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I will not ask the Senator any question without his consent. I wanted to ask the Senator if he will not explain, as I asked him before, why in the four precincts which I named the committee always applied the rule that gave Steck the gain and Brookhart the loss?

Mr. GOFF. Yes; I am going to do so now; and will the Senator remain quiet just a moment while I do so?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I shall be glad to do so if the Senator will answer the question.

Mr. GOFF. Very well.

Mr. President, I shall take up one of the poll books to which so much reference has been made. This [exhibiting] is a poll book from the county of Adair, in Prussia Township. This poll book shows that 214 voters were listed. That is the indorsement made by the clerk whose duty it was to record the name of every voter when he entered the voting booth and gave his name to those in charge of the election. Two hundred and fourteen names were written upon this book. Then we turn to the official returns on page 42 and we find 191 votes cast for the office of United States Senator; 103 for Brookhart and 88 for Steck. When we examine these poll lists, take the names written and recorded by the election clerks, and then turn to the official returns we find discrepancies, and, as I have noted it, in this particular poll book a discrepancy of 23 votes. This indicates that when we compare the poll list with the votes in the ballot box, compare the ballots with the very official paper, the law of Iowa requires these election judges to keep we have a discrepancy of 23 votes upon the face of the returns before the poll books and ballots can reach those who are charged with their custody. It is asked, Why is it when the ballots came to the city of Washington and were counted a difference was found between the poll lists and the number of official ballots as established by the recount? I can take other poll books that are lying here—and time only prevents—and show that the same situation exists reflecting merely the mistake of those who honestly conducted the election.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator something about this poll book to which he has referred?

Mr. GOFF. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the Senator realize that he has compared before the Senate the number of votes cast for Senator and the number of voters voting, and that that is not a determination of the number of ballots that were cast; that there were, perhaps, a good many voters there who did not vote for Senator at all?

Mr. GOFF. And there were a good many who did not vote for President, according to that book.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly; and that is true of every precinct, probably. The Senator can not deduce anything from that.

Mr. GOFF. And there were 207 officially recorded as voting for President, while there are 214 names on the poll list.

Mr. NORRIS. The 214 men voted, but all of them did not vote for Senator, and probably all did not vote for some other candidates; so the Senator's poll book does not prove anything.

Mr. GOFF. That is what I expected, Mr. President. I expected the Senator from Nebraska to say that he could not be convinced against his will, and I am not surprised that he should take and does take that position. However, I am going to reply to the suggestions of the Senator from Nebraska with reference to the five precincts in the different exhibits which appear from pages 247 to 251.

In Bear Grove township, in Guthrie County, it was found by the chief supervisor that 236 ballots were the number cast, according to the recount; 23 of them were no votes, and from this precinct the ballots came to Washington sealed as required. It was agreed by the counters; it was agreed by the attorneys; it was agreed by the parties to this contest, who, as I said a moment ago, came here clothed, if you prefer so to term it, with the sovereignty of their State—it was agreed by all the parties that the ballots were the best evidence as to the number of votes cast, and it was so ruled.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GOFF. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER. The law of Iowa requires, does it not, that proof should be offered as to the preservation of the ballots?

Mr. GOFF. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER. And there was not any preliminary proof offered at all as to how these ballots were kept prior to the time that they came into the auditor's hands, was there?

Mr. GOFF. Oh, yes; there was.

Mr. WHEELER. What proof was introduced in evidence to show that these ballots were properly preserved from the time they left the counties?

Mr. GOFF. There was proof, and I will discuss that. It was the proof that came with the ballots, came with the certificates, came with the ballots from their proper custodians.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just one more question, and that is this: Would not it have been possible for the committee to call witnesses when objection was made to these ballots here in Washington?

Mr. GOFF. The Senator from Oklahoma was asking me if the officials were not presumed to do their duty, and I did not catch the question of the Senator from Montana. I wish him to finish his question, please, so that I may go on.

Mr. WHEELER. They are presumed to do their duty; but the law requires, does it not, that evidence should be introduced preliminary to the ballots being used as the best evidence?

Mr. GOFF. I know the Senator's question. Will he let me answer it?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, we come to Emmet County, Estherville township, in the city of Estherville. This is Exhibit A on page 248. In that precinct the ballots came properly sealed, but it was ruled that the ballots were the best evidence as to the number of votes contained in the ballot box and for whom cast.

Mr. WHEELER. That does not answer my question, however.

Mr. GOFF. Well, I will answer the Senator's question. I am not going to answer it all at once, but I am going to answer the question in my own time and in my own way.

Mr. LENROOT rose.

Mr. GOFF. Does the Senator from Wisconsin desire to ask me a question?

Mr. LENROOT. I wanted some information. The Senator from West Virginia referred to Bear Grove township. I understood the Senator to say the counters and attorneys had agreed upon the vote there, but the work sheet seems to show the result was submitted to the committee, and Mr. Mitchell objected to the recount. Was there any waiver or stipulation as to that township?

Mr. GOFF. I say that everything that appeared on the work sheet was agreed to by the counters and agreed to by the attorney and then later submitted to the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. For decision?

Mr. GOFF. For decision.

Mr. NORRIS. The decision in that case was to count the ballots, and Brookhart lost by that. The decision in the other case, in Winterset, was to take the official count, and Brookhart lost there. The peculiarity of that is manifest.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President, with all due respect to my esteemed friend from Nebraska, I shall refuse to yield further for any question connected with the precincts until I finish my argument.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. GOFF. I know what the Senator is trying to bring out before the Senate. He is trying to bring out a situation that is not justified by the facts; that is not justified by the law. Senators say that parties to the contest could not stipulate or waive anything. They say, when the parties to this contest came down before the committee of the Senate of the United States and agreed to go to Iowa and do certain things and agreed to expedite the decision of the issues here involved, that these men who, if they had ceased to act, this contest would have ceased, had no right to come in and agree as to what the record showed, because it was an encroachment upon some sovereign right. You may call it, Mr. President, a waiver in law or you may call it an estoppel in equity. You may say, as Senators have said who are arguing for the minority report, that the parties to the contest under such conditions could not waive rights which would put a man in or out of the Senate or that they could not make stipulations that accomplished the same thing. I do not care what it may be called, but I say, Mr. President, when the parties to this contest came before the Committee on Privileges and Elections and agreed to do the things which they did agree to do, when they went out and took the official count of the machines and then, as it is well known and understood by every Senator who has considered this matter, for the purpose of their personal and financial convenience, waived or took back the provisions of the stipulation requiring that the representatives or supervisors of each of the parties should go to each of the counties, inspect the ballots, and talk to the auditors and satisfy themselves that the ballots were in the same condition in which they were when they were sent to them when the polls closed on the 4th of November, 1924—when they did that, and then came down here and appointed their supervisors, agreed that Mr. Turner, a man dissociated from the Senate, who spends his official life in the Census Bureau, should be the chief tabulator, and each appointed his respective supervisors, Mr. Pendy being appointed to represent Mr. Steck and Mr. Louis Cook to represent Mr. Brookhart, and they stood here day by day and saw the ballots opened; had their official tabulating sheet, which they called a work sheet, and indorsed thereon everything that occurred to them, their objections, their protests, I challenge, Mr. President, anyone to say or to point to a statement or a suggestion that any of the representatives of the contesting parties saw fit to indorse on the work sheet a statement or even a suggestion that the ballots had been tampered with.

I know that Senators on the minority side do not like the word waiver. They object to estoppel. But, Mr. President, ever since Moses thundered the moral precepts from Mount Sinai it has been the rule of good morals, it has been the rule of statesmanship, it is tied up and wrapped up in the Constitution of the United States, that when a man keeps quiet when it is his duty to speak he shall not be allowed to speak when he ought to keep quiet.

Why did not these men come and say to your committee: "There is something unusual; there is something wrong"? Why did they not come and suggest from day to day on this work sheet that there were matters which challenged the attention of those who were wedded to the principles of political truth and the precepts of moral right?

As the distinguished senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] so well said the other day—it was not when he was making his very lucid argument; it was when he was criticizing a suggestion made—"Is it the purpose of the Senate to permit contestants to sit by and gamble with the recount?" Is it, Mr. President, the purpose of the Senate, which we like to call the most deliberative judicial body in all the world—and I believe it is, because it has back of it all the Anglo-Saxon civilization and the Anglo-Saxon law that has made the United States of America the greatest Nation on this earth, and which will continue it in such a position just so long and no longer than we are honest with ourselves.

Mr. President, it does not become those who attack the action of my committee, this majority report, and say that it is contrary to what they consider the law to be.

What is the law? The law of Iowa is that when the polls close these ballots shall be placed into containers; that these ballots shall be sealed; that before the ballots are put in the containers they shall be folded twice; they shall be strung on a wire; the wire shall be tied in a knot at the end; that knot shall be sealed. And that the ballots so strung on a wire and so sealed shall be put in such a container. Then the law provides that this container shall be drawn together tightly, that the knot shall be tied, and that a seal shall be placed upon such knot. Then certain indorsements, according to the law, are required to be indorsed upon the back of this container. Then the ballots so preserved are sent to the official custodian. He is required to keep them inviolate for a period of six months, unless duly and legally directed to surrender them.

It has been suggested that no one went to the State of Iowa to see that these containers were properly sealed before they were given to the postmasters of the several townships and registered and sent to the city of Washington. I say, Mr. President, that the Senate of the United States, through its committee, is not concerned with that question, in the light of what these parties did; and when these ballots came here and these containers were opened, they were opened in the presence of the representatives of the contestant and the contestee, and no one raised a protest or suggested irregularity.

Does anyone imagine that when one of these containers was opened, if there was anything upon the inside to indicate that the ballots had been tampered with, it would not have appeared upon the work sheets signed by the representatives of these parties? As a matter of course it would have appeared there, unless we are to indulge the unreasonable and inhuman presumption that men of honor and men of integrity refuse, when the crucial test comes, to serve their principals and to be faithful to their trust. There is not a suggestion on any of the work sheets that such a condition arose, and not even a suspicion occurred to the minds of any of the representatives of these parties.

It is true that later when the parties came to Washington, about the 4th of December, 1925, the ballots had been counted. They appeared before the Committee on Privileges and Elections and made certain requests and raised certain objections. They had a right to advance these objections. They had a right to make any argument that they saw fit to make. But when they undertook, Mr. President, to attack the custody of these ballots, I say as a matter of law, based upon the inherent fairness and morality of the common sense of the situation, that they have no justification for saying that the ballots did not come from the proper custody.

The ballots were duly and legally transmitted here, and they were inspected by the parties, and not one of them raised a suggestion of doubt. The ballots were then counted, and the attorneys came before the subcommittee and stated they were not ready to proceed. The reason they gave was that there were eight-odd thousand ballots challenged, eight-odd thousand ballots protested and questioned, which could be divided into classes not only to clarify the situation but to aid the parties and to assist the committee in reaching a correct decision in the matter.

Mr. President, I have tried to prepare a sheet which illustrates these 16 classes which I think are determinative of this contest, and I shall ask Mr. Turner to put it on the board where everyone can see it. When it reaches the board and is in a position for inspection I shall call to the attention of the Senate certain of the facts that are there disclosed.

This sheet shows how the committee passed on the ballots which were considered valid votes for one party or the other, and is as follows:

	Brookhart	Steck
Unchallenged.....	443,817	447,944
Agreed by attorneys.....	14	1,163
Class 2.....	42	13
Class 4.....	276	62
Class 5.....	2,490
Class 6.....	1,755	149
Class 7.....	37	27
Class 8.....	21	1
Class 9.....	90
Class 10.....	4
Class 11.....	22	222
Class 12.....	37	57
Class 13.....	16	362
Class 14.....	24	14
Class 15.....	97	155
Class 16.....	7
Total.....	448,740	450,169
Steck plurality.....		1,420

Mr. President, that there may be no ground for a difference of opinion, that we may start with the unchallenged votes, I turn to page 81 of the contestant's brief and argument, the incumbent's brief and the personal summary by Senator Brookhart, and call attention to the fact that he there states that the tabulated votes were 443,817 for himself and 447,944 for

Mr. Steck. Those are the figures to which he agrees as being the figures of the tabulator. Now, I invite attention to page 230 of the first division of the hearings. I there show on this chart that class 1 of the 16 classes is omitted. Class 1, as it appears on page 230, is:

No votes; conceded by both parties.

Mr. Steck was charged with 35 and Mr. Brookhart was there charged with 115. Those votes were conceded by all parties to be no votes, and it was agreed by the attorneys—it was agreed by Senator Brookhart when he appeared before the full committee and presented his contention—that there was an agreement of "no votes" in class 1. We will, therefore, waste no time in discussing that phase of the question.

I proceed to subdivision 2 in this classification of 16 divisions; and I shall not, Mr. President—because the Senate has heard so much about this very matter in the last few days—go into it at any length. All that I desire to say, however, is that in this classification, known as class 2, and which consisted of 69 ballots, 14 of these were claimed for Mr. Steck and 55 for Senator Brookhart.

They had been claimed by the opposing attorneys as no votes for either candidate. The committee went through these ballots and ruled 13 of them to be good for Mr. Steck. These ballots were held to show an intention to vote for Mr. Steck on the part of the voters, and one of these ballots—and I mentioned a moment ago that there were 14—was held to be a defective ballot and therefore no vote. In this last ballot Senator Brookhart's name had been stricken out, and the cross before the name of Mr. Steck had an oblique line leading to it, but there was no cross in the square, and it was not considered by your committee a sufficient indication of an intention to vote for Mr. Steck.

The committee then ruled, as will be seen on the board, that 42 of the votes claimed by Senator Brookhart were good votes for Senator Brookhart, and the committee concluded that they showed an intention on the part of the voters to vote for Brookhart, and as to the remaining ballots the intention to vote for anyone for Senator was not sufficiently clear to enable the committee to determine for whom they were intended.

These ballots were in three classes. The first embraced 11 ballots, as is shown by stipulations 53 and 59. Those were the agreements the attorneys entered into when they promised the committee, in the early part of December, 1925, that if they were given a short time they would tabulate and arrange these votes.

Now I go to class 3, shown on the sheet under the heading "Agreed by attorneys." Class 3 consisted, as will be seen by reference to page 230, of votes conceded to the parties under whose names they appeared. Mr. Steck was conceded 1,163 votes and Mr. Brookhart was conceded 14 votes.

Class 4. This class embraces all those ballots wherein the name of either Steck or Brookhart was written in the Progressive column for Senator, with various and different initials. A cross was also in some of these ballots, placed in the square before the name so written in. In this class there were 62 votes claimed by Steck and 276 such votes claimed by Brookhart. The committee held that the intention of the voter was sufficiently clear and the ballots were ruled for the respective parties as indicated.

The argument was made that the committee adopted one rule in the case of Senator Brookhart and another rule in the case of Mr. Steck. Let me merely, for the purposes of comparison, go to subdivision 5. There are included under Senator Brookhart's column 2,490 votes. Those 2,490 votes came from a classified tabulation of 3,834 ballots which were claimed by Senator Brookhart and objected to for several reasons. Two thousand four hundred and ninety of them were conceded by Mr. Steck's attorneys to be good votes, and they were so treated by the committee.

Mr. President, a contest was filed by the Republican State Central Committee of the State of Iowa against the seating of Senator Brookhart. That contest, which appears in volume 1 of the hearings, stated, in substance, that Senator Brookhart was not a Republican; that he was not a member of the Republican Party; that he obtained his primary nomination under false pretenses; that he had gotten his name on the ticket under false pretenses; that prior to the 3d day of October, 1924, he had refused to indicate whom he would support for President of the United States. Then the petition goes on to state that from and after the 3d day of October, 1924, when it was too late to take his name from the ticket, he announced that he would support the candidacies of Senator La Follette and Senator Wheeler.

The Republican State central committee then proceeded to show that on the 3d day of October, 1924, in what was known as his Emmetsburg speech, Senator Brookhart made certain statements. Mr. President, I am not criticizing Senator Brookhart personally. It was a matter within his own conscience to stand with his party or to go against it. It was a matter for him to decide. I have thought of the principle so frequently raised in American politics, that when a candidate offers his name to his people and gives them his promise that he stands for certain things, he has made the highest moral promise and assumed the most binding obligation that man can ever make, because he does not make it to an individual—he makes it to thousands of his people.

I remember, Mr. President, that many years ago it fell to my lot to reside for a number of years in the State of Wisconsin. I remember talking with Senator La Follette, father of the Senator LA FOLLETTE now a Member of this Senate, and discussing with him then the question to which I have just adverted. I could show among my books and papers a speech made by the late Senator La Follette in which he said that when a man made a promise to the people of a sovereign State it was the highest form of promise he could make. Senator Brookhart made such a promise, and he did not keep it. Why mince words? He broke it, and the Republican State central committee came here and protested his election.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] has said the contest was dismissed, which is true. Nevertheless, it has this important bearing upon this question, that on the 5th day of October, 1924, the Republican State central committee of the State of Iowa announced publicly that it had no candidate for the office of United States Senator. It published that in every newspaper. It sent it broadcast to the people of that great Commonwealth. It blazoned it on the housetops, and it electrified it into the minds of the people. It was known, known to everybody, and known everywhere. May I make another statement in that connection? It was made known because in his Emmetsburg speech Senator Brookhart saw fit to leave the Republican Party.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GILLET in the chair). Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. GOFF. I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but merely to ask him if he recalls, when I was referring to these matters in connection with the Iowa contest, he stated to me that that was wholly out of the case, and, in substance, that I should not refer to it?

Mr. GOFF. Do I understand the Senator to say that I said that?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I so understood the Senator.

Mr. GOFF. May I suggest to the Senator that I did not interrupt him once while he was speaking, but that it was the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I apologize to the Senator. I am in error, then.

Mr. GOFF. I wish to say, in reply to the Senator, that I am referring to this not to bring in politics but in order to show the psychology of the voter. That is the only purpose for which I make reference to it.

In this very connection—and what I intend to read will but confirm to the Senator from Missouri what I have said—I refer to page 111 in the first volume of the hearings. I wish to show what Mr. Mitchell, the attorney for Senator Brookhart, said in cross-examining the chairman of the Republican State central committee in regard to this matter. I read:

Mr. MITCHELL. When the committee passed this resolution that there was no Republican candidate, was that given to the newspapers?

Mr. BALDRIDGE. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Would state that that had considerable publicity?

Mr. BALDRIDGE. I would judge so.

Mr. MITCHELL. As a matter of fact, practically every voter in the State of Iowa knew of that action which was taken by the State central committee, did he not?

Mr. BALDRIDGE. The voters had an opportunity to read the newspapers.

Mr. MITCHELL. And most of them do in Iowa.

Mr. BALDRIDGE. We have the smallest illiteracy of any State in the Union.

Mr. President, when the attorneys and the supervisors came to protest and contest these eight thousand and odd votes which I have itemized on the board a protest was entered in subdivision 5 as to 2,490 ballots against Senator Brookhart, upon the ground that Senator Brookhart was not a member of the Republican Party. And in that very connection a counter challenge as to 1,163 votes was entered by the representatives of Senator Brookhart against Mr. Steck. To show merely that the same rule and the same procedure was followed, in class 5 Mr. Brookhart was given the 2,490 votes out of the 8,000 protested by your committee. It was then conceded by Senator Brookhart's representatives that the 1,163 votes which had been contested and protested by the representatives of Senator Brookhart were good votes.

Mr. President, if I may divert for a moment—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senator's time will expire in 15 minutes.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the time expire at 3 o'clock?

Mr. GOFF. The time expires at 3 o'clock, but I have 15 minutes under the unanimous-consent agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The agreement is that beginning at 3 o'clock no Senator shall be permitted to speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes. The Chair rules that that would apply to the Senator occupying the floor at the time of the beginning of the unanimous-consent agreement. The Senator may proceed for 15 minutes longer.

Mr. GOFF. That was my understanding, and I thank you, Mr. President, for confirming my view.

The committee had, as I said, 3,834 votes in that class which were protested votes, and when 2,490 of them were conceded to be good votes and the attorneys came before the committee and so conceded them there was no further contest or protest in reference to the 2,490 votes, although, subtracting 2,490 from the 3,834 ballots claimed for Senator Brookhart, we came to the ballots known as the 1,344 ballots, which I shall now discuss.

Mr. President, there was no violation by your committee of the laws of Iowa in reaching that conclusion. The law to which reference has been made is section 811 of the Code of 1924. I say that if we had been in the courts of Iowa there would have been a serious question as to whether the Code of 1924 applied. I say so because that code never went into existence until the 28th day of October, 1924, less than 10 days before the people of Iowa went to the polls. That code provided that anyone could vote the straight Republican ticket by marking a cross in the circle at the top of the Republican column. It provided that one could omit doing that and put a cross in the square opposite each name on the Republican ticket.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. GOFF. Certainly.

Mr. PHIPPS. Does the Senator know whether or not the official ballots had been printed before the 28th day of October?

Mr. GOFF. I know they had been printed.

Mr. PHIPPS. Does the Senator know whether or not—on some of those ballots, at least—instructions appeared to the voter describing the manner in which he might mark a cross to indicate his preference in voting?

Mr. GOFF. I do, and I have one such ballot which I will ask Mr. Turner to place on the blackboard.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, does the Senator mean the ballots delivered to the voters bore a legend of instructions telling them how to vote, or was that on the sample ballot?

Mr. GOFF. The legal ballot bore such instructions. I hold in my hand an exact duplicate of the ballot which I have asked Mr. Turner to place on the blackboard. It is the official ballot for absent or disabled voters. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that the ballot from which I shall now read is the official ballot. This ballot was cast. This ballot is entitled "Official ballot for absent or disabled voters, general election, Polk County, Iowa, November 4, 1924." At the bottom of the ballot which was sent out to the absent and disabled voters of the State of Iowa there appeared upon the bottom of the ballot now on the blackboard the following:

To vote a straight party ticket, mark a cross in the circle only. If not voting a straight party ticket, mark a cross in the square over the name for which you wish to vote, and also mark your party ticket.

Mr. President, such ballots were accompanied by the affidavit of the absent or disabled voter, and I understand from talking with the supervisors and the tabulator and the officials charged with the counting of these ballots that there were 10,000 such ballots cast in the State of Iowa on the 4th day of November, 1924.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Is that in the record? Is the last statement made by the Senator in the record?

Mr. GOFF. No, that statement is nowhere in the record, in those words and figures, but it is based upon a computation of the number of absent and disabled voters in counties of similar size in the State of Iowa.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, is the Senator, who is an able lawyer serving us, giving testimony entirely aliunde the record? Do I understand it is not in the record?

Mr. GOFF. You should understand it is within the knowledge of the officials.

Mr. ASHURST. That is not my question. Is there in the record what the Senator has related?

Mr. GOFF. If the Senator's conclusion was correct that my speech were in the record, then it would have been a mere superfluity to make it.

Mr. ASHURST. The conclusion I place on the Senator's statement is that it is wholly hearsay according to the way he stated it. It is not in the record, according to the Senator's statement.

Mr. GOFF. There are figures in the record from which it can be and in fact was computed, but the conclusions I have drawn are not stated in the record.

Mr. ASHURST. I wanted to be clear. Either it is in the record or it is not.

Mr. GOFF. The Senator is entitled to indulge any conclusion he may see fit.

To proceed further, what was the intention of the voter? The voter had before him the fact, scattered broadcast throughout the State of Iowa, that Senator Brookhart was not a Republican and that he had been repudiated by the State central committee. That fact has been proved by Senator Brookhart's attorney on page 111 of the record. Instructions were sent out to the voters similar to the instructions I have read. This fact will appear by referring to the official book, which reads:

This envelope contains a book of election laws. [NOTE.—This book must be returned to the county auditor.]

Here is a book of instructions having in it the laws as they existed in Iowa in the year 1922. There was no opportunity for these later code provisions upon which the minority so strenuously relies to be placed before the voters.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GOFF. I only have five minutes and I can not yield. There was not only sent out to the voters this book of instructions, but they knew that they could vote, even under the code of 1924, in the way in which these 1,344 votes were cast. That provision—subdivision 3—of the code is not mandatory. It says the voter may mark his ballot in any one of three ways—and it does not take from the voter of the State of Iowa the right to vote in any way he sees fit so long as he expresses his intention. It is our duty to find the intention of the voter. It is our duty to construe every election law to find the intention of the voter. The rule is well stated in 20 Corpus Juris at page 155:

The intent of the voter is the prime consideration in determining the validity of the ballot, but this intent must be determined by an inspection of the ballot itself read in the light of the surrounding circumstances.

Mr. President, let me repeat that last statement. When we arrive at the intent of a voter we must reach that intent, judicially speaking, in the light of the surrounding circumstances. What was the light shining upon these 1,344 votes? Will anyone say that the people of Iowa did not know that the Republican State central committee had repudiated Senator Brookhart? Will anyone be so bold as to argue that when Mr. Mitchell brought out the fact that his constituency was the most literate and well read of any constituency in the Nation, and that such information had gone to everybody in the State of Iowa, that the people did not understand that they had no candidate for the great office of United States Senator on the Republican ticket? What did they do? They went into the polling booth and received a ballot. They went to the Republican ticket and they put a cross at the head of the Republican column. They came down the ticket and when they reached the name of Senator Brookhart they passed it by, and thereby destroyed by a special exemption their general intent as it appeared at the top of the ticket.

Can anyone say, that if we take both ballots and read them in the light of the surrounding circumstances, read them as the Republican State central committee and Mr. Mitchell would have us read them, that the people of the State of Iowa did not know that they had no candidate for the United States Senate? They were Republicans and they wanted to vote the straight Republican ticket. When they went down that column in these instances all over the State they clearly indicated and expressed an irrebuttable intention that they would not include Senator Brookhart in their general Republican vote.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, will not the Senator admit that there were thousands of Democrats in that campaigned who wanted to vote for Mr. Brookhart, and the record clearly discloses that situation?

Mr. GOFF. I do not doubt that possibly this is true.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Were there not counted for Mr. Steck over a thousand votes where the cross was not in front of Mr. Steck's name, just as it was not in front of Mr. Brookhart's name when the committee threw out the 1,344 votes?

Mr. GOFF. No, I do not understand that there was any such situation. What I do understand is that the Senator contended—and I hope now if in answering the Senator I run over my time that the Senator will allow me to take it out of his 15 minutes.

Mr. REED of Missouri. No, I will not do that; but I will be generous enough to let him have time to answer the question.

Mr. GOFF. I would like to take it out of the Senator's 15 minutes, and I will not take very long.

Class 6. In this class 149 votes are claimed for Steck and 1,758 for Brookhart. These ballots, except three of them claimed by Brookhart, showed a vote for the respective candidates in the Republican and Democratic columns; and these ballots also had in some instances a cross before the blank line for Senator in the Progressive column. All of these ballots were held to show the intention of the voter except in the case of the three ballots claimed by Brookhart. There was one cross in the square before Brookhart's name in the Republican column. These three ballots had only a cross in the blank space opposite the Progressive column for Senator. These ballots were, as stated, given to the respective parties. These three ballots, in addition to the cross in the Republican circle, had crosses in the squares for the different offices shown in the Republican column except that for Senator. In the case of these three ballots it was held the intention was clearly shown not to vote for Brookhart and they were, for this reason, ruled no votes.

Class 7. In this class 65 ballots are included, 27 being claimed for Steck and 38 for Brookhart. While these ballots all had crosses in two party circles, though not both the Republican and Democratic columns, these ballots were held, with the exception of 2 ballots claimed by Brookhart, to show clearly the intention of the voter to vote for the candidate for whom claimed. In the case of the one ballot wherein there were crosses in both Republican and Progressive circles, and further crosses in the squares in the Progressive column for President, there were also crosses in the squares opposite the blank lines for United States Senator in the Progressive column. There were also crosses in the squares in the Republican column other than candidates for President and Senator. It was clearly intended not to vote for Brookhart, and so ruled no votes by the committee.

Class 8. Here the name of either Steck or Brookhart was written in the Progressive column, making all names appear twice on the ballot for Senator, and the cross placed before the name so written. These were ruled as good votes.

Class 9. These ballots were those where the name of Brookhart was written in the Progressive column, but no initials. The Progressive column, in which these names were written, sometimes had crosses in the square before the name and sometimes did not. These ballots were ruled by the committee as good, and were held to show intention sufficiently to vote for Brookhart.

Class 10. Out of 4 sample ballots, 4 were ruled by the committee to be votes for Brookhart.

Class 11. These ballots covered those on which arrows had been drawn, pointing to the candidate before whose name the cross had been made. These ballots were held good. The objections raised to these ballots were that they were mutilated in the sense that the arrow identified them as the vote of a certain individual. The committee overruled this contention and counted the ballots for the respective candidates, 222 for Steck and 22 for Brookhart.

Class 12. These ballots had lines directly before the name of the candidate by whose name a cross had been placed in the square, or other marks drawing attention to the cross so made. These ballots were held by the committee not to be identified ballots, and therefore good, 58 for Steck and 36 for Brookhart.

Class 13. These ballots were those where the name of one party was stricken out and a cross was placed in the square before the name of the other candidate. They were objected to on the ground of obliteration. They were held good votes for the party before whose name the cross had been placed. The committee held that they showed a clear intention on the part of the voter so to vote. There were 362 of such votes for Steck and 16 for Brookhart.

Class 14. These were ballots where crosses had been made in the squares opposite one candidate, and erased or obliterated and marked again in the square opposite the name of the opposing candidate. These ballots were ruled good. There were 14 of these for Steck and 24 for Brookhart.

Class 15. These were the ballots which contained miscellaneous markings. The committee held them good, and there were 97 for Brookhart and 155 for Steck.

Class 16. These were 10 unclassified votes, all of which were claimed by Brookhart. With the exception of 3 ballots the committee gave them to Brookhart. These 3 ballots had the name of Brookhart stricken through and no cross in any senatorial square, and were therefore ruled as no votes. This was clearly the intention of the voters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I can take the floor only once, and when I take it I will give the Senator a chance. I do not want to take the floor now.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, Senators will place me under additional obligation if they will permit me to proceed and state within a few moments, as I necessarily must, certain rules of law and certain principles by which I am guided, and by which—and I say this with the utmost respect—I think other Senators should be guided in reaching a conclusion in respect of this matter. Necessarily I can not elaborate; I must content myself with what may be regarded as rather a dogmatic statement of certain rules, of certain principles.

I first invite the thought of the Senate to the certificate of election coming from the State of Iowa. That certificate of election was presented here. It was found to be in due form and sufficient in substance, and being so found, the Senator certified to as being the duly chosen Senator from the State of Iowa appeared in this Chamber, took the oath, and entered upon the discharge of his duties as a qualified duly chosen Senator from a sovereign State. I ask that that certificate may appear in the brief remarks which I shall make, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The certificate is as follows:

STATE OF IOWA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that on the 4th day of November, 1924, Hon. Smith W. Brookhart was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Iowa a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 1925.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Iowa.

Done at Des Moines this 5th day of December, 1924.

[SEAL.]

N. E. KENDALL,
Governor of Iowa.

By the GOVERNOR:

W. C. RAMSAY,
Secretary of State.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Thereafter Mr. Steck filed a contest. That contesting paper or petition will be found on page 9 of the hearings. It contains various allegations; indeed, quite a large number of allegations of fact; and I must assume that it was considered by him or those representing him that if those facts were established, if they were proved, he would establish his right to a seat in this body.

May I emphasize to the thoughtful Senators who do me the honor to listen that certain specific allegations were set forth and appear in the contestant's petition? What rule of law shall govern us here to-day in determining whether the facts alleged have been proved? In all actions at law, in all proceedings in equity, in all criminal prosecutions, in all matters where an allegation is made, the burden of proof rests upon him who makes the allegation. That is a rule of law; that is a rule of law observed in every civilized country; that is a rule of law enforced in every tribunal of justice; and I trust it will be far in the future when, if ever, this body shall cease to be governed by law and by accepted principles and rules of law. The burden of proof rests on the contestant.

The question therefore is, Has this rule of law which places upon the contestant the burden of proof been satisfied?

In aid of the contestee there are certain presumptions applicable to this case, presumptions which the law introduces in support of his certificate of election. I scarcely need to add that a presumption is a deduction which the law expressly directs to be made. There are conclusive presumptions, presumptions which may not be controverted. And there are many disputable presumptions, presumptions which may be controverted. Among the latter class of presumptions is the great presumption, immemorial, honored, respected in every civilized tribunal on this rolling earth, the great and all-embracing presumption that a man is innocent of offense, is guiltless of any crime or offense charged against him. That great presumption protects alike the princess in her silver slipper laced with gold and the peasant maiden shod in wood. It protects alike the king on his throne and the subject kneeling. It protects us all here and elsewhere. That presumption of innocence of crime or of offense charged is a shield of protection for every official high or low, for every citizen rich or poor.

But there is another important presumption, recognized in the laws in all the States of our Union, and that presumption is that "official duty has been regularly performed." It is found in the codes of the different States. These presumptions prevail and protect unless and until they are controverted and overcome. How may they be overcome? I am repeating almost in hæc verba the words of the Senator from Missouri. These presumptions, so important, so vital, in the protection of life and liberty and property rights, must be overcome, thrown down by evidence and by competent legal evidence. I put these questions to the thoughtful minds present. Has this certificate of election been discredited? Has the burden of proof been satisfied? Have these presumptions been overcome, not by imagination, not by theory, not by whim or passion or prejudice, but have they severally been overcome by competent evidence found here in the record before us?

I come next to this great proposition, Mr. President, concerning which much might be said, namely, the power of the Senate in matters of election of Senators. Article I, section 5, of our Constitution provides that—

Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members.

Power, authority to judge, necessarily implies that we shall judge, and in judging be guided by certain principles, rules, and not by prejudice or passion or whim or certainly not by party predilections. In saying this let no man present or elsewhere think or infer that I am imputing to others a decision other than they conceive to be the result of the evidence in this case. I do not assume to be moved by higher motives than those who may differ from me, but I repeat that the power to judge given to us by the Constitution carries with it the duty to judge according to the rules and principles of law.

That brings me in my present remarks to this vital question: By what rule shall we judge under the authority given us to judge—by the rule that follows the State law or by the "rule of intent," so called, said to have been adopted by the Senate? An answer to that question, Mr. President, raises a vital issue, an issue that lifts this case far above persons, far above parties. That issue involves the relation of the State to the Federal Government as that relation affects the right of the State to choose its two Senators. That issue involves the right and the power, the constitutional right and power, of a State to choose its Senators. Has the State that power? The Constitution of the United States gives it that power in specific language, unequivocal, direct, and so plain that we can all understand. Moreover, the Constitution provides that the "times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof." Conceding the right of the State to choose its Senators through the machinery of its own laws, not inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, should we not in judging of the election of a given Senator turn to and be guided by the constitution and laws of that State?

Mr. President, under the Constitution the State determines who are electors; the State enacts laws for the exercise of the elective franchise, for primary and general elections, for counting votes cast and for whom, and for certifying to the result. We are brought, then, face to face with this question, which we must answer; I must answer at any rate: Shall we ignore the constitution and laws of a State and the result of an election certified to by the governor or the authorized agent of that State? I can not too strongly emphasize how deeply I feel upon that question. To ignore the laws of a State, searching out for the so-called "intent of the voter," would be to ignore the dual form of our government—an "indestructible Union made up of indestructible States." To do so, Mr. President, would be to degrade the State, to deprive it of an integral portion of its sovereignty, and to impair the structure reared by the wisdom of our ancestors. It is conceivable that by doing so a majority in this body, swept away by party passion, in the arrogance of power, might deprive a State of a voice in this Chamber.

Mr. President, I have said that an issue is raised in this case that lifts this contest far above persons—nay more, it lifts far above parties. This is the Senate of the United States.

We are vested with great power; we are charged with grave duty—the duty of preserving the rights of men and of States.

In his noble address when assuming that chair, Vice President Coolidge uttered these memorable words:

To the Senate, renewing its membership by degrees, representing in part the sovereign States, has been granted not only a full measure of the power of legislation but, if possible, far more important functions. To it is intrusted the duty of review, that to negotiation there may be added ratification and to appointment approval. But its greatest function of all, too little mentioned and too little understood, whether exercised in legislating or reviewing, is the preservation of liberty. Not merely the rights of the majority—they little need protection—but the rights of the minority, from whatever source they may be assailed. The great object for us to seek here, for the Constitution identifies the Vice Presidency with the Senate, is to continue to make this Chamber, as it was intended by the fathers, the citadel of liberty. An enormous power is here conferred, capable of much good or ill, open it may be to abuse, but necessary, wholly and absolutely necessary, to secure the required result.

Whatever its faults, whatever its human imperfections, there is no legislative body in all history that has used its powers with more wisdom and discretion, more uniformly for the execution of the public will, or more in harmony with the spirit of the authority of the people which has created it, than the United States Senate. I take up the duties the people have assigned me under the Constitution, which we can neither enlarge nor diminish, of presiding over this Senate, agreeably to its rules and regulations, deeply conscious that it will continue to function in harmony with its high traditions as a great deliberative body, without passion and without fear, unmoved by clamor, but most sensitive to the right, the stronghold of government according to law, that the vision of past generations may be more and more the reality of generations yet to come.

Yes, Mr. President—

the great object for us to seek here, * * * is to continue to make this Chamber, as it was intended by the fathers, the citadel of liberty.

And in order that "union and liberty" may be "one and inseparable"—the words of Webster in reply to Hayne—we must uphold the constitutional power of the States, and that power includes the right to choose their Senators according to their laws.

Mr. President, I repeat, there are principles, there are laws, there are provisions of the Constitution by which we should be guided and governed. By them I shall be guided and governed.

In view of the Constitution of the United States and the laws of Iowa, as I read them, and in the light of the facts as I see them, I have reached the conclusion that the contestant, Mr. Steck, has not established his right to a seat in this body as the duly chosen Senator from the State of Iowa, and if permitted to do so, I shall vote accordingly.

THE VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from California has expired.

MR. LENROOT. Mr. President, I do not rise to occupy the entire 15 minutes, nor for any other purpose than to explain the vote I am about to cast in this very important matter.

I believe that Senators, in acting upon this matter, occupy exactly the same relation to the contest that a judge upon the bench occupies to the case before him; and I am sure that Senators do approach the consideration of this question from that standpoint.

In the first place, Mr. President, I think it unfortunate that we have not before us a record upon which we may form a judgment except upon one theory of the law. That is to say, if the Senate does not accept the theory of the majority of the committee with reference to the question of the discrepancy between the poll lists and the actual ballots found in the box, then we have before us no record upon which we or anybody could form any intelligent judgment, because the evidence is wholly missing except upon the theory that that discrepancy was wholly immaterial.

But first, Mr. President, the question of the 1,344 ballots, which involves the question of whether Senators shall use their own judgment without regard to any provisions of law in arriving at the intent of the voter, or whether the law of Iowa shall be followed by Senators in arriving at that intent.

It seems to me, in view of the provisions of the Constitution under which the power is practically delegated to the States to make rules for the government of these elections unless Congress itself sees fit to exercise its jurisdiction that is given by the Constitution, that the States must make rules with reference to these elections governing the question of how the intent of the voters shall be arrived at. The State of Iowa has made such a rule. We can not say that it is an unreasonable rule. That being so, it seems to me that we must follow it. Indeed, Mr. President, if we do not, if we shall take the other theory—that the Senate is not bound at all by any State law in arriving at the intent of voters—then we have destroyed to a very large degree the protection that a State ought to have; because if we are to follow our own views, irrespective of the laws of a State, how easy it is to decide these election contests according to partisanship and through passion or prejudice, as the case may be?

That being so, Mr. President, I am forced to the conclusion that the law of Iowa with reference to arriving at the intent of the voters being a reasonable law, we must be governed by it; and I shall be forced to consider that those one thousand three hundred and forty-odd votes should be counted for Mr. Brookhart.

That leaves a majority for Mr. Steck of 46 votes; and the only question then remaining, it seems to me, is the one of the discrepancy between the poll lists and the ballots found in the box.

Mr. President, I do not believe that the Senate should assume that wherever there is any discrepancy any presumption should arise that the error is wholly in the poll list, because that must be the presumption if the discrepancy is to be thrown aside. I realize, as I think every Senator must, that natural human error would result many, many times in a discrepancy of 1, 2, 3, 4, or possibly 5 ballots between the poll list and the ballots found. I do not say where the line should be drawn as to what may be termed natural error and where the presumption should arise that something has happened, either by reason of acts of the election officers or subsequently, to affect the situation, changing the result of the official count. But where we have a discrepancy of as high as 6 or 7 per cent—that is, where there are 20 less ballots found in a ballot box in which the total vote of the precinct is only 256—that is too large a discrepancy to be accounted for by natural human error, according to my judgment; and where there is such a discrepancy—and we have the evidence of it before us—and where it was properly brought to the attention of the committee, it seems to me that we must take notice of it, and we must each form our own judgment as to whether that was a discrepancy where we should conclusively presume that the error was in the poll list and not in the number of ballots, or presume that something has happened somewhere so that the ballots in the box do not accurately represent the vote that was actually cast at that election.

I appreciate that there have been stipulations and waivers and estoppels urged. We have no evidence before us, we have none in the record, of the 1,068 precincts where there are discrepancies. We do not know what the discrepancies are in a single one of those precincts except the few that we find in the record. It might be that if we had all the evidence before us, it being an average of only three, if we were to indulge merely in presumption, a difference of three should not be held to affect the result, and the recount should be taken rather than the official count. But we do find in the record, Mr. President, five precincts in four of which the recount was taken and in one of which the official count was taken; and as to those four precincts concerning which there is question, it seems to me that the objection was seasonably made; the notation was made upon the work sheet that in those particular cases the question was submitted to the committee; the attorney for Mr. Brookhart properly and in a timely way raised the question before the committee; and it seems to me the only criticism that can be indulged—and it is a just criticism—is that in the case of those five precincts, instead of the protested ballots going into the general mass of protested ballots, they ought to have been kept segregated by each precinct; and if that had been done the committee and the Senate could have had the fullest information with regard to those precincts.

Therefore, so far as my own conclusion is concerned, I feel myself limited to the consideration of these particular precincts, starting in with a majority of 46 for Mr. Steck; and the first one is the Estherville precinct, where there is a shortage of 20 votes, where the vote came in a sealed sack, as did all of the other three, and in which Mr. Brookhart loses 66 votes by the recount.

As to this precinct, I can not understand how the presumption that has been urged that this is merely a natural error or discrepancy can be maintained, because it appears from the record itself that after the discrepancy was discovered 34 more ballots were sent to the committee, purporting to come from this same precinct; and when those 34 ballots are counted, instead of having a shortage of 20, we have an excess of 10. That being so, Mr. President, it seems to me that utterly destroys any possible presumption that the discrepancy of 20 was a natural discrepancy that can be accounted for through error in the poll list. That being so, it seems to me there is nothing to be done except to resort to the official count.

In the case of the Bear Grove township there was a total vote of 256. There is a discrepancy of 20, nearly 6 per cent of the entire vote of the precinct, Mr. President. Every Senator has had experience, I think, as I had in my early days, in acting as election clerk; and is it possible to assume that out of a vote of 256 voters there would be a shortage of 20 unless there be mistake or fraud? And there is no evidence of fraud. So it seems to me conclusive that there must be a mistake in this particular precinct. We can not account for it through any natural discrepancy. That being so, it seems to me that we are again compelled to resort to the official count.

As to those two precincts they overcome the 46 majority. As to what the precincts are other than those set out in the record, we do not know. I wish we did. I think it very unfortunate that the Senate has not the discrepancy in each precinct. I think it very unfortunate that the contested or protested ballots were not kept segregated in each precinct, so that the Senate would have full opportunity to pass upon the merits of each precinct and decide for itself, or each Senator for himself, as to a discrepancy as to whether it was one that could naturally be accounted for through human error, or accounted for through mistake and an absence of ballots, a shortage of ballots for some cause or other.

So, Mr. President, so far as I am concerned it seems to me that as far as this record goes neither party has made a case. Taking these precincts concerning which we do have evidence, it would seem to me that Mr. Brookhart had a majority, but only by resorting to the official count rather than to the recount. Therefore, my mind has come to the conclusion that in this kind of a record—and I do not reflect in any way upon the committee; they gave us this record in accordance with their theory of the law, and we have not the evidence upon which to arrive at a conclusion upon any other theory of the law—realizing that the burden is upon the contestant to satisfy the Senate that Mr. Brookhart was not elected and that he was, and believing, as I do, that that burden of proof has not been successfully sustained, see nothing to be done, so far as I am concerned, other than to vote to seat Mr. Brookhart, for the reasons I have stated.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in the few minutes at my disposal I desire to take a bird's-eye view of the entire situation. To begin with, there was an election in Iowa, after which an official certificate of election was issued to Senator Brookhart, giving him a majority of over 700 votes. There has not been a single syllable of testimony anywhere, not a claim made anywhere, that there was any fraud, anything wrong, or even any mistake in the official count. It stands before the Senate now untarnished and undefiled.

Mr. GEORGE. Is the Senator speaking of the official count?

Mr. NORRIS. The official record, yes; the official count.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not want to take the Senator's time—

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. But in every class of precinct the count was impeached.

Mr. NORRIS. That would naturally follow the institution of a contest. Not a single person has testified to any fraud at the election, any misconduct of the judges in counting the ballots, nothing of that kind. Of course, in a general way, there could not be a contest without an attack of the official count. I concede that.

Who made the official count? And I can say this without censure, I know, because the able Senator from West Virginia has spent a good share of his time in showing that everybody in Iowa knew and believed that Senator Brookhart was not a good Republican. Who held the offices? Who were the judges and the clerks of election all over that State? They were either Republicans or Democrats. The Democrats were for Steck; and the Republicans—at least those who followed the State central committee—were against Brookhart. So, without ascribing to anybody any fraud, it is fair to say that practically all of the election officials of the State of Iowa were the political enemies of Senator Brookhart. I am not charging a single one of them with doing a thing he did not believe to be right, but it is fair to say that they would not give Brookhart the benefit of a doubt. The doubts all over that State would be resolved, as would be natural to expect, in favor of Steck. So, if there is any shade of objection to the official count, it would be that Steck got the best of the doubtful conditions. Yet, notwithstanding all that, his political enemies gave Brookhart a majority in the State of Iowa of over 700 votes.

That is not all. There are certain precincts in Iowa where the vote is had by machine. A machine is a cold, mathematical proposition. There is no sentiment, no feeling, about it. Everything is done by machinery. The machine does not lie; it can not lie. It reacts, and when it records the votes, and the machine is kept locked—and it is conceded that the machines in Iowa were kept locked—the result stands. Nobody can change it. Nobody can pull a ballot out or put another one in.

It is remarkable that when this contest started and the counters began to count the votes, in the machine precincts Brookhart gained more than 700 votes, simply demonstrating again that where the machinery of the election was mainly against him they did not always read the results right. They made mistakes in not counting the straight votes for Brookhart; and when the recount was made, he gained. In the machine precincts there was no chance of fraud. I submit there was no opportunity to change a single vote. Yet Brookhart gained, and with the official count he has more than 1,500 votes to the good.

Then we commence to recount the paper ballots, where, if the same rule had applied—and there was no reason why it should not apply—and no mistake had been made and there had been no fraud, we would have expected Brookhart to have made a similar gain. The ballots were counted by his political enemies, and that is where opportunity for fraud existed, if it existed at all. What happened? When we get into the paper ballots, Brookhart commences to lose. There we commence to find that the number of names of the men who voted in a given precinct does not correspond with the number of ballots brought here before the committee. We find differences of over a hundred in one voting precinct, 25 and 30 in some other precincts that are mentioned in the minority report.

Can anybody conceive, in a precinct of two or three hundred voters, that there should be a difference of 20 between the number of ballots in the box and the number of persons who voted at the election? Would it not have been true that the official counters would have found that out the night of the election? Can anyone conceive that that condition could exist? We might find a change of one or two, or perhaps three, occasionally.

Another thing, in one of these precincts, as the Senator from Mississippi, a member of the committee, tells us, there were 20 ballots short, 20 less ballots sent to the committee than the number of persons who voted in that precinct, and Brookhart lost just exactly 20 votes. Does anybody believe that would happen? Does anybody think for a moment that it could be an accident that 20 votes should be taken out and that every one of those votes would be a Brookhart vote?

Again, Mr. President, we find that in Winterset precinct, Madison County, the ballots sent did not correspond with the number of persons voting, and the committee took the official count. I think they did the right thing. Brookhart gained, in that case, 198 votes. Then we go on down to Guthrie County, Bear Grove township, where there was a shortage of 20 votes out of less than 500 votes cast. It would have been to Brookhart's advantage to have followed the same rule and take the official count, but the committee did not take it. They counted the ballots, and Brookhart loses.

Then they go on down to Emmet County, Estherville township, where there was a shortage of 20 ballots, and later on somebody sent to the committee 34 more ballots and said they belonged to that precinct. The committee counted the ballots in that case. It was to Steck's advantage and Brookhart's loss. They did not follow the rule. They established what I believe to be the legal rule as to Winterset precinct in Madison County. They took the official count. Then we go down to Wapello County, Center township, where there was a shortage of 22 ballots. If they had followed the rule, the correct rule, and taken the official count in that case, Brookhart would have been the gainer. But they did not do it. They took the reverse of the rule and counted the ballots, and Brookhart again was the loser.

There were two or three others mentioned in the minority report, but I shall not go over it. However, it looks to me as though this rule is just, is legal, and is the only rule honest men can take. We can not take a precinct where there are 20 votes short and count the ballots and arrive at the correct result of the election in that precinct. It is physically impossible to do it, and every man knows that it is impossible. It is no answer to say that Brookhart's attorney did not object in time or that they agreed to do this, or anything of the kind. It has been disclosed, and it stands undisputed, that those are the facts, and no amount of argument can get away from it or get around it. If we followed the rule established in the first precinct I have named and took the official count, then it is conceded, it stands uncontradicted, that Brookhart would be ahead.

Much has been said about these 344 votes, and I am astounded that anyone who claims to be learned in the law should thrust aside the law of Iowa and refuse to count those votes for Brookhart. It must be remembered that not all of those votes omitted only the name of Brookhart. They omitted

Brookhart and others, sometimes only Brookhart; but a large majority of the ballots omitted the names of other candidates besides Brookhart, and the counters of the votes in Iowa, faced with the law of Iowa, counted them as straight ballots.

Senators, it seems to me that if there is any place in the world where we ought to stand up for law and order it is in this body. Are we to send out to the country the word that we are going to cast aside the solemn statutes of Iowa? It is no answer to say that the election law was passed only a few days before the election, because it likewise stands uncontradicted that that law only put into statute form what had been the law of Iowa for years and had been so declared by the Supreme Court.

Are we to say to the country that we are above the law of a sovereign State? Are we to establish a precedent here that we disregard law in the Senate of the United States, that we violate the Constitution of the United States? Are we to establish that kind of a precedent here, merely for the purpose of putting one man out and putting another man in?

It seems to me, Mr. President, that there is but one side to that legal proposition. There can be no legal dispute about it. Again we come back to the fact that the official count of Iowa gave these votes to Senator Brookhart, as the law provided; and if the law of Iowa provides that these votes shall be thus counted, we are stopped, unless we want to be violators of the law, from taking any other position.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, when one is about to prepare an unpalatable dish for a fellow being it is well to reflect, "How would I like to partake of this dish I am preparing for my fellow citizen?"

The Senate has never established a rule to follow in contested-election cases. Therefore we are relegated to the law of the particular State, as has been pointed out by the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT]. The Senator from California read the credentials of the sitting Member, Mr. Brookhart. Three decisions of the Supreme Court of the State of Iowa hold that before such a prima facie, that is to say, a certificate, can be overthrown, clear and unmistakable evidence must be introduced to that effect. We are asked to overthrow a certificate, regular on its face, held by the sitting Member, upon what? Upon a shortage of 3,000 or more ballots, and we are asked to count the absent ballots against the sitting Member. I decline to do so.

Two tally sheets are kept in Iowa under the law, and where the ballots are absent it is the duty of the contestant to bring both tally sheets in order that we may have a complete check upon the matter. That was not done. We are asked to overthrow the prima facie upon an absence of ballots. We are asked to overthrow the certificate upon the absence of one of the tally sheets.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I have only 15 minutes, but I will yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, never mind.

Mr. ASHURST. I hope the Senator will at least take the floor and make some answer to what I am saying.

Mr. CARAWAY. All right; I shall do so.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator spent a day and a half arguing the case, and I hope that he will now take a minute or two and tell me why they did not bring both tally sheets here. I pause for a reply.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the Senator know they were not both here?

Mr. ASHURST. I do; that is what your report said.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the Senator kindly show me that statement in the record or the report?

Mr. ASHURST. I ask the Senator what authority he had to count the absent ballots against the sitting Member?

Mr. CARAWAY. According to the sworn statement of the gentleman for whom the Senator from Arizona is going to vote. We had between 1,000 and 2,000 votes more on the recount than were originally counted. There were nearly 7,000 votes that were determined on the recount, and if the Senator is not going to be bound by them, then he would have to return to the official count.

Mr. ASHURST. That is not an answer to my question as to why the committee counted the absent votes against Brookhart.

Mr. CARAWAY. They did not, and nobody has asserted that they did. There is not a line of evidence that we counted the absent ballots against anybody.

Mr. ASHURST. I assert that you did.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator can not find it in the record.

Mr. ASHURST. The prima facie has not been overcome. The Senator from Arkansas will be a candidate for reelection this fall and 31 other Senators will be candidates in various States. I hope the Senator from Arkansas will be reelected. He contributes to the life and strength of the Republic. He provides the humor of the Senate. He is the king's jester of the Senate. When he comes here with a certificate, or if any other Senator presents a certificate and the same is challenged, what will he do? He will plead with the Senate not to follow the rule that he is to-day invoking in the Steck-Brookhart case. He will plead with the Senate to follow the rule that I invoke to-day; that is, that the certificate granted by the State of Arkansas shall not be overcome by defective evidence.

The able Senator said that Brookhart waived the question of discrepancy of ballots. That was clearly answered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. How could the Senator waive any point as to the contents of the sacks and packets until he knew the number of ballots therein, and that could only be ascertained by a count of the ballots in the sacks? It would have been a senseless and untimely thing to object until the ballots were counted and ascertained to be short, and yet the anvil chorus has been loudly proclaiming that he waived the question of shortage of ballots.

I am inclined to agree with the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LEXNOR] that at best and at the most it is a mere guess. Conceding integrity of opinion to every other Senator, which I do—I am not more earnest than the Senator from Arkansas, but searching the recesses of his own heart he is unable to say that it is more than a mere guess.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, I deny that absolutely. There is not a single fact on which to base that statement.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well, the Senator denies that statement. He does not even know a good guess when he sees one.

Mr. CARAWAY. At least, I do not make up my mind until I have seen the facts.

Mr. ASHURST. And even then the Senator does not.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, the Senator can not say that.

Mr. ASHURST. I made up my mind as soon as I heard the Senator's speech made.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, that is not so.

Mr. ASHURST. I must hurry along.

Mr. CARAWAY. I think the Senator had better do so.

Mr. ASHURST. I am not anxious for any swordplay with that scintillating wit, that rather heartless speaker, the Senator from Arkansas. I am not particularly anxious to get into a duel of words with him, but with right on my side I am not afraid to enter into such a contest.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, did the Senator ever look at one of the votes that was cast?

Mr. ASHURST. I did.

Mr. CARAWAY. How many did the Senator examine?

Mr. ASHURST. I was not on the committee.

Mr. CARAWAY. There are 4,000 of them. How does the Senator know how they were cast if he did not see them?

Mr. ASHURST. We commissioned the Committee on Privileges and Elections to make an examination of the ballots and it did not do so.

Mr. CARAWAY. But we did do it. The Senator is entirely mistaken about that.

Mr. ASHURST. Did the Senator examine the ballots?

Mr. CARAWAY. We examined every ballot except those ballots which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Brookhart] authorized his attorney to agree were not voted for him.

Mr. ASHURST. How many ballots did the Senator examine?

Mr. CARAWAY. I examined about 4,000.

Mr. ASHURST. There were over 900,000 cast.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, but the Senator from Arizona—

Mr. ASHURST. We commissioned the Committee on Privileges and Elections to examine the ballots and they did not do it. Now they attempt to overthrow the prima facie after they have been remiss in their duty.

Mr. CARAWAY. If the Senator thinks he will get anywhere by making a loud noise, I am perfectly willing for him to try it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator from Arizona must bear in mind the fact that Mr. Brookhart agreed to have the votes counted by having his representatives present, without having the members of the committee examine each individual vote. The Senator knows that.

Mr. ASHURST. But the Senator did not examine all of the ballots, and that is what he should have done. He is the instrument of the Senate.

Mr. CARAWAY. But not of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ASHURST. He is commissioned by the Senate to act for the Senate.

Mr. CARAWAY. I deny that.

Mr. ASHURST. The instrument of the Senate.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; put it that way.

Mr. ASHURST. I withdraw the term "creature." I do not intend to bring the word "creature" into juxtaposition with the Senator.

Mr. CARAWAY. There are times when that is permissible. Would the Senator have accepted the recount where the parties agreed upon it?

Mr. ASHURST. There is no authority of any man to stipulate one man into the Senate and one man out. According to the Senator's philosophy, it would have enabled us to stipulate Mr. Lorimer into the Senate and somebody else out. I decline to allow a seat in the Senate to be stipulated away.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is not the Senator conscious that he is acting under stipulation when he—

Mr. ASHURST. I am not acting on stipulations.

Mr. CARAWAY. Would the Senator accept a stipulation of any kind?

Mr. ASHURST. I mean by that that the Senator can not overcome the prima facie in that way.

Mr. CARAWAY. The stipulation helps to do it.

Mr. ASHURST. You do not overcome the prima facie in that way. In this contest, Mr. President, I have not charged the committee with bad faith.

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, of course, not.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator mumbles sotto voce "of course, not." I am charging the committee with the failure to perform that duty which the Senate imposed upon it. Moreover, if I have not the capacity to indulge in sword play with the Senator, I have, at least, the fortitude to endure his thrusts.

At 5 o'clock this contest is to be disposed of. When the din and sensations of this hour are forgotten, when all that is said and done here to-day is gathered into—I was about to say history, but history will not even deign to notice it—but when it shall have been gathered into musty tomes, when we have left these seats forever, no man will look back with pride upon the fact that he voted to overcome a prima facie and displace a Member legally elected and seat another man on such flimsy testimony.

When in doubt, Mr. President, we should make a bee line for justice. Then we will not have to live eternally with that feeling of self-reproach and reproof.

Let this case be decided on its merits. I desire that a Democratic Senate shall be elected in 1926 and that we will have a Democratic Senate in 1927. No well-informed man doubts other than that the Democrats will triumph in 1926, but let us not obtain one seat "purchased." Let us not obtain even one seat to which we are not entitled. Let us come with clean hands on the 4th day of March, 1927. Let no coward thought of praise or blame enter into this contest to decide the issue.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Arizona has expired.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, this case is decided, and I am not unconscious of the fact that nothing I shall say will change its result. However, I do not mean to let any Senator allege as his reason for voting for Mr. Brookhart that it was all a guess and he had as good a right to guess as the other fellow, which, of course, if it is a guess, is true.

There is not a Senator on this floor, either those sitting in front of me or those on the other side, who examined the votes cast in Iowa who will rise here now and say that Mr. Steck was not elected. There is not a Senator on either side who cared enough about right or wrong in this contest to look at the ballots in dispute who will stand up and say that Mr. Brookhart was elected. I will pause for a reply just as long as Senators want me to pause so they give me one minute before my time expires. There is not a Senator who saw the ballots who will stand up here and say that.

Mr. ASHURST. I stood up and said that I believed Mr. Brookhart had been elected.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator said that he had not seen the ballots.

Mr. ASHURST. No; I have not.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then, of course, the Senator's belief is founded upon—I will not say what. It is so obvious, what is the use to say it? When the Senator says he never saw the ballots, does not know anything about them, and therefore he is going to vote for Brookhart; if that is a reason, why should anyone vote for Steck?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Arkansas for a moment to say that the Senator from Arizona went further than that—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator from Arkansas went further than that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let there be order in debate.

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. BRUCE. The Senator from Arizona went further than that and said that Senators in this body who ventured to differ from him propose to steal the seat.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course it is not stealing provided you vote his way. I say again, sir, and I know it is true and nobody will deny it, that there is not a man on this floor who examined the votes who will stand up now and say that Mr. Steck was not elected and that Mr. Brookhart was elected. I know that to be so. No honest man could have gone through the votes and reach any other conclusion.

Senators can not change the facts; God Almighty can not do that. They can change their votes in the Senate sometimes and make statements that others do not have time to examine; they can vote against a man who receives a majority of votes and put a man in the Senate that did not receive a majority; but they can not change a fact; they can not change the fact that the people of Iowa did not vote the way some Senators talk. Senators who are voting on this question without any reference to how the votes were cast can make any excuse they want to people who do not know the facts, but they can not come here with a statement like the one which has been made and expect anyone who knows the facts to accept it because it is not true, and nobody is going to accept it.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] said that class 3 and class 5 were alike. They were not any more alike than class 3 and class 16. But what difference does that make to one who is going to vote his political sentiments and then denounce other Senators for wanting to seat Steck because they will not help him to seat Brookhart?

Let me say to those who want this cause decided because they say there was a shortage of 3,300 votes, why, God bless your soul, if you decide it the other way you will do it in the face of 7,000 votes. Disfranchising the people of Iowa, and doing it by your vote! Those who would rather seat one contestant than another because they have some prejudice in the matter, because they served on a committee with the incumbent at one time, can do so if they desire, but they will not change a fact, they will not make it right, and they will not make anybody believe that it was right.

Now, it is said that the parties to the contest could not enter into stipulations. Why, every Senator who votes on this question is stipulating as to 995,000 votes. You never repudiate a stipulation until it hurts the man you have resolved to vote for, and then you join him in repudiating his solemn stipulations and say that a stipulation could not be made; but you do not repudiate a single stipulation that helps him. You do not fool anybody by that sort of argument; you do not make anybody accept it.

The Senator in effect charges the committee with dereliction of duty. There is no man on the floor of the Senate, including the Senator from Arizona, who if he had been on that committee would have handled every one of those votes. Why, everyone who has ever practiced law knows that attorneys' stipulations are accepted and recognized in every court from that of a justice of the peace to the Supreme Court of the United States. We do business with each other under the belief that men will tell the truth and honorable men abide by their agreements. We would not practice law a day without such agreements. No one ever tried a lawsuit in his life that there was not some kind of an agreement to which the parties lived up.

I do not care personally about the question of sustaining the committee or not sustaining it. I want Senators to vote their convictions; but I should like to have Senators before they do so to examine the facts. I would not want them to ignore the facts and expect us to sit still and listen to such tirades as we have heard and accept the statements thus made as true. They are not true; and yet Senators who have not examined the facts talk about the dereliction of the committee.

I thought it was the duty of a Senator before he made up his mind to examine the facts. It does not do any good to accuse some one else of a failure to examine the facts, base your conclusion upon some other man's failure of duty, charge us with dereliction, and admit in the same breath that you are derelict and have not taken the time and have not availed yourself of the opportunity to look at the votes, when it would not have taken you an hour to have done it.

I may be the king's jester. It may prove something to the Senator from Arizona, but, thank God, there is one difference between him and me in this case. I know what the record shows; I know what the vote was, and I can prove by every Republican member of the committee who served with me, who sat there and examined the facts, that there was not a single question about who won or who lost until we had gone through with the votes. If that is not true, there are enough Senators on the other side of the Chamber who will stand up now and say so. There is not one of them who is going to do it, because they all know they can not do it and keep their reputations for speaking the unsullied truth. Senators charge us with dereliction, but are making up their minds as to how they shall vote when they do not know and have not examined the record, as members of the committee did. Although they had an opportunity to do it, they would not do it, and then come here and charge us with dereliction of duty. Well, Mr. President, it sounds well. Denunciation may be good politics; I do not know as to that.

The Senator from Arizona said I would come back, but let me say this to him: If I should come back here with a contest on my hands and I should go into a recount of the votes and should have to keep my seat by breaking my stipulations and he should vote for me under those circumstances, so help me, Almighty God, he and I would speak the same language no more forever, because I want to be seated, if I am seated at all, so that I may look any man in the face and say I got the seat because I was entitled to it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator's majority will be so great he need not worry about any contest.

Mr. CARAWAY. If it should be, I should expect the Senator from Arizona to vote against me, because I will not come here without a majority; and I say I know he will be against me, because Mr. Steck has a majority and he is against him.

Mr. ASHURST. I will never vote to overcome the certificate of the State of Iowa by mere presumptions and by guesses.

Mr. CARAWAY. There is not any such presumption.

Mr. ASHURST. I will follow the Iowa law.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the Senator know what the result would have been if we had followed literally the letter of the law in this case?

Mr. ASHURST. Does the Senator mean the law of Iowa?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; in this case.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; I would seat Brookhart.

Mr. CARAWAY. On what does the Senator base that?

Mr. ASHURST. On supreme court decisions.

Mr. CARAWAY. Did the supreme court ever say anything about the Brookhart-Steck contest?

Mr. ASHURST. No; but I refer to the reasoning of the supreme court.

Mr. CARAWAY. The reasoning is the other way. Does the Senator know how many votes were given to Brookhart that the law of Iowa would have stricken down? When a voter who did not appear to know what the law was but honestly tried, as we thought, to vote for him, we gave the vote to him.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator tried to ascertain the intent of the voter?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. All right. Suppose 2,000 voters had written on the ballots "I hereby vote for Senator Brookhart," you would not have counted those votes for him, would you?

Mr. CARAWAY. Every one of them.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not think you would.

Mr. CARAWAY. I know we would. There were votes counted for Brookhart where there was no cross in the circle and no cross in the square opposite his name. The Senator from Arizona did not know that, but if he had taken two minutes he could have found it out. Some voters wrote in the name "Brookhart" without an initial, and they spelled it in every imaginable way, but wherever Brookhart's name got on the ballot the vote was counted for him, although the voters neglected every legal precaution to make it a vote for Brookhart. The committee gave him that vote. If the Senator had examined the record, he would have known it.

According to legal intent, as expressed by the Senator from Montana, Brookhart was beaten by a greater majority than that indicated; but the Senator from Montana the other day said that he was going to regard no stipulation, but only take certain townships and reach his conclusion, and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BLEASE] said, like the Senator from Arizona a while ago, that he was not going to overturn the State certificate; and yet only a few weeks before he voted against the seating of Mr. Nye.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. Nye was appointed by the governor.

Mr. CARAWAY. Well, he had a certificate.

Mr. BLEASE. Brookhart was elected honestly by the people.

Mr. CARAWAY. I repeat, Mr. President, that every vote that was ever suggested by any man on either side was accounted for. These votes were brought here in accordance with Senator Brookhart's agreement. He denied it; but afterwards there was found a telegram from his lawyer to the county auditors showing what I have said to be the fact, and everybody knows it. There were nearly 7,000 more votes than the officials had allowed to be counted in Iowa. There was a discrepancy in the machine vote. Brookhart got 774 plurality by recounting them and nobody complained of that. The Senator from Arizona never heard of it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me at that point?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. If there were no stipulations in the case, would the Senator vote to seat Steck?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes, sir. I would, because we went through the votes and ascertained that Steck got a plurality. I have never seen Steck until within the last few days, and I never discussed the merits of the case with him in my life. The other party to the contest went all around the Senate and, wherever he could, inoculated Senators with his views, and they come here and vote for him.

When the Senator from Arizona sits by his fireside and congratulates himself that among all the corruption and the dishonesty in the Senate he himself escaped pollution from all these things he will at least be the only one who congratulates himself.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is quite humorous.

Mr. CARAWAY. I had not intended to be.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is most humorous when he tries to be serious.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is, when I discuss the Senator from Arizona; the subject accounts for that. [Laughter.]

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not know that I shall consume the entire 15 minutes allotted to me; but I wish to draw the attention of the Senate to the one question in this case.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] very properly said that there was but one question, though he narrowed and restricted the question and devoted his attention to the four or five precincts in which there is a discrepancy between the poll books and the number of ballots found on the recount. The particular precincts to which reference was made appear in the official report, but these precincts are the extreme cases out of 1,068 precincts; that is all. There is but one rule invoked with reference to the four precincts, and that is, there being a discrepancy, it is said to be the duty of the Senate to go back to the official count.

The 67 alleged unsealed precincts to which reference is made present exactly the same question. That is, a discrepancy appearing in those cases between the number of names on the poll list and the actual ballots in the box, it is said to be the duty of the Senate to go back to the official count in those precincts.

Therefore, Mr. President, this whole case presents, as I tried very earnestly to say in my presentation of it to the Senate, but one question—one single question. It is not fair to take the four extreme cases where, by virtue of a return to the official count, Mr. Brookhart would gain; nor is it fair to select out of the whole a few precincts in which Mr. Steck, by a return to the official count, would gain.

For instance, 63 precincts were selected and set out in the official report, not as illustrating a fair way to deal with the question but for the purpose of illustrating one thing, and that is that you can pick out certain precincts and go back to the official count and you can bring about a gain either for Steck or for Brookhart; so that the question fairly presented is, What effect is to be given to the names appearing on the poll books where the ballots found by your committee are actually less than the number of names on the poll books, taking not particular precincts to the benefit of Mr. Brookhart by the application of the rule invoked or other particular precincts which, standing alone, would benefit Mr. Steck by the application of the rule invoked?

Undoubtedly, on the ballots actually counted by your committee, if once they are conceded to be good ballots and all of the ballots cast, there is but one verdict that can be rendered in this case. Under the admitted facts, the count made by your committee gives to Steck a plurality of all the votes cast in the election. Indeed, there is no dispute about it, because in that event the necessity for the rule now sought to be applied would not arise.

Now, I am going to ask the Senate to consider fairly and dispassionately for just a few minutes the law of Iowa with reference to the poll books.

It undoubtedly is the law that the ballot unimpeached is always the higher and better evidence; and that is not the law merely in counting the vote on the day of election. It is the law of contested elections. The law of Iowa requires the preservation of the ballots for six months—for what purpose? I ask those Senators who invoke the rule of State rights; for what purpose? For one purpose, and that is to enable the candidate who has been defrauded, or who thinks he has been defrauded to contest the election. Where can you contest an election for Senator? In the State? The State has no jurisdiction over it. In this body—in this body only.

For six months after the election the law of Iowa provides for the preservation of the ballots for but one purpose—for a contest of this election—and no tribunal has the power or the right or the authority to entertain a contest over a seat in this body save the Senate of the United States.

Mr. President, when on election day the votes are canvassed—and I beg Senators to notice this, because the case is practically settled on the law of Iowa, if indeed it is not actually settled—on the day of election, when the canvassers count out the votes, it is made the duty of the judges to place all of the ballots except—and note the exception—to place all of the ballots in the box except those marked "defective," or rejected as double, after having folded them twice, on a pliable wire, both ends of the wire to be sealed, and then to place the ballots thus sealed in a sack, the sack itself to be sealed.

The law of Iowa does not require that every ballot shall be placed in the container, because from that container, under the letter of the law of Iowa, are to be excluded ballots rejected as double, defective ballots, or rejected ballots; and not only that, but I beg Senators to listen to law: It is made the duty of the judge, after having doubly sealed the ballots which are to go up to the county seat, to return all the ballots to the officer from whom they were received, who shall carefully preserve them for six months, and the statute is mandatory that he shall at once return the ballots.

Now look at the statute dealing with the poll book:

In each precinct one of the poll books containing the aforesaid signed and attested return and one of the registration books, if any, shall be delivered by one of the judges within two days to the county auditor.

When you deal with the ballots, they are to be twice sealed and at once carried up to the county seat. When you deal with the poll books, under the law of Iowa the election judges may retain them in their possession for two days; and that is not all. The ballots are doubly sealed; the ends of the wire running through the ballots are brought together and sealed; and then the sealed ballots are placed in the container, and the container itself sealed; and yet the poll book, which we are told imports verity, the poll book that must upset the solemn verdict of the people of Iowa, may be retained in the hands of the judges for two days, and it is never sealed under the law of Iowa. There is not a requirement that it be sealed. It goes up to the courthouse and is but a public document, where anybody may falsify it by adding names to it and subtracting names from it; and yet you are asked to overturn a recount fairly and honestly made upon the single excuse that there is a disparity between the number of names appearing on the poll books and the actual ballots found in the box and counted by your committee.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield for a question.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator has dwelt on the stringing of the ballots on the wire. All that it would be necessary to do in order to have a shortage of the ballots on the wire would be not to put them there in the first instance, and then, no matter how much you sealed the wire, the ballots would not be there.

Mr. GEORGE. Exactly. I said in my argument the other day that if there was any fraud it occurred in the 1,068 precincts in Iowa; and in order to establish it, though there is not a badge of it here appearing except the alleged proof that springs out of a disparity between the number of names on the poll book and the ballots in the box, you will have to convict nearly 5,500 men scattered all over the State of Iowa of fraud.

Mr. REED of Missouri. No; I do not want to take the Senator's time, but that would not follow at all. There might have been fraud in some precincts and not in others.

Now about the book: The Senator says it was not sealed; but the only way the book could be changed would be by forgery, by somebody going out and writing in or eliminating some names.

Mr. GEORGE. Exactly.

Mr. REED of Missouri. And if that had been the case would not Mr. Steck have promptly shown it when he was confronted with the fact that there was a surplussage of ballots? Was not the burden on him to show it?

Mr. GEORGE. There was no surplussage of ballots, Mr. President.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I should have said a deficiency of ballots.

Mr. GEORGE. The point I make, and the point I insist on, is that under the law of Iowa the mere shortage, or alleged shortage, of ballots is not taken into consideration; and I could demonstrate it if Senators wished it to be demonstrated. I said the other day that the poll books had been sent back to Iowa. Five of them fortunately remain here; and on three of them out of the five you will find a less number of votes actually counted for any set of officers than the names on the poll list.

For instance, in this particular poll book, in Union Township of Adair County there are 209 names on the poll book, and yet the highest number of votes counted for any candidate or candidates is 206, or an actual shortage of 3 ballots.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President—

Mr. GEORGE. Just a minute; my time is nearly out. I think I will anticipate the Senator. But it is said that there might have been no votes; three of the voters might not have voted for the two candidates in the election who together received the highest number of votes. So they might not have; but examine that book. These judges merely sent it up. The auditor at the county seat declared the result. Not one word is said about a shortage; not one word explaining that discrepancy, and yet the result of that election was declared. Manifestly the discrepancy was not considered because it is nowhere noted. Yet we are asked to reject the recount on a ground not even taken into consideration by the officials of Iowa.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Georgia has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS and Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, may I say just a word? I desire to withdraw the resolution that I offered by way of substitute for the committee resolution. I see no reason for having two votes on this matter, so at this time I withdraw my resolution. If the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] desires to speak, I will yield the floor to him, with the understanding that if he does not occupy the 15 minutes I shall claim the balance of the time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this controversy has been submitted with such detail and fullness, and the time remaining is so short, that one must confine his remarks to very general propositions.

I presume every Senator desires to know before he casts his vote, or would like to reach a conclusion, as to what the voters in Iowa did upon last election day, whom they elected as Senator from that State, and will be governed by that rather than the proceedings which may or may not have taken place before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. In other words, I presume every Senator, if he can come to a conclusion under the law and upon the record as to who was really elected from that State, will be governed by that state of facts and by that condition rather than by any proceedings or any stipulations or any waivers about which there has been much controversy in this debate.

Senator Brookhart holds the certificate of election. The authorities in the State of Iowa canvassed the returns and issued a certificate of election. That certificate was presented here, Senator Brookhart was sworn in, and now holds the seat. In view of the present condition of the record, and in view of the present condition of facts as they are presented to the Senate, that to my mind is a controlling factor in this controversy.

In the first place, in order to deprive Senator Brookhart of his seat here it must be conceded that we must disregard the law of the State of Iowa. The 1,344 votes which are to be taken from him, according to the majority report, must be taken from him in disregard and in disrespect of the law of that State. The law of Iowa provides that a voter may vote a straight ticket in three different ways: First, by putting a cross in the circle at the head of the ticket; second, by putting a cross in the square opposite each name upon the ticket; third, by putting a cross in the circle at the top of the ticket, and by putting crosses in the squares before any or all names upon the ticket. The law is plain and unmistakable. A ticket voted in any of these ways is a legal ballot, and must be so regarded under the laws of that State. We have no other rule to guide us.

The committee has found 1,344 ballots in which there was a cross in the circle at the head of the ticket, and in which all names were voted upon, apparently, upon the ballot, except that of Brookhart's, by putting a cross in the square opposite each name.

The law of Iowa must be taken into consideration in order to arrive at the intent of the voter. It is true that the intent of the voter should prevail, but the intent of the voter must be ascertained by taking into consideration the law under which he was casting his ballot. The strong and predominant and dominating intent of the voter in the first instance was to cast a legal ballot. The presumption is, a conclusive presumption, that he knew the law under which he was voting. We can not arrive at the intent of the voter other than by considering the fact that he intended to vote a legal ballot, and was voting in accordance with the laws of the State of Iowa.

It has been said that instructions were sent out which might lead to the inference that a different method of voting would be regarded by the election board as a legal method. In the first place, if the instructions were contrary to the law of the State, undoubtedly the law of the State would have to obtain. In the second place, the instructions which I have examined are not in contravention to the terms of the law, are not confusing under the law. The instructions designated one way in which a voter could vote a straight ballot. They did not pretend or assume to cover the other two subdivisions of the law.

For instance, the instruction which has been read to us was to the effect that if a voter desired to vote a straight ballot, he should put a cross in the circle at the head of the ticket only. But no one would controvert the proposition that, notwithstanding the instruction, if a voter disregarded those instructions and put a circle in front of every name upon the ballot, that would be a straight ballot. The instructions did not undertake to cover the entire law, and that had been the law in Iowa, off and on, for 30 years. At one time it was the law, at another time it was changed, and then they went back to the law as it has existed since 1919. Different contests had gone to the courts in that State under the law; it had been a matter of public concern and of public interest, and undoubtedly the voters of the State knew that they could vote a straight ticket in three different ways.

But let us assume that there was confusion upon this proposition. We can not set aside a certificate of election; we can not set aside the plain provisions of the law, upon inference, upon conjecture, upon speculation. If they are to be set aside, they must be set aside upon legal, competent, and, according to the courts, overwhelming proof as to the intent and purpose of the voter. We must have clear legal proof. That is not here.

So it seems to me that 1,344 votes can only be denied Mr. Brookhart upon the theory that we are to disregard the plain provisions of the Iowa statute with reference to the manner in which a voter may cast a straight ballot.

Secondly, we come to the more debatable proposition with reference to the 76 votes which must be accounted for, even if the 1,344 votes are given to Senator Brookhart. What is the situation? An election is held in the State. The entire machinery is under the control of the State. The election is held under the State law, and in accordance with the State law. The canvassers, or the parties in authority, canvass the situation, and arrive at the conclusion that Senator Brookhart has been elected, and he is given the certificate of election. It is conceded here that for some reason, whether through fraud, which no one charges specifically, or whether through error, in some way 3,300 ballots are gone, or 3,500, as some one near me states. Before we can overturn the certificate of election, and the presumption that every officer in that State did his duty in canvassing the returns and in sending here a Senator, we must have an accounting for those 3,300 ballots. Whether we rely upon the official returns, or whether we rely upon the ballots, they must be accounted for and shown by legal and competent evidence to have been cast in contravention to the certificate of election.

If we take the fact that Brookhart is here with his certificate of election, then the second proposition is just as thoroughly established, that every presumption of law accompanies that certificate, the presumption that the officers did their duty, the presumption that the law was complied with, even the presumption that the 3,300 ballots were for Senator Brookhart—those presumptions obtain and control until they are overcome by legal and competent evidence. It does not make any difference to me, so far as this proposition is concerned, whether the one or the other—the official count or the ballots—is the best evidence as against the other. The fact remains that there is a discrepancy and that there is a condition of affairs unaccounted for by legal evidence, by competent testimony.

If we were in a court of justice and were undertaking to break this certificate, we would not only have to bring the ballots to the court, but we would have to bring them under certain terms and conditions which would make them legal and competent evidence to overcome the certificate of election. I contend, Mr. President, that as to legal evidence, there is no legal evidence whatever as to these 3,300 ballots, as to what became of them, for whom they should be counted, or how they should be disposed of.

If it were not for the certificate of election, I am frank to say it would be very difficult to tell whether Mr. Steck or Mr. Brookhart was entitled to the seat. In other words, it would be very difficult for the Senate to seat either one of these gentlemen upon the evidence which is now presented to us, because it is not such evidence as would be accepted, in my judgment, in a court for the purpose of seating or unseating a Member of the Senate.

I thought I had a copy of the instructions which were given out, but I have not. I think they have been read, however. As I said a moment ago, if we view the instructions as covering the entire law, and, if so, in contravention of it, we must take the law; but, in my opinion, the instructions do not contravene the law. Therefore we have these voters casting their ballots under the law of the State and the officers of the State canvassing the returns, and we have the legal result of that canvass here to be passed upon.

I ask any Member of this body, where is the legal evidence to overturn the certificate of election? What part of the testimony can be pointed to as bearing the test of the legal and competent testimony for the purpose of overturning the certificate of election?

It has been argued here at length as to whether or not there was fraud in the different precincts. That is wholly immaterial. It does not make any difference how the discrepancy happened or under what circumstances it took place. The committee has failed to present it in such way that it amounts to evidence against the acts and conduct and the results of the acts and conduct of the officers of the State of Iowa, and until that has been done the certificate of election must be the authority for the Senate seating Mr. Brookhart. Otherwise, we are going to establish, first, that we do not intend to follow the law of a State; and, secondly, that we will decide controversies of this kind without legal evidence. If we establish that kind of a precedent, we will have entered into an undefined field without chart or compass, without any manner or means by which we shall be guided in the future. Disregarding, in the first instance, the law, and disregarding, in the second instance, the certificate of election, without legal or competent evidence to overcome it, I can not conceive of an election without law under which the election is held, and if it is held under the law then we must be governed by the law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, under the unanimous-consent agreement, Senate Resolution 194, reported by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST] from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, is to be voted upon. The resolution reads:

Resolved, That Daniel F. Steck is hereby declared to be a duly elected Senator of the United States from the State of Iowa for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1925, and is entitled to be seated as such.

The question is upon agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. ASHURST and Mr. REED of Missouri demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McKINLEY]. If that Senator were present, he would vote "yea." Were I permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. McMASTER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. MEANS]. If he were present, he would vote "yea." I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL], who, if present, would vote "nay." I therefore am at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SHORTRIDGE (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], who is absent on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. HEFLIN (when Mr. UNDERWOOD's name was called). My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. WADSWORTH (when his name was called). Upon this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I understand that were he present he would vote in the affirmative. If I were permitted to vote, I would vote in the negative.

The roll call having been concluded the result was announced—yeas 45, nays 41, as follows:

So Daniel F. Steck was declared to be a duly elected Senator of the United States from the State of Iowa for the term beginning March 4, 1925.

INDEBTEDNESS OF ITALY TO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 6773.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6773) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of Italy to the United States of America.

PROPOSED RECESS

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his motion just a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

Mr. HARRISON. To-morrow a number of Senators are going to be out of the city. We have had a pretty tense situation for some days. Can we not take a recess until the following day?

Mr. SMOOT. I would not like to agree to that.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will yield, I will state that I gave notice a day or two ago that I would speak to-morrow on the unfinished business. I find, however, that I am obliged to leave the city. I hope the Senator will agree to a recess until Wednesday. I can not possibly be here to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. There are other Senators who are ready to proceed to-morrow, and I do not think it would be advisable to take a recess until Wednesday.

Mr. HARRISON. Will not the Senator let the sense of the Senate be tested out on the proposition?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that he can test it out himself if he chooses to make a motion to recess over until Wednesday. He can do that without getting the consent of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. McKELLAR. We merely wanted to get his approval. I hope the Senator from Utah will let the unfinished business go over until Wednesday.

Mr. SMOOT. I want the Senate to take a recess until to-morrow. There are other Senators who are ready to proceed.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I move that when the Senate takes a recess to-night it be until Wednesday morning at 12 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask merely for a rising vote on the question.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a point of order. My motion was that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Do we not have to vote on that motion before we vote on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Utah will take precedence over that of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us have the yeas and nays on the motion that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. HARRISON. I move to amend the motion by making it Wednesday at 12 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will hold the amendment to be in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi to the motion of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I call for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi to the motion of the Senator from Utah, on which the Senator from Utah demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, pending the motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], I ask him if he will not withhold the motion for a moment, in order that Mr. STECK may have an opportunity to be sworn in as a Member of the Senate? Mr. STECK is now present.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to that, Mr. President.

SENATOR FROM IOWA

The VICE PRESIDENT. Mr. STECK will present himself at the desk and take the oath of office.

Mr. STECK, escorted by Mr. CUMMINS, advanced to the Vice President's desk, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

RECESS

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate stand in recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah moves that the Senate recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Chair understands, offers an amendment to the motion of the Senator from Utah, that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock on Wednesday. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. JONES of Washington called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 27, nays 54, as follows:

YEAS—27

Bratton	George	Neely	Steck
Broussard	Gerry	Overman	Stephens
Copeland	Harris	Pittman	Swanson
Edwards	Harrison	Ransdell	Tammell
Ernst	Heflin	Reed, Mo.	Tyson
Fernald	Kendrick	Sheppard	Weller
Fletcher	McKellar	Simmons

NAYS—54

Bayard	Fess	McMaster	Sackett
Bingham	Frazier	McNary	Shipstead
Blease	Gillett	Mayfield	Shortridge
Bruce	Glass	Metcalf	Smith
Butler	Goff	Moses	Smoot
Cameron	Gooding	Norbeck	Stanfield
Capper	Hale	Norris	Wadsworth
Couzens	Howell	Nyc	Walsh
Cummins	Johnson	Oddie	Warren
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Pepper	Watson
Deneen	Keyes	Phipps	Williams
Dill	King	Pine	Willis
Edge	La Follette	Reed, Pa.
Ferris	Lenroot	Robinson, Ind.

NOT VOTING—15

Ashurst	du Pont	McKinley	Schall
Borah	Greene	McLean	Underwood
Caraway	Harrell	Mann	Wheeler
Dale	Jones, N. Mex.	Robinson, Ark.

So Mr. HARRISON's amendment to Mr. SMOOT's motion was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to ask the Senator from Utah a question. Will not the Senator from Utah agree that to-morrow at 2 o'clock we shall adjourn or take a recess?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senate will agree to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock, I will be perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. HARRISON. Then let us meet at 11 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah, then, modify his motion?

Mr. SMOOT. I will modify my motion, as I know Senators really have an important appointment early to-morrow afternoon, and move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah that the Senate stand in recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 13, 1926, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, April 12, 1926

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O thou ancient of days. Teach us the truth of divine care, the sweet satisfaction of repentance, the blessings of obedience, and the marvelous inspiration of Thy holy word. May we have the courage of unrewarded labor, the gentility of speech, and the nobility of silence. O bless us with the music of a loving heart that sings and rejoices when things go wrong. Be our guide and guardian and grant us a sense of Thy companionship. May our dear homeland see the glory of the Lord and the excellency of our God. Let all institutions continue to laud and magnify the spirit and teachings of Him, the Divine Teacher of men. Dedicate all firesides to the value of love, to the warm joys of friendship, to reverence in the hearts of children, and to a lasting desire to purify the heart of the world. We pray in the blessed name of Jesus, our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, April 9, 1926, was read and approved.

GOOD ROADS

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the road bill, as I shall not be able to be here on Thursday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on the road bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, this Dowell bill authorizes the appropriation of $75,000,000 annually for the fiscal years 1928 and 1929, as well as $75,000,000 annually for the same period to be used on Federal forest roads.

The only issue before us, as I understand the situation, is, Shall the policy of cooperation between the National and State Governments be discontinued? And, to that question this bill makes an emphatic negative answer.

This matter of Federal participation became very acute suddenly, because of several utterances of President Coolidge, which caused great alarm to the friends of good, national roads.

This alarm was made known to Members of Congress in no uncertain terms. Resolutions and protests by letter and by telegram came to me from county highway officials and from State and National organizations generally. Sentiment seemed to be unanimous and decidedly opposed to the President's position.

Perhaps a few brief excerpts best reveal the sentiment of my district in reference to any discontinuance of Federal aid. I quote from a lengthy communication sent me by Mr. F. A. Cannon, executive secretary Good Roads Association of Wisconsin:

President Coolidge in his Memorial Day address said:

"When the National Treasury contributes half, there is temptation to extravagance on the part of the State. Yet there are constant demands for more Federal contributions. Whenever, by that plan, we take something from one group of States and give it to another group there is great danger that we do an economic injustice on one side and a political injury on the other. We impose unfairly on the strength of the strong, and we encourage the weak to indulge their weakness."

The President, in his Budget message to Congress, makes the following comment on Federal aid:

"I do, however, recommend for the consideration of Congress that future legislation restrict the Government's participation in State road construction to primary or interstate highways, leaving it to the State to finance the secondary and intercounty highways. This would tend to diminish the amount of Federal-aid contributions."

Discussing the President's attitude, Mr. Cannon further says of the result of the Coolidge plan in Wisconsin:

The total mileage of roads on which Federal aid can be spent in Wisconsin under the Federal aid law is 5,514 miles, or 7 per cent of the total road mileage of the State. Of this, three-sevenths, or 2,355 miles, are designated under the Federal aid law as the primary Federal-aid system, and four-sevenths, or 3,159 miles, as the secondary Federal-aid system. Under the plan proposed by President Coolidge, the secondary system of 3,159 miles would be stricken from the Federal-aid system.

Wisconsin, because it is a great tourist State, has much stronger claims for receiving Federal aid than most States. The roads of Wisconsin are not merely State roads but are national roads in the summer months.

Under the plan advocated by President Coolidge, State Trunk Highway No. 17, running northward along the lake shore, would be cut off from Federal aid, as would State Trunk Highway No. 16, running from Manitowoc to Green Bay. State Trunk Highway No. 10, traversing the State northward from Madison and running to Ashland, would be cut off the Federal-aid list, as would State Trunk Highway No. 35, running northward from Fountain City and up to Superior. State Trunk Highway No. 20, traversing the State east and west through Janesville to Dubuque, would be cut off from Federal aid, as would State Trunk Highway No. 33, running westward across the State from Waupun to La Crosse. Also, State Trunk Highway No. 21, from Oshkosh westward to Tomah, and State Trunk Highway No. 14, traversing the State westward from Forest County to Barron, in Barron County.

These are only a few instances of the roads which under the Coolidge plan would be cut off from Federal aid, and one of two things would result, either the roads would not be built or it would be necessary to raise more funds in the State and counties to build them.

Wisconsin, under the highway law passed by the last legislature, has laid out a six-year program up to the year 1931. This program was laid out with the expectancy of Federal aid being continued. In fact, in every State of the Union these programs have been largely laid out with this expectancy. If Federal aid is cut off, new means and new methods must be devised in carrying out these programs.

The reaction to the President's attitude may be realized from this typical protest from a county highway official:

The people of our county and surrounding counties, and I believe this is true of a greater part of the State, are not a little concerned over the recommendations of President Coolidge to reduce the amount of Federal aid for highways.

Many of the richer counties have already received Federal aid, whereby the good-roads movement all over the country has received a great impetus.

It does not seem fair or wise that this aid should be withheld from the poorer and less fortunate communities just at a time when they are able and anxious to take advantage of it.

Our county has just adopted an $830,000 four-year program. Should Congress follow the President's recommendations in its appropriations, our program must necessarily be abandoned.

Similar communications were received from many county highway officials, from the Madison Chamber of Commerce, and from numerous automobile clubs.

This bill, therefore, is very reassuring to all friends of the present good-roads policy. Indeed, at the hearings it soon became apparent that the President's recent utterances are not sustained, either by the membership of the committee or by the many organizations of national scope representing the sentiment of the people of the country. No opposition to continued Federal participation appeared at all. On the other hand, the friends of the present joint system of cooperation presented a very strong case.

As a member of the committee, I have become convinced that Congress should continue the present policy of constructing the 7 per cent interstate mileage system as now embodied in the present law. Let me frankly admit that I have not been an ardent champion of the present policy. I have had a fear that this road program was putting too heavy a burden upon the rural taxpayers of my district. I did not like the inequality of return of benefits to the people. Those who happen to live on the primary and secondary highways seemingly receive great benefits, but the other 93 per cent, who live farther away from these favored roads, did not appear to be getting their fair share. But with the equalization of the burdens that have been brought about through gasoline taxes and automobile licenses, this fear of mine has vanished, and I have also observed with genuine satisfaction that these primary and secondary roads have been so well laid out that all the people use them. It seems comparatively easy for anyone who has an automobile or a truck to avail themselves of one of these trunk lines; and as the people of my district and of the country have purchased their automobiles and are willing to pay the cost of maintenance, I think they are entitled to have good roads. For these certainly tend directly to lessen the cost and to increase efficiency.

The hearings were exceedingly convincing. The position taken by the President and by other Representatives of Eastern States was frankly stated and its weakness fully shown.

Objection 1. No constitutional authority or obligation for Federal participation. The weakness of this position was made clear by pointing out that as early as 1803 the Federal Government voted to build the Cumberland Pike.

Evidently there was not much doubt in the minds of such framers of the Constitution as Jefferson, Madison, or Hamilton that this was a proper Federal function, nor did the constitutional objection appear very alarming to such statesmen as Webster, Calhoun, and Clay, all alleged to have been famous advocates of Federal roads.

Finally the unsubstantial character of this objection was made clear by pointing out four specific provisions of the Constitution itself. It not only authorizes the Federal Government but makes it a duty to provide for the general welfare and the common defense, establish post roads, and to regulate commerce. It was abundantly proven that the present road policy is in accord with and rests upon these provisions of the Constitution.

The general welfare is promoted by these interstate roads, for they make for social betterment, closer union, and a better understanding between sections of our country. They are educational in their effects and afford national enjoyment.

The common defense has been kept in mind from the beginning of the program. General Pershing, testifying before the committee, spoke emphatically of their value "in time of war" for the transport of "food supplies."

The Postal Service is directly benefited. The rural service saved many millions of dollars, not to mention dispatch of delivery and comfort to the carrier.

Finally, interstate commerce is being more and more benefited. The general use of trucks is growing at a very rapid rate. Besides all the independent or private operators in 1925, there were approximately 51 railroads making use of motor trucks, supplementing their shipping service. Interesting data was given to the committee showing the remarkable growth of the transport of milk from the farms to the cities by trucks and the development of the roadside markets. These roads are bringing the consumer to the producer as well as the producer to the consumer.

Moreover, the obligation of the Federal Government to continue participation was shown by pointing out that the present policy was inaugurated by Congress and not by the States. Upon it alone rests responsibility for it. Under acts of Congress in years 1912-13 a joint committee of House and Senate considered this subject extensively. Its report advocated participation by Congress to emphasize to the States the importance of good roads, to raise the standards of road building, and to shift the burdens more equitably from rural to city inhabitants. Accordingly in 1916 Congress inaugurated the present policy and made the first appropriation. These interstate roads are national in scope and service and as arteries of commerce are under the control of the Federal Government. It has been pointedly said that instead of the Federal Government building roads for the States, the States were invited by this policy to build roads for the Federal Government.

Objection II. The alleged inequitable distribution of the funds between the States. To this the reply is made that the apportionment rests upon an equitable threefold basis. One-third accordingly to the ratio which the area of each State bears to the total area of all the States; one-third in the ratio which the population of each State bears to the total population of all the States; and one-third in the ratio which the mileage of rural-delivery routes and star routes in each State bears to the total mileage of rural-delivery routes and State routes in all the States.

It was clear "taxable property" would not do, because of the unequal methods of assessments by States, over which the Federal Government would have no power. Wealth of States would not be a good basis, because it would overlap with that of population, which virtually gives the same element. No more equitable basis for distribution of Federal road funds could be devised.

Objection III. A few States pay the taxes for building roads for other States.

To this selfish complaint the answers are both numerous and conclusive:

(a) When the Federal Government wants money with which to pay its bills, it calls on everybody, irrespective of the State in which they live, to pay according to income.

(b) States, as such, have no obligations; and tabulation of receipts for the Federal Treasury, by States, is misleading, unfair, and in many cases far from the truth as to who meets the assessments.

(c) People do not live necessarily in one place; some are born in one State, educated in another, and carry on business in still another.

(d) States are prosperous not because they are political units, but because the whole country is prosperous.

(e) The wealthier States have the greatest number of motorists who make use of the highways of other States.

(f) The Federal Government holds title to 21 per cent of the lands in all other States, the greater part of which lie west of the Mississippi River; obviously to ask these States to pay to connect up interstate roads so that motorists from other States may travel across these public-land States would be very unfair.

(g) It is the national resources of the far distant States, such as the mines of Nevada, Utah, Montana, and Colorado, which enable citizens of New York to sit in smug complacency as millionaire residents of the cities of Eastern States.

(h) Insurance, whether fire, life, or casualty, is a business, national in its scope, but the headquarters of these companies are in New York, Hartford, and Baltimore.

(i) Sheep are pastured in New Mexico, Arizona, and Utah, but Boston happens to be the center of the wool market.

(j) Surplus funds gravitate to certain cities where power is cheapest or new material nearest at hand.

(k) These cities are merely clearing-house centers for large contiguous territory, irrespective of State lines.

(l) The poorest State helps to make rich the richest State. The Constitution does not allow States to set up tollgates at State lines; States do not contribute as such to the Federal Treasury.

In a pamphlet entitled "Who Pays Uncle Sam's Bills," printed in the hearings, facts and figures are given which abundantly demonstrate the absurdity of the claim that a few States are building the roads of the other States. As this claim is put forth from time to time as to other expenses than for roads, it may be well to point out its absurdity in more detail.

1. By a group study of States, taking those ranking highest in either total basic wealth or total national wealth, it is demonstrated that in reality that no State pays more into the Federal Treasury than is indicated by its wealth and population.

2. If the group is taken that makes the largest payments into the Federal Treasury, it is easy to account for any large percentage of payment of taxes by a few States. Thus, New York pays 28.8 percentage of total revenue with a percentage of total wealth of only 11.7 and a population of only 10.2. This is readily accounted for. The heads of our monopolies live in New York City, but make their profits in all States. Thus, Rockefeller, who collects his earnings from gasoline everywhere, pays an income tax in New York of $7,500,000; but he is one of many thousands who reap profits in all States to swell the income tax of the State of New York.

3. This is true not only of individual incomes, but also of corporation taxes. To prove this, it is but necessary to point out that the United States Steel Corporation paid an income tax of $16,000,000, but only two of its 145 plants and warehouses are located in New York State.

4. The same fact is seen when we consider the banks. New York is a financial center. From the report of the Treasury Department we learn that 38 per cent of the deposits of the New York City national banks come from banks and trust companies outside of New York State.

5. Likewise the railroads. Wall Street bankers control their funds. Thus, the Union Pacific in 1923 paid an income tax in New York of $4,500,000, and yet this road does not operate east of Omaha and Kansas City, half the length of the continent from New York State. The Southern Pacific paid a tax of $5,000,000, and this road does not run any nearer New York than New Orleans.

Some other States, such as Michigan and North Carolina, seem to pay a larger percentage of income tax than total wealth or population would warrant. This is easily accounted for when we remember that of the Michigan income tax the Fords alone paid $21,260,000.

North Carolina's seeming excess is due to the fact that 86 per cent of the total internal revenue paid by North Carolina is on tobacco in its manufactured form, and the purchaser, wherever he may live, pays for the revenue stamp. The pretense, therefore, that a few States are paying Uncle Sam's bills is as false as it is narrow, selfish, and un-American.

Objection IV. The Federal Government is furnishing funds on too large a system of interstate roads. To this the answers are that 7 per cent was chosen because it was found that this was the least mileage that would connect all the county seats and main market centers. These were selected after careful study, and will provide a properly correlated system, accommodating at the same time local and farm-to-market traffic, as well as State and interstate traffic. Any reduction in this system of highways as now selected and approved would tend to break the continuity of said system, and might so restrict the same that many communities served by highways now rightfully included therein would be deprived of such service.

The Federal Government, having put its hands to the plow, can not draw back, but must go on with the States to finish the work. In a few days we shall have constructed a magnificent chain of interstate connecting highways, linking together every city of 5,000 population or over, a system unequaled by any other country in the world.

Objection V. The Federal appropriations are so large that the States must overburden themselves to meet the Federal allotments. To this reply is made that the States have constructed a larger mileage of State roads without Federal funds than with Federal funds. In 1924, for instance, all that was needed to meet the Federal funds was $67,081,920, but the States expended in excess of the amounts for Federal-aid roads, $413,273,000.

Answering objections was only a small part of the hearing. Representative and well-informed officials spoke affirmatively for the continuance of Federal participation in the construction and maintenance of the 7 per cent interstate-road system. These stated to the committee that they were authorized to speak for their respective national organizations. In this authoritative way we learn the views of the following:

The United States Bureau of Public Roads.
American Association of State Highway Officials.
The American Automobile Association.
National Road Builders' Association.
The American Federation of Labor.

The National Automobile Chamber of Commerce.
The American Bankers' Association.
The American Farm Bureau Federation.
The National Grange.

All spoke for the present joint cooperation of National and State Governments until the present 7 per cent interstate system had been completed.

Much satisfaction was revealed because of the progress of road construction up to date. It was shown that there are approximately 3,000,000 miles of highway in this country, some 500,000 miles of which are improved roads. The Federal Government has completed, or has under construction and authorized, some 60,000 miles.

Mileage at the present time, under the act of 1921, is approximately 200,000 miles of roads in Federal-aid highway systems; that is, 200,000 miles possible, but only between 170,000 and 180,000 miles have actually been approved for the system. Of this 170,000 to 180,000 miles of Federal-aid system there have been improved up to the present time approximately two-thirds of the mileage.

In other words, the total allowable mileage in the 7 per cent system would be approximately 200,000 miles. The total actually approved for that system up to July 1, 1925, was 178,797 miles. The total mileage improved and under construction with Federal aid on February 1 was 63,239 miles, and it is estimated that there have been improved by States without Federal aid about 65,000 miles. That would represent a balance unimproved of 50,558 miles.

The types of the roads completed up to February 1, 1926, were as follows: The low types, including the graded and drained and the sand, clay, and graveled surfaced roads, totaled 35,402 miles, or 67½ per cent of the total mileage completed.

The intermediate types, consisting of water-bound macadam, totaled 4,006 miles, or 7.7 per cent. The high types, consisting of bituminous cement concrete, Portland cement concrete and brick, totaled 12,892 miles, or 24.6 per cent; and bridges, 102 miles.

Sixty-seven and one-half per cent of all Federal aid projects are of low type. They are of graded and drained sand-clay or gravel construction. This system was designated in 1921, and it was the belief at that time that within 10 years or 12, perhaps, it would be possible to make at least some improvement of the entire system. It now appears that it will be possible within that time to get over the whole system, or practically the whole system as now approved.

The cost of construction up to date, the high peak of construction in 1925, and the rapid progress made are seen from the following figures:

United States Government has expended $417,000,000 upon good roads.

Our expenditures for the fiscal year 1925 reached a total of $97,472,506. This is the largest expenditure made in any fiscal year; that is, these are funds actually paid out to the States, and it is a peak expenditure.

The total expenditures on all classes of roads for one year—in 1915—were $240,263,784, whereas the expenditures for 1925 were $1,176,000,000. The total expenditures through State highway departments in 1915 were $54,884,007, while in 1925 they were $596,176,000.

The public use of this system may be understood from these interesting items:

The Federal Rural Delivery and Star Route Postal Services now use 1,205,572 miles of highway every day in this service, and yet is assisting the States in the improvement of about 200,000 miles. In the use of this mileage 30,060,816 individuals are being served, and yet there are still over 14,000,000 to be added as the service can be extended.

Over 4,000,000 of the 17,500,000 motor vehicles in the United States are owned by farmers and operated in the rural communities. [Note.—Greater in 1926; over 20,000,000; at the same ratio farm-owned motor vehicles would exceed 5,000,000.]

That the public want these highways and that they are prepared to pay the cost of them is best evidenced by the fact that for 10 years the average sum spent in the acquisition of cars has been close to $2,000,000,000 annually, while the amount expended for gasoline, tires, repairs, and garage items will now average at least three times that amount.

During the year just closed we have produced 3,678,327 passenger cars and 474,923 motor trucks.

Placed end to end these vehicles would constitute a caravan 9,688 miles in length, or enough to produce a solid three-line block of traffic from one coast to the other, but giving a space of 20 feet, the minimum safe distance between vehicles, they would cover a highway 25,419 miles in length.

The total number of motor vehicles now in use in the United States is approximately 20,000,000, of which 17,500,000 are passenger cars and the remainder trucks and busses.

Placed end on end these vehicles would occupy 46,836 miles of highway. Properly spaced, they would cover 122,593 miles, or the entire length of all of the improved mileage of all types contained in the Federal-aid system up to this time. Assuming these to be two-way highways, they would entirely cover one-half of the total improvement, or all of the miles improved with Federal aid.

Tourists spend more than $2,000,000,000 a year along the various so-called popular highways.

There can be no question about the attitude of the general public toward continued highway improvement. The mere fact that there are 20,000,000 motor vehicles on the streets and highways of the Nation to-day constitutes a straw vote of tremendous significance.

Emphasis was placed on the generosity of the Federal Government for transportation in the past:

(a) To encourage the early development of the railroads, our Government contributed to them nearly 200,000,000 acres of the public domain, valued at nearly $500,000,000. In addition, there was authorized by Congress approximately $65,000,000 for railroad financing.

(b) The expenditure of one and one-quarter billion dollars in the development of waterways and harbors in the United States.

(c) The construction and maintenance of the Panama Canal at a cost of over a half billion dollars.

The Federal Government, therefore, has expended on Federal highways only slightly more money than it cost to build the Panama Canal and only one-third as much as the sums appropriated for rivers and harbors.

The party pledges to this policy was not overlooked. The Republican platform contained this—

We pledge a continuation of this policy of Federal cooperation with the States in highway building.

The Democratic position is as follows:

We call attention to the record of the Democratic Party in this matter and favor a continuance of Federal aid under existing Federal and State agencies.

The present adverse attitude of the President was practically ignored, while his former utterances were reviewed.

President Coolidge in his first message to Congress made this statement:

Highways and reforestation should continue to have the interest and support of the Government.

How can they have real support from the Government without financial backing?

He also said:

No expenditure of public money contributes so much to the national wealth as for building good roads.

If that is so, the only question is: "How shall the public money be contributed?"

On September 1, 1925, addressing the delegation appointed by himself, through the authority of Congress, to represent this Government at the Pan American Congress of Highways at Buenos Aires, President Coolidge said, in part:

• • • "recognizing, as I do, that better facilities of road communications will be conducive to improved intercourse and good understanding and can not but react to the social and economic advantages of all the nations concerned, I look forward hopefully to the time when • • • the two continents of North America and South America will be united in physical fact through modern highways as they are to-day united by bonds of mutual friendship and good will."

Being a national hope, how can it be accomplished except by national cooperation? Surely the States on our northern or southern borders will not be expected to assume the entire responsibility.

The chief witnesses, however, before the committee were the director of the bureau himself and his staff. At the conclusion of his masterly presentation, the director gave utterance to the following suggestive sentiment:

It was my privilege during the past year to make a trip through Latin American countries as a member of the official delegation appointed by the President to attend the first Pan American Congress of Highways held in Buenos Aires. • • • We saw in Latin America lands just as fertile, just as capable of production as our own lands. We saw cities highly developed and a splendid civilization, but we saw the country and the cities divided and a fertile countryside undeveloped through lack of roads. So that I come before your committee to-day with a more profound conviction than I have ever held before that highways are one of the prime essentials of our civilization and one of the prime necessities for the maintenance of our standards of living in the rural sections as well as in the cities; and I am convinced also that the reason that roads have not been developed in the Latin American Republics is largely that there have been no favorable governmental policies in those countries.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say that it is the unanimous view of the Committee on Roads that the policy of co-operation between the National and State Governments should not now be discontinued. This bill authorizing the appropriation of $75,000,000 annually for the fiscal years 1928 and 1929, as well as $7,500,000 annually for the same period to Federal forest roads, should pass even though threatened with a presidential veto. This is not thought probable, however, for it is believed that the President knows that the territorial limits of the Nation extend beyond Massachusetts, New York, and a few other Eastern States.

AGRICULTURAL RELIEF

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on agriculture and agricultural relief.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on agriculture and agricultural relief. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, we frequently hear references to the "farm problem." This is not a problem for the farmers alone. It is a national problem. It is a most important and serious one, too, concerning all the people and the future prosperity of our whole country. Other industries can not remain prosperous long with agriculture prostrate.

Congress convened in December and we have been here over four months, each day expecting action to solve what is generally known as the "farm problem," and as yet no solution has been made. The responsibility is with the Republican administration in power, but that does not relieve the minority party of its duty to appeal and protest in behalf of the agricultural industry. The mistake has been made by the Republican Party, which is the party of protected manufacturers and big interests, in assuming that this is strictly a "farm problem." Let us see if it is not more than that. To start with, agriculture is the oldest and most important industry. Every other enterprise is dependent upon it for its continued success, and the whole world is dependent upon the tillers of the soil for clothes and food. But for the products of the soil every other industry, as well as the human race, would perish from the face of the earth. There is prosperity at present, but not for the farmer as a class.

In 1920 the lands and buildings belonging to the farmers of the United States were estimated at $63,000,000,000. The farm census shows that same property in 1925 is estimated at $46,000,000,000, showing a shrinkage or loss of $17,000,000,000. This will be referred to for the sake of argument as capital stock invested in lands and buildings. This is by no means all that the farmers have lost in that period of time.

In 1920 the livestock of the farmers was estimated in the census report at $8,200,000,000. In 1925 it represented a value of only $5,200,000,000, showing a loss in that regard of an additional $3,000,000,000. In addition to that, it is estimated that the farmers have lost at the rate of $2,000,000,000 per annum for the last five years on their crops, making an additional $10,000,000,000 in that period. This figure is based upon the standard of prices for a similar period before 1920. These items alone, without reference to other items of loss, show that the American farmer has sustained a loss of $30,000,000,000 in the last five years. This argues to a certainty that the farmer has a problem; but if followed a little further must it not certainly lead us to the conclusion that the problem is greater than one for the farmers alone? It seems so to me, and I am sure will so address itself to the thought of any sober-minded man who is interested in the welfare and future happiness of our country. With agriculture, our basic industry, breaking down, with farming becoming unpopular and unprofitable, does it not present more than a problem for the farmers?

If other industries had suffered in like proportion, there would not be such a striking contrast as the figures I am going to quote will present. What was the entire national wealth in 1920? What was it in 1925? When we get these figures we will see that the agricultural industry, a raw material producing industry, is the only major industry that has so grossly suffered.

The national wealth in 1920 was estimated at $290,000,000,000. In 1925, covering the same five-year period we have been discussing, in which the farmers sustained the $30,000,000,000 loss just recited, the entire national wealth was estimated at upward of $375,000,000,000. Let us assume it was $375,000,000,000. We find then that despite the loss in agriculture the national wealth of the entire country shows an increase of $85,000,000,000. This to my mind is a sad and deplorable picture. These figures show that while the national wealth as a whole increased to the enormous amount of $85,000,000,000 our unfortunate farmers lost in the same period of five years the alarming sum of $30,000,000,000.

When conditions of this kind can occur there is something economically and radically wrong. The question in my mind is whether the farmer needs more legislation or the repeal of legislation that is making certain groups rich and prosperous at the expense of the farmers, whom it is impoverishing and robbing. I am inclined to think that no substantial relief will be given the farmers through legislation until we have repealed the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act. The report of the research department of the National Farm Bureau Federation declared that this act, which is in the interest of manufacturers and big business, is costing the farmers of the United States $10 in outgo for every dollar they gain by it. Is this not in large measure the cause of much of the losses our farmers are sustaining? Would it not bring much relief if this act were repealed? Can we really get any relief until this high-protective tariff, enacted to enrich the manufacturers, is repealed? Can the cure be effected until the cause is removed? We might administer heroic treatments and prolong the agony, but are you not convinced that here in this Republican pet protective act we have at least found much of the trouble?

I have long since come to the conclusion that of all classes of people who really ought to be educated it is the farmer. He needs to know more than how to plow, how to set crops, how to grow them. He needs to know more than about hog cholera, horse colic, and the "botts." He needs to know more than how to gather and harvest his crops; even more than how to market them. He needs to study and know economics and government. If the farmers of this country could understand how adversely raw material from the farms is affected by the high tariff that has always impoverished and robbed them and how it is enriching the manufacturing interests of the country, largely at the expense of the farmers, they would never suffer another high-tariff advocate to occupy a seat in the Congress if they could help it. How does it rob him? The answer is simple. Everything he buys, practically, for his farm and for use in his home is protected under the high tariff, and he pays that unseen or hidden tax, while everything he sells, and he produces and sells only raw materials, is unprotected.

Not only the high tariff is robbing the farmer, but the banking rates and credits as applied to the farmer operate against him, and the transportation rates are against his interest. The hearings conducted by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee during the last Congress disclose the fact that agriculture, staggering and crippled as it is, is paying more than twice its just share of the revenues that railroads receive for freight transportation. Agriculture furnishes about 9 per cent of the total volume of rail freight traffic and pays over 18 per cent of the revenue the railroads receive for freight carried. No wonder agriculture, the oldest and most honorable pursuit of man, is prostrate under these unfair burdens while other industries, and especially the carriers, continue to show increased profits and many of them enormous dividends. How long, oh, how long, will the tillers of the soil continue to submit to such injustice?

When we contemplate these figures, these staggering losses of the farmers, we can understand why there have been thousands of bank failures in agricultural sections; we can understand why thousands of farms have been sold under foreclosures and by sheriffs. No one begrudges fair profits to any group of industries. We like to see them prosper. It is significant, however, when we find from census and commercial reports that industrial plants, manufacturing plants, transportation lines, and practically every other industry, except agriculture, are prospering and showing profits. Steel manufacturers boast of the biggest year in history; while "big business" everywhere shows large earnings.

How long can the agricultural industry last at the rate it is going? I know of no industry that could have held up as well as it has under such adverse and staggering losses. No matter how hard the farmer works, no matter how fruitful the soil is, under present conditions it seems the more he produces the more he loses. Truly it must be that "from him who hath not it shall be taken," and it continues that on top of his losses other and still greater losses are piling up, and the industry is expected to go on and on enriching the "tariff barons" and the "big-business captains," while present-day farmers are enslaving themselves and their posterity who shall undertake to carry on with tilling the soil.

Even the postal rates are adverse and help to handicap the farmer. In order that the Post Office Department might make a showing, in a previous Congress, postal rates were increased and rates raised on reading matter. Every newspaper, every magazine, every book that gives wholesome reading should go to the farm homes of our country at the lowest possible cost, and the rural population, the very salt of the earth, should be encouraged in all things that will make for better education and for better conditions.

If our farmers are reduced to penury and if farm owning and home owning is destroyed in this country as it was in some of the old countries, must we not also expect the unrest and evils that history tells us come with that unfortunate condition? When I speak of farmers, of course I mean in the main, I certainly do not think it will ever come with all the farmers, although it has happened and is happening at a frightful rate, with thousands of farmers who know nothing else but how to farm and who are unable to turn to other avocations. Thousands have given it up in despair and turned to other fields for livelihoods for themselves and their families. Out of such conditions come great issues. In such conditions there is much suffering and unrest. In those conditions to-day are great issues and problems for all the people of this Republic. Whatever the cause, the condition is alarming and sickening. Whatever the cause, it should be remedied, and it is the duty of Congressmen, regardless of whether they represent agricultural districts or not, to act in the interest of the whole country. Is it not of interest to the whole country when the record of farm insolvencies from 1910 to 1924 shows an increase of 1,000 per cent? In what other line have insolvencies shown even half that deplorable increase? Contemplate the numberless avocations that have shown profits in that period, and think of the misery and the suffering these failures have brought to the many thousands who have lost their all and who will slave the rest of their lives and never regain a footing, and will never do more than have just a simple, meager existence in the absolute necessities of life, such as plain food and clothing, with little means to even do more than give their offspring the advantages of a grammar-school education. This is deplorable, when we know that the strength of our Republic lies in an educated, happy, and prosperous people. Is this not a problem for the whole country? It seems so. Many far-sighted men and women are so considering it, as will be seen from the following:

The National Industrial Conference Board, with headquarters in New York, numbering among its officers and directors such men as Mr. O'Leary, the president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, maintained by the funds of industry, managed by industrial experts, composed of industrial executives, has submitted to the American people its profound conclusion, after one year of continued and earnest study, that the average income of the American farmer for the year 1924 was $736, as contrasted with the average income for transportation workers of $1,570, of $1,250 for manufacturing wage earners, of nearly $1,700 for ministers, of over $2,100 for clerical workers, of $1,650 for Government employees, and even of $1,300 for teachers, whom we have been taught to believe are the lowest paid of our American wage earners.

We do not want a peasant population in this country. We must never be reduced to that condition. The strength of our Republic is now, as it has ever been, in the sturdy yeomanry found in our rural population. This yeomanry must not be reduced to serfdom through poverty, or else it will be destroyed. It must have been heartrending conditions similar to these that touched the great Goldsmith when he wrote:

Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates, and men decay;
Princes and lords may flourish, or may fade;
A breath can make them, as a breath has made;
But a bold peasantry, their country's pride,
When once destroyed, can never be supplied.

The tendency to concentrate large fortunes in the hands of the favored few will more and more make for this unfortunate end.

When we have removed the cause then we ought to enact constructive and helpful legislation in the interest of the farmer. The tariff act ought to be repealed and the freight rates ought to be adjusted, so that the farmer will not be eaten up in that respect. Now, the average farmer does not stop to think that one of the most helpful things to him is river and harbor improvement. It helps to open up new markets and give easier and quicker access to those markets. We must have friendly and better relations abroad in order that we may find new customers and new markets for our products. You say how does harbor improvement benefit the farmer? Let us see. It has been estimated that the improvement of the harbor at Savannah, in handling the enormous commerce that passes through that port, favorably benefits over 20,000,000 people, yet Savannah itself has a population of only about 125,000. Her harbor handles agricultural products and products for the agricultural industry in what is imported and exported of and for an area stretching as far west as Chicago. The freight rates are reduced by water rates for hundreds of miles inland. Freight can be carried by water for half what rail rates are. Our rivers and harbors should be opened up and improved and should be utilized to help solve this question, especially as the railroads are worked to their capacity and are unable to handle the freights that are piling up to be moved. Especially, too, as no more railroads are being built or will be built for many years, perhaps, in this country.

Another help will come to the farmers, especially of the South, if that great power at Muscle Shoals can ever be put to use in the manufacture of nitrates and fertilizers. It is estimated by good statisticians that it will greatly reduce the cost of nitrates and fertilizers. Some one has stated it will save the farmers of Georgia over $20,000,000 yearly, and I confess that is an item worth saving.

When we have repealed the "blood-sucking" tariff act that is sapping the very life of our agricultural population, adjusted freight rates, improved the waterways and harbors of the country, improved the highways so as to provide for quick, cheap, and easy motor and vehicle traffic, reduced the cost of nitrates and fertilizers, contributed to better educational facilities, reduced taxes, reduced the postal rates, given a good mail service, and helped in the marketing end of the question, especially to open new markets and find new customers, we will have gone a long way toward giving much-needed relief. Many farmers do not need credits. Sometimes I fear that credits have been too easy and interest rates too high; yet there are thousands of good men who need help and must have it to again put them where they will continue as producers for the general welfare. There should be a revolving fund of not less than $100,000,000 established by the Government with which to finance agriculture and especially with which to finance the marketing of our crops. Our farmers must be helped in the study of their crops and of conditions as well as economics. The Government has done but little in connection with the boll weevil that costs the cotton-producing States over $50,000,000 per annum. Congress has just been playing with the subject. I may be mistaken. I hope I am not. It is my judgment that the boll weevil can be exterminated as the cattle tick has been exterminated if we would but make a concentrated and determined fight in an intensive and comprehensive campaign for his extermination. It would be worth all it costs to accomplish it. I have introduced a bill asking for the appropriation of $3,000,000 per year for five years for this purpose. I wish it might pass. In the whole five years it would cost not much more than an ordinary battleship, and if results were accomplished, as it would be, it would save upward of $50,000,000 per annum to the southern cotton growers alone. We can not accomplish all we would like to, but we can at least try.

Certain demagogic individuals who would discredit me have made light of this effort on my part. If it works, or if it does not work, I am in favor of doing the best that can be done to exterminate this pest, and if we can not exterminate him we can perhaps make more progress in controlling him than we have been making along that line. One thing certain, I am not going to sit up here during an entire session of Congress and not open my mouth. I am here to represent not only the district from which I hail, but I am also a representative of the entire country. I was born and reared on a farm and practically all I have is in farms and farm lands. For generations my people have been engaged in agriculture. My sympathies are with those engaged in that great industry. I want to be of help to the tillers of the soil. Their sad plight grieves me. I can not longer sit here quietly and know of their distress without speaking for them. I am here as a Democrat, proud of the history and accomplishments of that great old party. I am thoroughly convinced that Jeffersonian Democracy of "equal rights to all and special privileges to none," as laid down by that greatest of all Democrats, is best for all classes of people in this country; but in these trying days, when the welfare of millions of our farmers are at stake, I pledge myself to any and all relief measures regardless of whether they are originated by the Democrats or by the Republicans. If they will give relief and help the agricultural industry I will gladly support them, regardless of who originates them. I have taken that position with reference to tax reductions and have voted and worked for all tax reductions in order to bring all possible relief to those who have been so heavily burdened. While I am here my time and what little talent I have belong to my country and to those people who have honored me. I earnestly hope that something can and will be done for the relief of those for whom I have spoken to-day.

Farming is the backbone of our country. It must go on if we remain a happy and prosperous people. It can not go on under conditions I have referred to. Relief must be had. I earnestly appeal to Members of Congress to rise above party affiliations, put country above party, see this thing as a great national matter, and act quickly and wisely for a long-suffering and patient industry that hangs to-day by a thread. We must do it for the further reason that if unrest and great unhappiness spread among our rural population it will tend to weaken our citizenship. The very existence of our Republic and its safety depends upon a strong, God-fearing, and law-abiding citizenry. This one class of our population has been discriminated against too much. The manufacturers, as important as they are to our civilization, have too long been fattened at the expense of the farmers. Other industries have been too long pampered by and through the protective tariff, and far too little is being done for the agricultural population by our Government. The question is a big and serious one. Let us meet it bravely as Americans, loyal to our American sense of justice, and give relief to millions of farmers who are crying out for relief. Let us do it before it is too late. As we delay, as we vacillate, as we give other matters the right of way, this great element of our country suffers and continues to lose what they have, longing and begging for relief. If conditions are improved for them, conditions will be better for all of us. It will benefit every class. Let us be constructive and recognize this industry as the greatest and most necessary of all enterprises, and do the just and manly thing by the millions who till the soil.

A few years ago the life of a farmer was considered an independent vocation. To-day, with many exceptions of course, the farmer is reduced to dependency. A few years ago a mortgage over a man's farm was the exception rather than the rule. To-day it is the rule rather than the exception; and literally millions of farms are mortgaged, livestock pledged; even unplanted crops are covered by liens.

It will require approximately $4,000,000,000 to run the Government next year. Of this we are told by experts that approximately 85 per cent goes for the Army and Navy and causes incident to the armed forces, including pensions and the like. Think of this! Only 15 per cent of all our appropriations going for constructive purposes, for, indeed, all expenditures for armaments and wars are for destructive rather than constructive purposes. How long can we afford to let this proportion of our governmental expenses continue in this way? It should be reversed, and this Government should be expending many more millions than it is spending in the interest of agriculture, in seeking out new trade, new friends, and better friends in the large and foreign markets of the world, and in making new markets at home, for our products; and spending many more millions in advancing the cause of education and in trying to help establish that "peace on earth" to which the Master referred, which will make armies and battleships unnecessary and which will tend to solve the menace of lawlessness that is sweeping the land. I am not an extremist on the question of armaments, but I do think that our expenditures are "geared up" wrong, and unless we reverse the order and turn to things that are more constructive and put more of our thought and the Government's funds to constructive purposes the day is not far distant when we will bitterly regret it. If we can cut and reduce the appropriations we are making for battleships and other instruments of destruction, we will be able to spend more for agriculture, education, and highways and other things that will advance our civilization. I believe we should at all times be prepared with an adequate means of defense, but as certainly as day follows night wars follow big armaments.

The agricultural industry can not be rebuilt in a day. It can be rebuilt in a few years, and it should be rebuilt even if it takes many millions of dollars to do it, and we should never again choke it off with high tariffs or any other discriminating legislation. We should encourage agriculture and give fair play to the laws of supply and demand, helping our farmers find the demands not only at home but in all the markets of the world. [Applause.]

AIRCRAFT IN THE NAVY AND MARINE CORPS

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned on Friday the previous question had been ordered on H. R. 9690, a bill to authorize the construction and procurement of aircraft and aircraft equipment in the Navy and Marine Corps and to adjust and define the status of the operating personnel in connection therewith. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 94, noes 7.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote and make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently no quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 297, nays 40, answered "present" 1, not voting 93, as follows:

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. GALLIVAN] has been called away on important business. He asked me to say that if he were here he would vote yea.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The doors were opened.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE POTOMAC RIVER

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 8908, an act granting the consent of Congress to George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge, a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Potomac River, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 8908, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the following conferees: Messrs. DENISON, BURTNESS, and PARKS.

A DEMONSTRATION OF CHRISTIAN UNITY

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a communication received by me from the Detroit Council of Churches.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a communication addressed to him by the Detroit Council of Churches. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

THE DETROIT COUNCIL OF CHURCHES,

April 6, 1926.

HON. GRANT M. HUDSON,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: At a meeting of the Detroit Council of Churches held yesterday, I was instructed to convey to you, and through you to our two Senators, our Congressmen from Michigan, and the Judiciary Committee, our desire that you all shall stand with unflinching fidelity in your support of the National Constitution and the preservation of the Volstead Act.

We want to assure you that the people of the great State of Michigan, so large and valuable an element of which we represent, are overwhelmingly back of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act. Our constituency may not be so noisy as some other elements of our population, and are not much given to using our energies on the straw votes of newspapers, but we all are back of law and order and depend upon our Representatives at Washington to do the same.

Will you, therefore, convey copies of this communication to the Senators and Representatives from Michigan, and particularly have it presented to the Judiciary Committee now conducting a public hearing of the prohibition question?

Very cordially yours,

REV. M. C. PEARSON,
Executive Secretary.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 4007. An act to amend an act approved June 20, 1910, entitled "An act to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States"; and to enable the people of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States";

H. R. 6730. An act to detach Fulton County from the Jonesboro division of the eastern judicial district of the State of Arkansas and attach the same to the Batesville division of the eastern judicial district of said State; and

H. R. 9085. An act providing for expenses of the offices of recorder of deeds and register of wills of the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendments bills and resolutions of the following titles:

H. R. 96. An act authorizing an appropriation of not more than $3,000 from the tribal funds of the Indians of the Quinalt Reservation, Wash., for the construction of a system of water supply at Taholah on said reservation;

H. R. 187. An act making a grant of land for school purposes, Fort Shaw division, Sun River project, Montana;

H. R. 264. An act to amend an act to provide for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads;

H. R. 1944. An act for the relief of Charles Wall;

H. R. 2703. An act granting six months' pay to Anton Kunz, father of Joseph Anthony Kunz, deceased, machinist's mate, first class, United States Navy, in active service;

H. R. 3431. An act for the relief of Frederick S. Easter;

H. R. 4835. An act to remove the charge of desertion from the records of the War Department standing against William J. Dunlap;

H. R. 5210. An act extending the provisions of an act for the relief of settlers and entrymen on Baca Float No. 3, in the State of Arizona;

H. R. 6355. An act providing for the acquirement by the United States of privately owned lands in San Miguel, Mora, Taos, and Colfax Counties, N. Mex., within the Mora grant, and adjoining one or more national forests, by exchanging therefor lands or timber within the exterior boundaries of any national forest situated within the State of New Mexico or the State of Arizona;

H. R. 6573. An act to extend the time for the completion of the Alaska Anthracite Railroad Co., and for other purposes;

H. R. 7255. An act to regulate the sale of kosher meat in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 7752. An act to authorize the leasing for mining purposes of land reserved for Indian agency and school purposes;

H. R. 8646. An act providing for a grant of land to the county of San Juan, in the State of Washington, for recreational and public-park purposes;

H. R. 9314. An act to provide for the enlargement of the present customs warehouse at San Juan, Porto Rico;

H. R. 9957. An act authorizing a survey for the control of excess flood waters of the Mississippi River below Point Breeze in Louisiana and on the Atchafalaya outlet by the construction and maintenance of controlled and regulated spillway or spillways, and for other purposes;

H. J. Res. 171. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to approve the application of the State of Idaho to certain lands under an act entitled "An act to authorize the State of Idaho to exchange certain lands heretofore granted for public-school purposes for other Government lands," approved September 22, 1922; and

H. J. Res. 191. Joint resolution authorizing the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond to contract for and erect in the city of Baltimore, Md., a building for its Baltimore branch.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 43. An act authorizing the President to issue an appropriate commission and honorable discharge to Joseph B. Maccabe;

S. 85. An act to correct the status of certain commissioned officers of the Navy appointed thereto pursuant to the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 4, 1920;

S. 96. An act to amend the national defense act approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920, relating to retirement;

S. 112. An act for the relief of the owner of the American steam tug Charles Runyon;

S. 227. An act to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the district of Connecticut;

S. 464. An act for the relief of W. P. Dalton;

S. 475. An act to authorize the President of the United States to appoint an additional judge of the district court of the United States for the southern district of the State of Iowa;

S. 505. An act to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Edward I. Gallagher, of New York, administrator of the estate of Charles Gallagher, deceased;

S. 511. An act for the relief of all owners of cargo laden aboard the lighter Linwood at the time of her collision with the U. S. S. Absecon;

S. 537. An act for the relief of the owners of cargo aboard the steamship Bozley;

S. 565. An act limiting the creation of extension of forest reserves in New Mexico and Arizona;

S. 577. An act to extend the benefits of the United States employees' compensation act of September 7, 1916, to Alberta Sister Sauls;

S. 675. An act granting certain lands to the city of Ogden, Utah, to protect the watershed of the water-supply system of said city;

S. 722. An act to authorize the selection of certain publicly owned lands by the State of Oregon;

S. 1361. An act for the relief of the Maryland Casualty Co.; the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., of Baltimore, Md.; and the Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland;

S. 1642. An act to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania;

S. 1726. An act for the relief of the Atlantic & Caribbean Steam Navigation Co.;

S. 1728. An act for the relief of the owners of the steamship San Lucar and of her cargo;

S. 1730. An act to authorize the payment of indemnity to the Government of Great Britain on account of losses sustained by the owners of the British steamship Mavisbrook as a result of collision between it and the U. S. transport Carolinian;

S. 1930. An act to authorize the Postmaster General to readjust the terms of certain screen-wagon contracts, and for other purposes;

S. 1963. An act authorizing the Citizen Band of Pottawatomie Indians in Oklahoma to submit claims to the Court of Claims;

S. 2124. An act for the relief of Philip Hertz (Philip Herz);

S. 2338. An act authorizing the President to reappoint Chester A. Rothwell, formerly a captain of Engineers, United States Army, an officer of Engineers, United States Army;

S. 2568. An act for the relief of Ocean Steamship Co. (Ltd.), a British corporation;

S. 2512. An act to authorize the Comptroller General of the United States to relieve Fred A. Gosnell, former disbursing clerk, Bureau of the Census, and the estate of Richard C. Lappin, former supervisor of the fourteenth decennial census for the Territory of Hawaii and special disbursing agent, in the settlement of certain accounts;

S. 2709. An act to amend section 1 of the act of Congress of March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. L. p. 1249), entitled "An act to amend section 3 of the act of Congress of June 28, 1906, entitled 'An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma, and for other purposes'";

S. 2712. An act authorizing an appropriation from the tribal funds of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota for the construction of a road on the Leech Lake Reservation;

S. 2714. An act to authorize the cancellation, under certain conditions, of patents in fee simple to Indians for allotments held in trust by the United States;

S. 2717. An act to reserve the merchantable timber on all tribal lands within the Klamath Indian Reservation in Oregon hereafter allotted, and for other purposes;

S. 2876. An act for the purchase of a tract of land adjoining the United States target range at Auburn, Me.;

S. 2898. An act for the relief of all owners of cargo laden aboard the steamship Oconee;

S. 2955. An act for the relief of Chaplain A. E. Stone, United States Navy;

S. 2967. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain lands within the Fort Madison Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, heretofore set apart for school or administrative purposes;

S. 3015. An act for the relief of William J. Murphy;

S. 3031. An act for the relief of George Barrett;

S. 3049. An act for the relief of Mrs. M. McCollom, Margaret G. Jackson, and Dorothy M. Murphy;

S. 3112. An act for the relief of the estate of Charles Le Roy, deceased;

S. 3268. An act authorizing repayment of excess amounts paid by purchasers of certain lots in the town site of Bowdoin, Mont.;

S. 3283. An act to provide for the appointment of Army field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, as warrant officers, United States Army;

S. 3463. An act to extend the time for the exchange of Government-owned lands for privately owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii;

S. 3550. An act providing for an inspection of the Kennesaw Mountain and Lost Mountain and other battle fields in the State of Georgia;

S. 3627. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to deliver to the custody of the State of North Dakota the silver service which was presented to the battleship North Dakota by the citizens of that State;

S. 3647. An act to appoint Mate John Joseph Bresnahan, United States Navy, a boatswain in the Navy;

S. 3786. An act to enable members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps who have interrupted the course of training prescribed in the act of June 4, 1920, to resume such training, and amending accordingly section 47c of that act;

S. J. Res. 60. Joint resolution authorizing the expenditures from the Fort Peck 4 per cent fund for visits of tribal delegates to Washington; and

S. J. Res. 71. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to establish a trust fund for the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians in Oklahoma, and making provision for the same.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8917. An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes;

S. J. Res. 61. Joint resolution authorizing the Federal Reserve Bank of Chicago to enter into contracts for the erection of a building for its branch establishment in the city of Detroit, Mich.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED

REPORT OF PRESIDENT'S AIRCRAFT BOARD

Mr. BEERS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Printing and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 9

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That, in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the printing act approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, empowered to procure the printing of 1,500 additional copies of the hearings held before the President's Aircraft Board on matters relating to aircraft, including the report of the President's Aircraft Board.

The resolution was agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS IN MEMORY OF THE LATE WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN

Mr. BEERS. Mr. Speaker, I present another privileged resolution from the Committee on Printing and ask for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 186

Resolved, That there shall be compiled and printed as a document for the use of the House of Representatives, as may be directed by the Joint Committee on Printing, 22,000 copies of the proceedings in the House of Representatives on March 19, 1926, held in memory of the late William Jennings Bryan.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, these documents will be distributed through the Document Room? The resolution was agreed to.

CIVIL AVIATION

Mr. PARKER. Mr. President, I call up the bill (S. 41) to encourage and regulate the use of aircraft in commerce, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar and the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 41) to encourage and regulate the use of aircraft in commerce, and for other purposes, with Mr. CHINBLOM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule adopted for the consideration of this bill there will be three hours of general debate, and the gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I do not pose as an expert on aviation, but having been a member of the President's Aircraft Investigating Board, it would be impossible for me not to have some notion regarding aviation. I am not going to take up this bill in detail. I am going to leave that to the other members of the committee. I am simply going to discuss for a few moments the general subject of commercial aviation, because I am much impressed with the fact it is going to play a very important part in the commerce of the United States within the next 20 years.

We can all remember when the automobile was considered a dangerous mode of transportation. To-day aviation is in much the same condition, but it will be but a very short time before aviation will be used for commerce to a very great extent where the question of time is of major importance and not the question of expense. It is surprising the number of miles that have been flown in commercial aviation. At the present time we have no legislation to control commercial aviation. This bill carries no appropriation except an appropriation to light airways the same as you furnish facilities to light the harbors and the channels for the craft that navigate the water.

There is one controversy in this bill, and only one, and that is the jurisdiction of the air over the various States. Is that to be retained by the States or are we to establish a policy, as we have on the water, that all navigable air is under Federal control? This is absolutely the only question involved and the only controversy in this bill.

There is no question but what if any of you gentlemen were going to Chicago to-night, you would go by air if you thought it was as safe as going by train, on account of the fact you can go by air in perhaps 6 hours, whereas it takes 24 hours to go by train. Now, all in the world this bill does is to try to make aviation as safe as possible. There is always to be a hazard about it, of course, but we want to make it, through inspection of both the aircraft and the pilots, as safe as it can possibly be made.

I know, gentlemen, this is a rather dull subject, but it is an extremely important one, and it is one that is going to occupy the minds of the American people for the next 25 years to a very great extent. There is one farmer, for instance, in the far West that uses a plane to go about his farm. In Florida planes were used commercially very largely during the land boom. I have just received a letter this morning from Aviation stating they have endeavored to find out how many miles had been flown by private craft during the last year. The statement is surprising. Over nine and a half million miles have been flown by private aircraft during the last year.

The only commercial aircraft we have now, practically, is the Post Office Department craft. The Post Office Department has been extending the Air Mail Service all over the country and the figures with respect to it are very illuminating.

The Post Office Department, as you know, is now letting contracts to private concerns rather than putting the Government in the business of transporting the mails in this way. There is to be opened very shortly a mail service from Dallas, Tex., to New York. There is a mail service now from New York to San Francisco. There was a record made within a very short time of four and a half hours from New York to Chicago.

What we are trying to do by this bill is to make aviation safe so as to attract the public and the public's patronage, because, as a matter of national defense, every pilot you have on a commercial plane is a potential factor in time of war, because you have a trained pilot to use if an emergency ever arises.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the committee has made any provision for protecting the people who are walking upon the earth. I notice they are bringing pianos every day down here to Washington from New York by airplane. It is a very fine plan and I am in favor of it, but some of us might get hit.

Mr. PARKER. In answer to the gentleman I will say that at the present time we have no law to restrict aviation. After this bill is enacted the Secretary of Commerce would have the power to say practically what they could do.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he would prefer to yield now or later for a question about the bill.

Mr. PARKER. I would rather the gentleman asked some of the other members of the committee who are going to discuss the bill in detail, as I simply want to discuss the general proposition involved.

Now, take the Air Mail Service; it was started in 1918. Let us see what they have done to improve the safety. I want to impress upon you that the thing that appeals to me is the making of aircraft safe and that mode of transportation safe. As far as I am concerned that is all there is in this bill.

The fatalities, according to the Air Mail Service, have gone down from 64,000 miles to a fatality in 1918 to over 200,000 miles per fatality in 1925. That is due entirely to the inspection of the aircraft and the care with which the pilots have been selected. That is a tremendous improvement—from 64,000 miles per fatality to over 200,000 miles per fatality.

Now, this does not put the Government to any great expense. It will put it to some expense in lighting airways the same as you light your harbors, the same as you buoy the Potomac River to make it safe for navigation. It will entail some expense to the Government, of course. But let me say a word about the emergency landing fields which are to be provided. They are simply level fields where the aviators can make a forced landing, land with safety to the pilot and his plane.

There is a great difference between a forced landing and a crash. The crash means when a man falls and loses control of his machine. A forced landing means when he can come down slowly and land on some field that he has picked out. If we have emergency fields they will be marked and established one for every 50 or 100 miles on the airway and give the man an opportunity, if he finds he has engine trouble or something of that kind, to make a safe landing and protect both the lives and the property under his control.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will not the Government have to buy these fields?

Mr. PARKER. No; they can be leased.

Mr. LINTHICUM. How is it proposed to light them?

Mr. PARKER. It is proposed to light them just as you light for navigation on the water.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER. I will.

Mr. LAZARO. What has England and France done to develop commercial aviation?

Mr. PARKER. In answer to the gentleman I will say that every civilized country in the world except the United States has taken the question up earnestly and some have provided a direct subsidy. We do not believe in a direct subsidy, but we must light our airways and establish them for the reason that no private enterprise could possibly do it, because they could not use it for their own private business.

Mr. LAZARO. I know they have done that, but I had reference to the lines and the lighting, and so on.

Mr. PARKER. Their problems are not as great as ours because their distances are shorter.

Mr. LAZARO. And still they have problems?

Mr. PARKER. Oh, yes; but they have done a great deal and have established landing fields.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. How much does the gentleman estimate that this will cost during the next five years?

Mr. PARKER. For the first year about $250,000.

Mr. BLANTON. And the second and third and fourth years?

Mr. PARKER. That will depend upon how many routes are established and what the commercial necessity is.

Mr. BLANTON. Will it not increase each year?

Mr. PARKER. I hope so; naturally, as our transportation increases, it will increase, but not faster than the necessity compels the department to establish these routes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it to be connected with the Government Postal Service?

Mr. PARKER. The facilities of the present Postal Service are to be turned over to the Department of Commerce under an agreement between the Post Office Department and the Department of Commerce.

Mr. BLANTON. And the Department of Commerce is to run all the air mail?

Mr. PARKER. No; it has nothing to do with that at all. The facilities of the airways are turned over.

Mr. BLANTON. The airways are still to be used by the Postal Service?

Mr. PARKER. Yes; this has nothing to do with the physical transportation of the mail.

Mr. BLANTON. This bill will have no connection whatever with the physical transportation of the mail?

Mr. PARKER. Absolutely not. The mail will be transported over these air routes in a similar way that the mail is now transported over steamship routes.

Mr. BLANTON. Any private aviation concern can use these routes?

Mr. PARKER. Absolutely; yes.

As I have said, there is a very great difference between a forced landing and a crash. Twelve crashes have occurred in the Postal Service within the last year. Two men have been killed. That is to say, there were 10 crashes and the pilots were not hurt. If you will bear with me for a moment, I shall try to explain to you what makes a crash and what makes a forced landing. If a man has engine trouble and his plane loses speed so that it gets below 50 miles an hour—that is about the average—he loses control of his machine, the same as one may lose steering way on a boat. He can not control it unless he has a certain speed. If he has a speed of over 50 miles an hour, he can absolutely control that plane, even if his engine is dead. If he is up 5,000 feet, for instance, he can drift for 5 miles practically before he lands, so that you see that gives him a very great chance to make a safe landing. All we want to do is to establish these airways and make it possible to make aviation safe.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition for 10 minutes against the bill.

Mr. PARKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] has control of the time.

Mr. BLANTON. I do this after an agreement with the gentleman from Alabama.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has consumed 16 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for recognition for 10 minutes against the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule recognition by the Chair will have to be for an hour. If the gentleman yields the floor at the end of any time less than an hour, the Chair will consider that only the amount of time actually consumed has been granted to those in opposition to the bill.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Alabama control an hour and a half and that I control an hour and a half.

The CHAIRMAN. That can not be done in committee, it not having been done in the House. The Chair will see to it that the time is equally divided between those for and those against, under the rule.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, all I want is 10 minutes, and I ask the Chair to notify me at the end of that time, so that the balance of the hour may be used by others.

I was one of the 39 Members who voted against the new separate naval aircraft bill this morning. I voted against that bill, and I shall vote against this bill, and the new Army aircraft bill, because I realize the urgent necessity for one department of national defense, and these three bills will prevent our effecting that wise economy.

I was present at the hearings before the President's aircraft board. I carefully studied the testimony given by air experts there and my conclusion is that if we pass each one of these bills that are now coming so fast before the House, one right after the other, the naval bill this morning, now this bill, then the Army bill soon to follow, and the others, we are never going to have any department of national defense with a unified air bureau. If there is one thing that the evidence before the President's aircraft board established it was the urgent necessity for doing away with the Department of the Navy and doing away with the Department of War, and then creating one department of national defense, and in that department of national defense establish a naval bureau, an Army bureau, a marine bureau, and an air bureau. Then with such a separate, independent, unified air service you would not have the Air Service of the Army starved to death by the General Staff as it has done for the last dozen years; you would not have the naval air service starved to death by the admirals who want the money for something else, as it has been, but you would have a well-equipped Air Service, and that air bureau then could allocate its service to the various departments that need it, and just when and where they need it, and that, too, in an efficient manner.

The bill we passed this morning created a separate air service within the Navy with a financial program covering the next five years. Do you know how much money it provided? It authorized for the present fiscal year, $12,285,000; for the following fiscal year, $16,223,750; for the next following fiscal year, $17,582,000; for the next fiscal year after that, $18,941,250; for the next fiscal year after that, $20,046,250; and for the following fiscal year after that, $17,476,250. That totals the enormous sum of $102,554,500 for the next five years, and for the air service in the Navy alone.

We now have this bill coming in from the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, which the distinguished chairman admits will cost $250,000 the first year, and, if his hopes are realized, it will increase in cost every year thereafter. What else will it cost? It is estimated by experts that the inspectors alone, under this bill, will cost over $1,000,000 each year. Then it provides for an additional "Assistant Secretary of Commerce," and that means all of the additional employees and added expenses that are incidental to such a position.

And worst of all it is still another infringement upon State rights by this Federal Government.

Then what else have we on this new air program? There will shortly follow the new, separate Army aircraft bill, which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORIN] has already reported to the House, No. 10827, and it is now on the Union Calendar awaiting passage. That provides for an enlarged, new, separate aircraft program for the Army. It is specially designed by the General Staff to defeat a unified air service. It provides:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to equip the Air Corps with 2,200 airplanes, with 10 airships, and with such number of free and captive balloons as he may determine are necessary for training purposes.

Do you know how much all of that is going to cost?

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PARKER. Does the gentleman not think it advisable to encourage commercial aviation?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; certainly I do. I am for that just as much as the gentleman or any member of his committee, but why could it not be done through a unified air service as a bureau in the department of national defense? Such a unified air bureau could allocate efficient air service that was needed by the Coast Guard; it could allocate the Air Service that was needed by the Army; it could allocate such air service as is needed by the Navy and by the Prohibition Unit in the Treasury Department; it could allocate the Air Service needed by the Agricultural Department, and eventually it is going to have a separate air service if we all sit here like mocking birds and swallow every piece of legislation that these committees bring before us. For one, I am not going to do it. I am going to raise my feeble voice against these bills and vote against every one of them, because it is a step backward in the wrong direction.

Mr. LEA of California. Is the gentleman in favor of placing military authority in control of civil aviation?

Mr. BLANTON. Why military authorities are in control of several things now that are not military. The improvement of rivers and harbors is in the hands of military officers. Every time you build a levee on the Mississippi River it has to be done by the Army Engineers. Hundreds of millions of dollars are expended through Army officers in the War Department on matters purely civil, so why kick now all of a sudden about the Air Service?

I want to say to my friend this: The people of the United States have waked up on this question. They are in favor of doing away with the War Department and doing away with the Navy Department, and they are for combining the two in one new department of national defense. They are for a bureau of the Army and a bureau of the Navy and a bureau of marines and a unified air bureau. They know that would save millions each year. They are for a unified air service, because they know it will make for efficiency.

That sentiment is going to grow in the United States in the next 10 years like no other question that is now before the people. Yet you are now proposing to do away with all that by these separate bills. And it is admirals and the General Staff doing it. You are crowding out that proposition. You are making it impossible for us to establish this department of national defense with a unified air bureau. It will be stifled to death by all these bills which various committees are now bringing in.

Why do we not stop it? If we do not believe in it, why should we not stop it? We should hold all these separate bills up until we have a proper bill.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to ask the gentleman whether he thinks this legislation, being under the Secretary of Commerce, would interfere with the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. BLANTON. There would be just as much reason for that assumption as the fear suggested by the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA]. One would necessarily overlap into the other. But if you had an independent air service in this Government you could then properly allocate the service to any department that needs it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. If this bill passes, as it will, would the Army and the Navy be obliged to conform to the routes laid down here?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; certainly they would. What other cross-country routes would they have? You put all the control in the hands of the Department of Commerce, and you do not know whether it would meet the approbation of the engineers in the War Department or in the Navy Department or not. That is something yet to be determined.

This bill, and each of these other separate bills, is uneconomical. Talk about the President's economy program! This is the most extravagant proposition I ever heard of. There is no economy in it. You are going to have five separate independent air services, overlapping, one interfering with the other, with waste, extravagance, and graft connected with the whole business. You ought to stop it now. Now is the proper time to stop it. If we had 20 determined men to get up on the floor and speak their sentiments and fight, and stand like the Rock of Gibraltar we could stop it. But you fellows will not fight. You sit here and take what is handed to you. You follow the path of least resistance because it is easy to follow.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. I would be interested in hearing the gentleman tell us in what way the passage of the Navy aviation bill and the Army aviation bill and this bill will interfere with the creation of a department of national defense?

Mr. BLANTON. Every one of them has a five-year program. Whenever you have mapped out a program for five years you can not interfere with that.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. PARKER. Is there a five-year program in this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. No. There is a perpetual program. It makes the Army and Navy follow the cross-country routes that the Secretary of Commerce prescribes. I shall fight for one department of national defense and a unified air service, and I shall vote against all these separate bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield back the balance of my time, so that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] and others who want time may use it.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, how does the time now stand?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has used 16 minutes and 10 minutes have been used in opposition.

Mr. PARKER. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, I propose to give briefly to the committee what I think are the main features of this bill. And, first, I would like to say to the committee that this bill is the result of a number of years' consideration by all the departments interested and by various committees.

In the last Congress this same Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce reported out a bill under the leadership of Chairman Winslow, to whom a great deal of credit should be given for the results which we now present to you. I may say that the delay in presenting this final bill has not been due to any lack of consideration, but to necessary care and consideration. The results, at least some of the results, you will approve of, because the bill presented in the last Congress covered some 55 pages, while in this Congress, by condensation and by more general statements, we think we have covered all the essential features in a bill embracing only about 19 pages. We have not lost sight of the fact that this industry is such a new industry that there is but little experience to guide us, and, therefore, we have not striven to make the provisions of the bill too strict or too detailed.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman care to be interrupted now, or later?

Mr. MERRITT. At any time.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. The bill that passed the Senate is the Bingham bill?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes;

Mr. HILL of Maryland. And your committee has substituted for that the Morrow Board report, or the Winslow bill?

Mr. MERRITT. Both. We have been guided by the report of the Morrow Board, and we have also been guided by the Winslow bill. As a matter of fact, a considerable part of the Morrow Board report adopted or agreed with the Winslow bill and was taken from it. The Bingham bill and the identical bill, introduced by Mr. PARKER, followed that Morrow report; and, although we approve that report, we have stricken out the Senate bill, not because we have changed the structure, but we thought it would be easier to report an entirely new bill covering the same field, but avoiding, for the sake of simplicity, the printing of a multitude of amendments, which have been inserted in order to make it workable.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. The original Bingham bill was a bill prepared by the Department of Commerce, following the Morrow Board?

Mr. MERRITT. I believe so; but I am not certain of that.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. The gentleman's bill, as reported, provides for an Assistant Secretary of Commerce for purposes of aviation?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Did the original Bingham bill provide that?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. And it was recommended by the Morrow report?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. So that feature remains the same?

Mr. MERRITT. That feature remains the same, and that is the feature which has been changed from the Winslow bill, the Winslow bill having provided for the creation of a separate bureau.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. But did not provide an assistant secretary?

Mr. MERRITT. No.

Mr. PEERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. PEERY. As I understand, this bill provides for the licensing of those who participate in aviation?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. PEERY. And that the Government shall collect a fee?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. PEERY. What is the plan or purpose of the bill as to how that matter shall be handled?

Mr. MERRITT. That was one of the points I referred to in my general remarks, namely, that we appreciated that this industry is very new. I have talked at length with the officials of the Department of Commerce, and they say their intention is to make this fee extremely moderate at first in order to see how it works, and it may be advisable later to abolish the fees, but I think the gentleman may be assured that there is no intention to make those fees at all excessive.

Mr. PEERY. That is left entirely to the discretion of the Department of Commerce?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. I will.

Mr. KINDRED. The gentleman knows that at various county fairs and other public exhibitions there are present, as I understand, with very little regulation or very loose regulation, aviators who set up their ability to carry passengers on a trip which I consider endangers their lives. What are the regulations which will control that sort of thing?

Mr. MERRITT. No man who engages in commercial aviation, especially for the carrying of passengers, can do so without a license and without having a certificate as to the air worthiness of his ship.

Mr. KINDRED. Is it proposed under this bill to control such abuses as I refer to?

Mr. MERRITT. It is; yes.

Mr. KINDRED. What will be the qualifications for a license or for the issuance of a certificate to the effect that the aviator is competent?

Mr. MERRITT. That will have to be covered by the regulations issued by the department.

Mr. KINDRED. But it is strictly covered in this bill?

Mr. MERRITT. It is; yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. If the gentleman will permit, in response to the gentleman from New York, the bill provides that certain spaces may be reserved above places such as churches, public fairs, and gatherings of that sort, whereby the airplanes will be prohibited from using those spaces. In that way they will be protected.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. BLAND. What is the basis of Federal jurisdiction in licensing an aviator at a fair held in the State and under local jurisdiction? Where do you get your Federal authority?

Mr. MERRITT. Well, it is the same authority, in general, as permits the United States to make regulations for the railroads with reference to interstate and intrastate business.

Mr. BLAND. Provided they are engaged in interstate business; yes.

Mr. MERRITT. It is also provided that in intrastate commerce nothing can be done to interfere with interstate commerce.

Mr. BLAND. Exactly. Where the transaction of intrastate business is so connected with interstate business or so interwoven that the regulations with respect to intrastate business would impose a burden on interstate business, the Federal Government would have jurisdiction, but under what authority would the Federal Government have the right to require an aviator in the State of Virginia or in the State of Massachusetts, flying in that State, living in that State and flying over fairs in that State, to get a Federal license?

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman yield so that I may reply to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. PARKER. Is it not more comparable with the navigation of the water?

Mr. BLAND. That is a matter of the regulation of commerce, and that is a matter of the regulation of commerce between the States.

Mr. PARKER. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken. Commerce entirely intrastate is regulated by the Federal Government as it relates to the water.

Mr. BLAND. Does the gentleman mean that we can pass a Federal regulation dealing entirely with commerce within a State and in no wise connected with interstate business?

Mr. PARKER. We can certainly control the licensing of the boat, the licensing of the pilot, and everything of that kind. I will not say you can control the price that may be charged for the shipment of a commodity, but it is necessary to have a Federal license to run a boat on the James River, and this is exactly comparable with that.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further at this point.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will not the gentleman leave himself enough time or take enough time at the end of his general remarks so that we may ask one or two questions?

Mr. MERRITT. I will if I have the time.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. We understand that the gentleman is really explaining this bill.

Mr. MERRITT. I do not want to give too much time to details, because I want, in the time the chairman has allotted to me, to give a general view of the bill. Of course, when the bill is read under the five-minute rule there will be an opportunity for inquiries as to the details.

I think it will be worth while, on this general principle that the gentleman has just been asking about, the control of the air, to call the attention of the committee to the fact that there exists among the principal nations of the world a convention which relates to international air navigation. This convention was negotiated, I think, during the administration of President Wilson. It was signed by the representatives of the United States, but as that convention has some relation to the League of Nations, it has never been presented to the Senate. However, in drawing this legislation we thought it best and safest in the end to pay attention to some of the provisions, at least, of that international convention.

I think the committee will be interested in listening to the basic points of that convention. I will not read all these articles. I am going to read a part of the first three articles of the general convention which, as I have said, the United States has signed, but which has not been ratified by the Senate:

The high contracting parties recognize that every power has complete and exclusive sovereignty over the air space above its territory.

Article 2 is important in connection with this bill:

Each contracting State undertakes in time of peace to accord freedom of innocent passage above its territory to the aircraft of the other contracting States, provided that the conditions laid down in the present convention are observed.

Regulations made by a contracting State as to the admission over its territory of the aircraft of the other contracting States shall be applied without distinction of nationality.

Following is the provision reserving the air space which the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] has mentioned:

Each contracting State is entitled, for military reasons or in the interest of public safety, to prohibit the aircraft of the other contracting States, under the penalties provided by its legislation and subject to no distinction being made in this respect between its private aircraft and those of the other contracting States, from flying over certain areas of its territory.

In that case the locality and the extent of the prohibited areas shall be published and notified beforehand to the other contracting States.

The chairman has already pointed out that this legislation does not in any way interfere with Army flyers or with Navy flyers. All we are trying to do in this legislation is to encourage, and, in the most general way, to regulate and provide for licensing civil aviation. Of course, this bill and the result of it will have a great effect on both the Army and the Navy in this way. It will result in furnishing a tremendous reserve of competent flyers for the Army or the Navy in case of need. Therefore it is not only important for civil aviation but it is important in the way of national defense.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. In reply to what the gentleman from Texas pointed out, wherein he stated he thought this bill overlapped other services, and in further explanation of what you have just stated, in section 2 of the bill authority is conferred on the Department of Commerce to regulate and control aircraft and its operation; and in section 3, as you will note, it is specifically stated that the public aircraft of the United States and its airmen are exempted from the operations of this bill and that the Secretary of Commerce shall exempt them. Therefore there is no question but what, so far as the operation of aircraft by the Army and the Navy is concerned, it is unrestricted under this bill, other than the fact they are required to operate under the rules laid down here so far as public airways are concerned.

Mr. MERRITT. The gentleman is quite right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 minutes more.

Mr. MERRITT. In order that I may not overrun my next 10 minutes, I will have to ask gentlemen to refrain from questions until I conclude.

As has already been said, the administration measures of this bill are under charge of an Assistant Secretary of the Department of Commerce to be created. That department, instead of overlapping by its activities any other department, is authorized and required to coordinate with them. For instance, they are authorized to call on the meteorological service for weather reports. They are authorized to get from other departments any reports as to accidents and causes thereof; to get information as to foreign experience and disseminate it to all the other departments.

Then, instead of overlapping any activities of the Post Office Department, they are authorized and required to take over from the Post Office Department the present operation of the air mail. They take over all the Post Office appropriations for that purpose and their air ports. The Post Office Department, as you know, is proposing to run the air mail now not directly, as it has been doing, but by contract, and some very interesting results will undoubtedly come from that. I am reliably informed that a commercial aviation company is actually in existence which proposes to initiate an express service from Dallas, Tex., to New York City, via Chicago, with a flying time schedule of less than 10 hours.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Is the gentleman ready for questions now?

Mr. MERRITT. I would rather wait until I get through my statement, because I may not have any time left.

For purposes of safety and for regulation of registration and inspection, broad powers are necessarily given to the Secretary of Commerce.

In the Winslow bill we tried to be rather more explicit than we have been in this bill, but we recognize there must be a working out by experience and by trial. None of us is wise enough to know what may result from further experience.

The Secretary of Commerce has authority within the appropriations which may be granted, to provide lighted and marked airways for these great trade routes. This is on the same principle that the Government provides beacons and channel marks and lighthouses on the sea. You will find when we come to read the bill that we have recognized the great similarity between air navigation and sea navigation, the principal difference, of course, being that navigation on the high seas is over neutral territory, whereas air navigation over the continents is over territory which is controlled by the sovereignty of the States underlying the air. But there is even more difficulty of recognizing any boundaries in the air than there is on the sea, and with regard to the question of interstate or intrastate regulation it is inconceivable, except in the very greatest States, that any aviator who flies at all will not be doing interstate flying. Of course, that may not be true of some particular fair, but it is also true that over that territory there is more than likely to be an airway on which commerce is proceeding. So that anyone who gets within the area of that airway must be regulated under the rules of interstate commerce, so as not to interfere with such commerce.

There is one very important provision whereby the Secretary of Commerce is prohibited from giving any exclusive right in any airway. There is not going to be any monopoly or favored interest in the use of airways, but anybody who gets a license for a ship which is found to be safe can fly on his own responsibility, without interference or permission from anybody else.

In regard to the question of license and inspection, there has been considerable question and some doubt in the minds of some gentlemen, but I will say that from my informal conversation with heads of the departments and other officials they do not propose to have the great number of Government inspectors that might be necessary if every aircraft should be inspected regularly. They will have rules, such as they have in the government of railways, so the Government inspector can go about occasionally and see that the local inspectors are doing their duty. Of course, the contractors contracting for mails and passenger service will be looking out for their own interest to have them inspected carefully. By an occasional inspection by a United States inspector all of these crafts can be kept up so that the great mileage to which the chairman of the committee referred a little while ago which already exists without fatalities will be increased indefinitely.

There is another provision of importance, and that is that foreign-owned aircraft shall not engage in interstate commerce in this country. That provision is similar to the provision for coastwise traffic.

We provide also for ports of entry. You will see the ramifications of this bill are very great with reference to the carrying of commerce, passengers, and immigration, and all of those questions will have to be taken into consideration.

Toward the end of the bill there are provisions for penalties and the enforcement of those penalties in court.

We have had to take account of the continental extent of the United States, and we could not make the court in which penalties should be enforced too distant, so we provide for the jurisdiction of the State courts in certain cases, so that when a man gets into trouble or does anything wrong he can be tried with the least inconvenience both to the authorities and to himself.

I think those are all the general provisions to which I wish to refer. We think we have a well-arranged bill, so that as the bill is read it will develop itself under that reading. I will now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WAINWRIGHT].

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I would like to ask the gentleman how it is proposed to operate the airways which the Post Office Department turns over. As I understand, there are 2,500 miles of airways under the Post Office Department, and when this is in operation they will have about 6,000 miles.

Mr. MERRITT. They will be operated by the Department of Commerce. The agreement with the Post Office Department is that it shall turn over the facilities, such as the routes, the lighting, and radio, and also its appropriation of $400,000 already made. The estimate of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee is that in addition to that appropriation it will take not exceeding $225,000 or $250,000 for the extra provisions in this bill.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. That will be under the new Assistant Secretary?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes; he will have charge of it.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. I will.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. In view of the language found in section 3 which exempts public aircraft of the United States in this language, "the Secretary of Commerce shall exempt from the requirement of regulations made under section 2, except requirements as to registration or as to air-traffic rules upon established airway," I would like the gentleman to explain why there is any need to have subsection (b) and subsection (c) in section 2, which provides for examination and rating of aircraft of the United States as to their air worthiness and a periodical examination rating of airmen serving in connection with the aircraft of the United States?

Mr. MERRITT. There is a difference between public aircraft of the United States and other aircraft.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Under subsection (a), section 2 defines what civil aircraft is and subdivision 2 is a definition of public aircraft.

Mr. MERRITT. That is similar to the United States registration of vessels.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. Is it contemplated by this bill to have a rating on public aircraft as to worthiness?

Mr. MERRITT. That is a public aircraft—no.

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. No such thing is contemplated in the bill?

Mr. MERRITT. Not at all.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WAINWRIGHT].

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I simply rise to sound a note of conservatism as far as this bill is concerned. I do not think we should delude ourselves with the belief that if we adopt this measure it is going to insure the development of civil aviation in this country. To accomplish that we have to do far more than what is here proposed.

The purpose of this measure is to foster and regulate civil air navigation, but I am afraid it lays more stress on regulation than on fostering; indeed, it provides for the regulation of something which, except for governmental activities, does not yet exist.

It provides a fairly elaborate structure or cage for these birds, with rules and conditions to regulate their flying; but I wonder whether it really will go far toward filling the air with flying machines as vehicles of our commerce and industry, as common carriers, in the same sense that we have carriers of persons and goods upon the sea and on the land.

The amazing thing to-day is that we, the originators, the pioneers of air navigation, the superiors in so many ways to other nations in points of excellence, have lagged so behind them; indeed, have hardly yet made a start in aerial transport as a useful method of transportation. We may hold speed records and altitude records, we may lead all the world in the frequency, rapidity, and volume of mail matter transported by our air mail, but the fact remains that there does not yet exist in the country to-day, as I understand, one line either adapted, offering, or holding out much prospect of carrying persons and goods through the air.

The President's Aircraft Board said:

We may, if we will, take the lead in the world in extending civil aviation.

They called attention with just pride to the accomplishment of the air mail, referring to it as our, practically, only outstanding accomplishment in civil aeronautics. They said that—as common carriers, however, aircraft have not been used as much in this country as in Europe. In this respect they should stand on a general parity with vehicles of transportation by sea.

But they went no further than to recommend a bureau of air navigation in the Department of Commerce, progressive extension of the air mail, steps to meet the need for airways, and air-navigation facilities, including an adequate weather service, saying that beyond this they did not presume to go. Why this timidity? Why, if civil aviation must be regarded as so important an element of the national defense or to better serve the needs of man for transportation, did they pause at the very threshold of possible and necessary Government stimulations of civil aviation?

The Lampert committee of this House went no further. It, too, recommended the regulating and encouragement of commercial flying through a bureau of air navigation, the charting of airways, emergency fields, aircraft facilities, night flying, and a specialized weather-information service, but stopped there. They, too, said—

That in respect to the operation of airplanes for profit the United States is far behind in the use of planes for navigation.

The other nations excel us largely because of subsidies granted commercial aviation as a reserve for war.

That commercial aviation lags because of the inherent difficulties of operating on a profit-making basis.

That last sentence tells the story—

the inherent difficulties of operating on a profit-making basis.

If civil aviation is important, vital as a reserve and as a stimulus to foster and keep alive a healthy and expandible aircraft industry, if it has economic advantages which make it worthy of promotion, it can never be developed or kept alive except on one of two conditions—either the difficulties of operating on a profit-making basis must be overcome without direct Government assistance, or this Government, in the same manner that all the other great governments have proceeded, must get behind it and stand behind it generously and courageously until it can stand alone or until it has been clearly shown that its advantages are not sufficient to merit such support.

How comes it that England, France, and Germany are so far ahead of us in civil aviation? In England in the year to March, 1925, they carried 13,478 passengers on regular lines and 43,766 in other flying, and over 500 tons of cargo. And in France in 1924, 16,729 passengers, 1,934,756 pounds of express matter, and 1,174,571 of mail; and in Germany on the civil lines in 1925 they flew 4,000,000 miles and carried 87,000 passengers, and during the first half of 1925 one concern or combination flew 900,000 kilometers and carried 15,200 passengers, simply because the Government of these countries have stood behind the service with subsidies or subventions; and the impressive feature is the comparatively small cost involved. The net cost to Great Britain for civil aviation for 1925-26 was estimated at £357,000, or $1,775,000; while in France the subventions for 1925 were but 61,760,000 francs, or, at the present rate of exchange, not more than $2,500,000, while their total budget for all expenditures in connection with the service for personnel, material, subventions, airways, and all the incidentals was 163,518,200 francs, or, say, $6,500,000. In Germany the total cost of the subsidies was only about $2,500,000.

In other words, they supply not only all the service and all the necessary airways and other adjuncts but, in addition, have found it necessary to contribute a large proportion of the cost of operation out of the public treasury. How can we expect to have civil aviation in this country; what reasonable expectations can we have in this country that this business, this service, can be rendered at a profit on the capital invested unless the Government is prepared to render direct financial assistance?

Our costs of every kind must be relatively higher here than abroad—labor, material, and everything that goes into the original investment and the cost of operation. Then how can we hope to succeed where they certainly would have failed? It may be possible to develop a system of common carriage by air through the medium of the Post Office Department and the air mail, and through the indirect subsidies involved in contracts with private concerns. Wealthy enthusiasts may for a time be willing to embark a part of their fortunes in such enterprises, but will they continue indefinitely?

No one can be more hopefully desirous than I, Mr. Chairman, that important results may be accomplished by this bill, yet I believe, indeed predict, that we will not have commercial aviation in the sense they have it abroad, either as a reserve for national defense or to serve the needs and convenience of our people, until we are prepared to go far beyond what is provided by this bill.

Mr. PARKER. Does the gentleman not think this is a step in advance?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I think it is a fine bill. Everything that it provides is necessary, if we are to have any commercial aviation. But I do not believe its adoption will come anywhere near realizing the hopes that so many people indulge, that we shall have the air full of commercial flying machines and thereby a great reserve for the national defense. We will never have anything like that until we courageously face the situation and the needs of commercial aviation. In other words, if the American people really want to have commercial aviation and common carriage through the air, they must pay the price and adopt the expedients that other countries have found necessary.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the bill.

This Chamber is a hard place in which to speak. If the Members are not here, there is no use in speaking; and when they are here, they make so much noise that you can not be heard. The only wonder to me is that we do not abolish debate altogether. We have present here now some 30 or 40 Members. If some Member should make a point of no quorum, we would get them all here, and then you could not hear it thunder in the House. That is debate in the House of Representatives.

While I purpose to debate this bill somewhat seriously, I have not much heart in it because of the situation. We rely very largely on our committees. Whatever a committee recommends is usually done. Members do not know what is in this bill; they have not read it; I imagine that even some members of the committee have not read it. Yet, if a roll call is had, they will come rushing in and vote "aye," according to faith in the committee. So it is hardly worth while to debate. I do so merely from a sense of duty.

I feel that there are certain features of this bill that should be brought to the attention of the House. In future years, when the evils which will flow out of it will have become obvious to everyone, perhaps somebody will go back and look in the Record and ask why nobody called attention to them. I do not want that individual who may look back into the Record to find that nobody said anything; that nobody warned against the bill. I rise to issue with my feeble voice a warning against this bill as violating certain fundamental principles.

Attention has been called to the fact that last year the committee reported this bill in a form that had some 40 pages, and that this year they have been able to reduce it to 19 pages. There is no pressing necessity for passage of the bill. I have no doubt, if we should defeat this bill, they would come back next year with one of about five pages, which would answer every purpose. The more you write into a bill of this kind the more you have to repent of later on.

The fundamental fault of which the committee was guilty is that in this bill they undertook to provide a complete code of laws governing the subject of aviation. At present we have no law. When we get through with this bill we will have a law for every conceivable angle of the subject of aviation. We should have used the method of trial and error. We should have passed such laws as may be most needed now—and no doubt some laws are needed—and then have left it to future experience to guide us as to what laws we might need to govern the details.

But here we find that, so far as the law is concerned, the utmost detail relating to aviation is attempted to be provided for by this bill. Manifestly such a measure was the work of legal experimentalists, of theorists, and doctrinaires. It was the work of men of vivid imaginations, who projected themselves far into the future and saw visions of the—

Heavens filled with commerce—

Plots of the purple twilight dropping down with costly bales.

Instead of writing a law these gentlemen should have been writing a new Locksley Hall. Theirs is the work of prophets, not of lawgivers. It was for them to project themselves into the future and to visualize a time when men are developing wings and found their activities in the air and not on the soil. That is obviously the situation which was in the minds of these gentlemen. Necessarily, having so visualized the future and brought their vision right back to date, they found the pressing necessity to cover the entire field and leave nothing for future legislators except to undo that which they are now seeking to do.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I have not given this bill very careful study.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Nobody has, except by a bare possibility the subcommittee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I want to inquire of the gentleman whether or not, under the terms of this bill, they would undertake to deal with all kinds of aviation, both interstate and intrastate?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. With civil aviation of every conceivable kind and character.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Suppose a concern in my State of Texas, which is large, and where you would have to travel a great distance before you reach the border line, a concern down there dealing in aviation, with a point of destination entirely within the State. Would it be regulated and controlled by this bill?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Oh, yes. As I said in discussing the bill in the committee, a man owning a large tract of land could not take the air from his residence to a back field without getting a license from the Secretary of Commerce. [Laughter.] That is no exaggeration. He would have to have his machine tested, and to have a pilot's license, and he must comply with such traffic rules and regulations as may be provided by the Secretary of Commerce. Such power is given to the Secretary of Commerce as would be intolerable if that situation existed which these gentlemen have visualized, to wit, if aviation had become a serious factor in commerce.

Mr. Hoover, who has already been made dictator of the radio, now with this bill becomes lord of the air. He is already lord of the waters. He is the Poo-h-Bah of this administration. He is the factotum of the executive branch of our Government—its man of all work. There is but small limit to his authority and activities. I quote again. He is almost equal to Alexander Selkirk and almost able to say:

I am monarch of all I survey;
My word there is none to dispute;
From the center clear round to the sea
I am lord of the fowl and the brute.

[Laughter.]

He will be lord of the air if this bill should pass. Nothing, unless it falls strictly within the province of the Almighty, that can be done in all the region lying above a man's head that Mr. Hoover will not undertake to regulate and deal with. [Laughter.] Perhaps even a disembodied spirit will not be permitted to wing its way upward into a better world without petitioning Mr. Hoover and getting a pilot's license before he starts. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. BLAND. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that this legislation will also give this man Hoover command over the ships?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes. He will be lord of the air over the seas.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course, I know that the Constitution of the United States in these days seems to be a very archaic document—

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes; some of its provisions are quite out of date.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But by what strength of general construction have they authority to undertake to regulate intrastate control of airplanes?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The best answer I can make to the question of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is to read subdivision (c) of section 13, which is found on page 30 of the bill, as follows:

The Congress hereby declares that the application of the provisions of this section to intrastate air navigation in the navigable air space is made necessary for the reason that air commerce is a unit and does not regard State lines and that interstate and intrastate air navigation are so mingled together that the United States can not exercise complete effective control and protection of air navigation in interstate and foreign commerce and prevent interference therewith without incidental regulation of intrastate air navigation in the navigable air space.

The bill expressly covers flying wholly within a State. This is their theory: The Constitution gives the Congress the power to regulate foreign commerce and commerce between the States. I do not know where the courts will stop in their construction of that clause. Every year we find it extended, and extended, and extended. The powers of Congress under the commerce clause are so exceedingly broad and general that they permit interference with the most intimate details of life and every activity of business. It is hard to say where the limit is.

But I want to say to the gentleman who has asked me the question that in my opinion this bill is an unconstitutional measure. Congress has power to regulate interstate commerce only. It has no authority to meddle with intrastate commerce. It can not extend its authority to the regulation of intrastate commerce, unless such regulation is reasonably necessary as an incident to the regulation of interstate commerce.

Congress can not regulate intrastate commerce as such. Congress has no power, so far as commerce within a State is concerned, except such power as is reasonably necessary in the performance of its constitutional function in the regulation of interstate commerce. I think every lawyer will agree with me in that view. The Supreme Court has said that Congress may regulate intrastate commerce when it is necessary for the protection of interstate commerce. The court has never gone any further.

This bill, at one fell swoop, takes for the Federal Government exclusive jurisdiction of all of the air that lies above every foot of soil of the United States. Do you realize that, gentlemen?

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. TUCKER. Will my friend permit me to call attention to what seems to be a most generous concession in this bill?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Certainly.

Mr. TUCKER. I read:

The Government of the United States hereby consents that the several States and the Territories and possessions of the United States (and any political subdivision thereof in pursuance of the law of the State, Territory, or possession), may by law (1) provide for the prosecution of offenses that are punishable by the Federal Government—

And so forth.

It gives us the right to punish for the violation of the Federal law. We must at least thank them for that concession. We may also prescribe penalties, forfeitures, civil or criminal, to be imposed for such offenses.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I thank the gentleman for his comment on that.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. LEA of California. In response to that question, I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the offense to be prosecuted under the State law must be defined by the State law. It permits the State to make a similar law and prosecute under the State law and bar a prosecution by the Federal Government.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Now, let us get back to our mutton.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Before the gentleman gets back to that I want to call his attention to something he omitted in speaking of what Mr. Hoover, Secretary of Commerce, could control. He also has commercial attachés throughout the civilized world, has he not?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes. We will consider a bill which extends his powers on that subject to-morrow.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Before the gentleman passes from this point, when did it become necessary for the Federal Government to give the State government the right to prescribe penal offenses?

Mr. LEA of California. Will the gentleman permit me to answer that?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I prefer not to continue on that line further. That is something I did not bring out.

I want to come back to a point which is an interesting feature in this bill. At one fell swoop the Federal Government takes exclusive jurisdiction of all of the air over the soil of the United States.

Whether it be actually needed for aviation purposes, whether it be necessary for airways and landing spaces, whether it be remote from the city, whether it be far away in the forest or somewhere on some bald mountain peak, Uncle Sam will be there. He is taking it over. There will be no more State lines, and the States will have nothing to do with aviation. Uncle Sam is taking over the air. The soft zephyrs that blow in Florida, the sturdy breezes that rumple the locks of my friend from Texas, the icy blasts that come from the home of my friend from Minnesota, and the snowy winds of Maine—Uncle Sam has taken them all. What is the use of a State, anyhow? What is the value of local self-government? What is the sense in preserving the institutions of our fathers? It is all bosh. It is no part of the Hoover scheme of things. Lord of the air and the sea. Where will he stop? What is he going to end up with?

Now, this idea of exclusive Federal control and jurisdiction of this subject goes through and through this bill. I have prepared and will offer them at the proper time—a half dozen or more amendments. It will take them all to delete out of this bill those portions of it which exclude the States from the powers they have heretofore exercised.

Of course, I know that owners of private property have no rights that the aviators are required to respect. The doctrine when I studied the law books was that if you owned land, it was yours down to the center of the earth and up to the top of the heavens, and you had the right to go anywhere in your property that might suit you without asking anybody's leave. But Mr. Hoover proposes to reverse that rule. He proposes to say that hereafter land owners must "keep their feet on the ground." No longer are you to be permitted to ascend into the heavens, if you have the means of doing so. You must get his permission, and the vehicle in which you ascend must meet with his approval.

Mr. MERRITT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. MERRITT. Does the gentleman hold, in view of this new invention of aviation—which would have been new to our fathers, at least—that if he has a ranch in Texas, he could forbid anyone from flying over his ranch?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I hold that under this bill I could not do it.

Mr. MERRITT. Do you think you should?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Probably we should do like it is said the Mexicans do and confiscate the minerals as well as the air.

Mr. MERRITT. The gentleman does not answer my question.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No; the trouble is that I gave the gentleman an answer he did not want. That is the trouble with him. The gentleman does not like to talk about confiscating minerals, but he is perfectly willing to confiscate air. To the man who has no minerals in his land the air above it is more valuable than the minerals under it. He would not object to Mexican confiscation of the below surface. All he wants is enough of the bottom to hold up the surface, and so that he can keep on using the surface. But a flyer can come sailing over in an airplane and drop a monkey wrench on his head or do something else which would disturb his privacy. A flyer can sail at will over my home, and I could not prevent it under the terms of this bill. He can sail around and around with his rattling and his roaring. He can disturb my privacy and put me in danger of his falling down upon me, and I have not a word to say. Although I have title to the land from the Government, or it has come down to me through the generations, and though I paid for it, not only have I lost the right to fly over my own land, but somebody else has succeeded to that right. It has been taken from me and donated to the public.

The holders of Mr. Hoover's permits have the exclusive privilege, and Mr. Hoover has the right to say who shall fly over my land, how high he shall fly, how many passengers he may take with him, what "eternal verities" they may confront as they pass along, and a thousand and one things. All is put in the control of Mr. Hoover.

Now, I am not willing to give any man that power. There is no need to give it.

Mr. MERRITT. I insist the gentleman has not answered my question.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I think I have. I am opposed to confiscation. If the public needs the air over my land, let the right of eminent domain be exercised; let the easement be condemned and pay me for it.

Mr. MERRITT. I want to say that if the gentleman is talking about an airman maneuvering around and around a place of that kind, he must have quite a good-sized place.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. A flyer can maneuver around over a 10-acre field. A distinguished public man on a great occasion a few years ago was trying to make a speech in a park here, and one of these fellows was flying an airplane. He did not care to hear the speech, but wanted to show off. He flew around and around and around, and the orator could not speak.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Is that the cause of the gentleman's solicitude, that he does not want to be interfered with while making a speech?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Well, I may say this: Without giving any names, the man who was making the speech is about the best speaker I know of, and I would rather hear him speak than anybody else. As a rule, if there is anything I hate worse than speaking myself, it is to hear some one else make a speech. But in his case I make an exception. He could not speak that day because of the rattle and roar which went on.

Suppose you retire from your enemy into the bosom of your own plantation, where you hope to be safe and secure from him. You can not be safe under this bill. All he has to do is to learn how to aviate and then go and fly over you. He can fly and fly as long as he wants to and you can not take a shotgun and drive him away—he holds a Hoover license. You can not use the time-honored methods to defend your privacy and your home. The traditional right of the Englishman to defend his castle is repealed so far as this bill is concerned.

If this bill had proposed to exercise the right of eminent domain over the air and to pay landowners whatever might be awarded to them as damages, it would in that respect present an aspect of reasonableness and fairness. But they coolly answered me when I presented that thought, "Oh, they can not prove any damages. We will just go and take it." That is the idea back of this bill—we will just go and take it. It is expropriation to confiscate the air over a man's land just as much as if you took the minerals that lie beneath the soil. It is confiscation just as much as if you took something that you could weigh and feel. The right to privacy, the right to view the heavens unobscured by one of these pestiferous fellows flying around for the purpose of showing off and perhaps doing the tall spin and the oak leaf, and other fool "stunts," are valuable rights belonging to a landowner and he ought not to be robbed of them by the strong arm of the Government.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The gentleman may recall that the dedicatory exercises of the Lincoln Memorial were very seriously marred by such a performance as the gentleman is now describing. That may have been referred to before I came on the floor.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes; I called attention to that just a moment ago.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. The hospitals also very seriously object to having flying going on near them.

Mr. LINTHICUM. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to tell the gentleman, in connection with his statement about not being able to shoot one of these fellows, about a little incident that happened recently. There was a woodpecker out our way the other day who began on a metal steeple of the church and disturbed the congregation to such an extent that they asked permission to shoot him. They wrote to the conservation commissioner of Maryland and he said they could shoot the woodpecker, but when they were about to exercise that right they ascertained they could not do it because the Government had something to say about woodpeckers as migratory birds. They have now taken it up with the Government; meanwhile the woodpecker is still pecking away on the steeple on the church. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Probably the woodpecker will be protected under this bill as an aviator, if he will get a license from Mr. Hoover, and then he can fly back and forth at will and peck any wood he can find. [Laughter.] But he will have to have a pilot's license and have his wings inspected.

Now, passing on from that point. Of course, I can not vote for the bill. In my opinion it is unconstitutional, and responding to my obligation as a Congressman I can not vote for the bill. But apart from the question of the legalistic aspect of constitutionalism, the bill involves a very important question of public policy. At last, though it be legal, it violates the right of self-government.

It is foolish to take away from the people the right of self-government simply because we are dealing with a new subject. Let us hold to some of the ancient rules. Self-government is still good for many things. If it is good for going along on the surface of the land, it is good for travel through the air. Let the States continue to deal with the subjects of which they have the proper jurisdiction.

Passing on from that point I take up the matter of appropriations, which was referred to by the gentleman from Texas in his remarks. There is absolutely no limit in this bill, so far as appropriations are concerned. Unlimited appropriations are authorized by this bill for this year and for next year and for every year which may come hereafter. What appropriation will be made will be left to the discretion of the Committee on Appropriations as same may be approved by the House. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] says $200,000 next year. If the committee say $200,000,000, they have jurisdiction to report that amount, and whatever they desire in any year thereafter they can report.

It is contemplated under this bill that the Secretary of Commerce will provide airways; that is, routes mapped out to go through the air over. How wide they are to be I do not know. How long they are to be I do not know. What the rights of the Government are to be within them I have not the slightest idea. It is expected that lights and beacons, and so on, will be put up all along these airways. The chances are that some blue-coated pilot of the air will see that order is preserved and traffic rules carried out. Whatever the Secretary says goes under this bill. It is contemplated also there will be landing fields. There will be many, but how many the bill does not say. Where they will be and what their size will be nobody knows. There are to be facilities at these landing places and airdromes for shelter, and gasoline stations, and, the chances are, soda-water stands and whatever else, I have not the slightest idea; but whatever people may need when they have been up high in the air and land on the ground. The Secretary of Commerce is expected to provide them all. [Laughter.]

The idea is that the whole country will be crisscrossed and covered with these airways and these lighted spaces, and so on, and that there will be an efficient corps of employees to care for the lights and turn them on and off and to cut down the trees and smooth the ways and to keep the grass cut, and a thousand and one things. How many employees are to be provided to carry out this work I do not know. What it is going to cost nobody knows. The committee has not the slightest information on that point. I could not guess within $100,000,000 what it would cost within 10 years or how much will be spent in that kind of work during the years that are to come.

I think the bill ought to limit the appropriations. I do not know of any other interest that comes here with a wide-open authorization of any appropriation the committee may want to make. As far as I know, this is the only instance in which an unlimited amount may be appropriated in order to carry it out.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. With pleasure.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Committee on Appropriations usually follows the Budget estimates, and that the Secretary of Commerce has great influence with the Bureau of the Budget, and whatever he asks of the Bureau of the Budget will be the Budget estimates.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. This bill comprises an entire complicated system of laws. It is a complete code of laws covering this subject down to every detail. Glancing through it I find my greatest hope in section 14, which provides that if any provision of the bill is declared unconstitutional then the validity of the remainder will still remain. [Laughter.] That is the most hopeful sign that has come out of the subcommittee, the recognition there made that perhaps some section of the bill is unconstitutional.

I imagine that if all the sections that would have to be amended in order to eliminate the usurpation of jurisdiction on the part of the Federal Government, it would not leave much of the bill remaining.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Has the gentleman any answer, and if so, what, to the question that if it be true that the ownership of the air above is in the owner of the land, how can we deal with aviation?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I studied Blackstone and Kent's Commentaries, but they did not have airplanes in their time. They never conceived that the right of the landowner to view the heavens at will unobscured by airplanes would be disputed. Those old fogies taught me that the right to light and air and view were of value and could not be confiscated without compensation. They got the idea from Justinian. Of course, all three of them were old fools.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. The gentleman does not think that that ancient doctrine is going to stand in the way of laws for the regulation of aviation?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No; I do not think it would if we went at the subject in a reasonable way. It would be proper for the Secretary of Commerce in order to provide for airways to take condemnation proceedings and go through the forms of condemning the easement so that whatever rights the owner of the land may have would be evaluated and paid for. That would be a constitutional method. But here comes the Government and says to the man, "You are in the way of a development; get out of the way." Is that what the gentleman would favor?

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. I have not said that I favored anything; I was asking the gentleman a question.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I have answered the gentleman the best I can.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman from Alabama allow me to answer the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. With reference to the ancient doctrine to which the gentleman has referred, laid down by Kent and Blackstone, there were no telephones nor telegraphs at that time, and yet they were subsequently invented, and there have been a great many decisions by the courts which hold that they can not put up a line across a man's premises without compensation. Here is the same principle.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The American Bar Association was much interested in this subject. They appointed a committee of their young men. Some of them had taken the air, although they had not seen much of the law, and they realized the importance of aviation if not of preserving property rights. This committee calmly came before us and said in substance, "Oh, that is an old worn-out doctrine that a man owns the air. That does not prevail under modern development and modern ideas. He has no such right at all. He thinks he bought the air, but all he bought was about as high as he could reach, and whatever there is above that is for the aviators." That is about the answer they gave. What the law may be I fear I do not know. I am a much better judge of what honesty and right and good public policy is than I am of the legalisms of the law, although I spent over 20 of the worst years of my life studying it. [Laughter.] You can not tell what a court is going to hold. You can not tell whether they are going to keep holding it, and you can not tell what made them hold it when they held it. [Laughter.] But the principles of honesty and justice—the principles that protect a man in the enjoyment of his own property—remain the same now as in Blackstone's and Kent's time, and will so remain as long as God is in heaven, for justice never changes. [Applause.]

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. KING. I am much concerned over one feature of this legislation. I presume there is some provision to be made about the care and against the destruction of an airway by cyclone or tornado?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I think Olympian Jove would not dare to hurl a thunderbolt without a license from Secretary Hoover. Probably Icarus's equipment would have been pronounced defective by one of Secretary Hoover's inspectors, so that he would have been saved from the jolt he got.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Under the old rule of law where one exercising ordinary care coupled with an act of God does damage to another, that one is not responsible. Here is an airway set out by Mr. Hoover. An aviator flying down the airway strikes a cyclone or something of that kind and is brought to earth on top of a farmhouse. Does that act of God give the farmer any redress, or is there any provision in the bill that covers that feature of it?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, that is a rather difficult legal question, and I must decline to try to solve it for the gentleman. It may be that if Mercury should have his anklets approved by Mr. Hoover, after due and formal inspection, and be a bearer of an air pilot's license, he might fall at will without liability to respond in damages.

With reference to the question asked by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING], and in all seriousness, these airways are to be maintained and these lights cared for by the Government.

There is a clause in the bill that if anybody interferes with them he will have to go to jail. Probably if a farmer burning a pile of brush on his own land should set up what might be considered a confusing light, the farmer will have to go to jail. That is a provision of this bill. I sought vainly to get the committee to change it, but they would not. Ephraim was wedded to his idols. Theorists and doctrinaires heed no practical considerations. They are thinking about the future and of the heavens filled with "the nations' airy navies, grappling in the central blue," "with the standards of the peoples plunging through the thunderstorm," and so on, and on, and on. I would that they could usher in "the parliament of man, the federation of the world," with the balance of their vision.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. LEA of California. I call the gentleman's attention to line 23, on page 20, in which we find the following words:

Any person (1) who, with intent to interfere with air navigation—

And so forth.

Would not that make some qualification of the gentleman's statement of the law?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That subsection reads in full as follows:

Any person (1) who, with intent to interfere with air navigation—in the navigable airspace or waters of the United States, exhibits within the United States any false light or signal at such place or in such manner that it is likely to be mistaken for a true light or signal required by regulation under this act, or for a light or signal connected with an airport or other air navigation facility; or (2) who knowingly removes, extinguishes, or interferes with the operation of any such true light or signal; or (3) who without lawful authority knowingly exhibits any such true light or signal.

Clause 3 does not require any bad intent; it does not say with "intent to interfere with navigation"; it merely says "knowingly." You must have a permit from Mr. Hoover in order to help a flyer and to give him his true light and signal.

If you find that a light has accidentally gone out, you can not light it or set it up again unless you have a permit from Mr. Hoover. Your intention may be honest and humanitarian, but away with you to jail. I think there is plenty of that kind of stuff in the bill to support the suggestion that I make as to its unreasonableness. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized for 12 minutes.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, before addressing myself to the bill before the committee, I desire to announce the death of Luther Burbank, who was a resident of my home city, Santa Rosa, Calif. Mr. Burbank was unquestionably the greatest Californian of his generation. He contributed more to the improvement of the quality and productivity of the products of the garden, the field, and the orchard than any other man in the history of mankind. Some people refer to his work as though it were a matter of magic or of mystery. It was neither. Mr. Burbank's work was accomplished because of his incessant labor. His system has become the system everywhere on earth for the development of vegetable life. It was simply the intelligent, trained, experienced selection and development of the best. Mr. Burbank had a great heart. He was as gentle and kind and as humble as a human being can be. From the standpoint of the service he has performed for his fellow man, he deserves a high place in the history of the great of our country and of the world. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] opposes this bill upon the theory that it would interfere with the establishment of a separate defense system of the United States. I agree with the gentleman from Texas that this country should have a separate department for national defense. I believe every military arm of the Government of the United States should be centralized and in one control. Whenever we go to war we face the necessity of developing a unity of control, supply, and operations of our military forces. As a business proposition for the United States and from the standpoint of effective military operations that organization ought to be trained to habituate itself in time of peace to that unity that is necessary in time of war. I would never be in favor of turning over to the military authorities the right to control civil aviation in the United States.

As one who has been active in the preparation of this bill, I am here to support its provisions. I believe this is a good bill. I confess that we have attempted to anticipate the growth of aviation in the United States. We have attempted to meet conditions that are sure to arise. That I take to be one of the merits of this bill.

To begin with, we must consider this fact. We are going to have regulation of aviation and we are going to have regulation by 48 States of the Union or else we are going to have a uniform system of regulation by the Federal Government. It is far better that now, in the initial stages of aviation, when aviation is more or less an experiment, we should develop a system of law under which aviation may be developed, instead of attempting to make aviation readjust itself to conform to the law 20 or 30 years from now when the problem has become much more difficult than to-day.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Would it not be better to wait until the development of aviation so that we may see its needs and they might be ascertained than to try to anticipate its needs by law in advance?

Mr. LEA of California. I think there is no difficulty to-day in anticipating the needs of aviation so far as they are included in this bill. There is nothing new in this bill. Everything has a precedent in the laws and practices of this country as applied to other functions. In addition to that, practically everything that is in the bill is in the international air navigation convention as adopted at Prague in 1919. That convention was signed by representatives of the United States and has been ratified by leading progressive nations of the world. There is nothing new in the bill and there is much more in the air navigation convention than in this bill.

This bill assumes we are going to have air navigation of important proportions in the United States. In preparing this bill we have felt we should do two things: We should try to promote civil air navigation, and we should try to prescribe those reasonable regulations that are necessary for safety and for the protection of the public in the operation of airplanes.

There are three primary uses of the airplane. The first great distinctive quality of the airplane, as distinguished from other methods of transportation, is that it has the fascinating quality of rising from the ground and following the routes of the birds. If the airplane could do nothing else than that, it would be a fascinating subject to the American people and would cause them to devote themselves to its development.

As contrasted with other methods of transportation, the airplane has one primary advantage over other systems, and that is its speed. When speed is important, as it frequently is with travelers, or in the transmission of messages or freight, the airplane is in a class by itself. From the standpoint of safety or economy the airplane has little or nothing of advantage over established methods of transportation.

The primary reason why the airplane is not a successful competitor with other means of transportation to-day is its lack of economy, or expense of operation. The primary solution of the problem of successful civil aviation depends upon the development of the airplane, so it can transport freight and passengers on a profit basis and at reasonable prices. Until that time comes the airplane will not be a serious competitor with ground and water transportation.

The use of airplanes for transportation must be limited to those light articles that can be transmitted at small cost on account of light weight, or to those articles of commerce where weight is unimportant as compared with the value of the article. A large number of the nations of the earth have so developed civil aviation that by comparison the United States lags behind. However, the fact is that nearly every commercial line of aviation on earth is subsidized by the interested government.

The primary use of the airplane, however, and the spectacular use of it, has been for military purposes. The airplane has and will be used for military purposes regardless of the expense of operation. The military airplane at the beginning of the World War was a crude and ineffective affair. Four years of war in Europe developed an efficient flying machine. When we were in the war for 19 months we learned that America could produce, so far as quantity production was concerned; but the fundamental weakness of America in the war as to aircraft matters was the lack of proper designs. We did not have the approved successful designs for the types the battle lines in Europe required.

We have not begun to solve our military aviation problem until we have approved and established designs of effective machines of the types that war requires. So far as the War Department and the Navy Department lack such designs our program is a failure, and only to that extent. We have good and efficient machines for some of those types only.

If we develop civil aviation in the United States, we will simplify the question of design. We will have broad experience in aviation and experienced designing forces in the United States. In addition to that we will have the manufacturing force to produce engines and planes in quantity production rapidly. In addition to that we will have a trained personnel. We will have a great reserve capable of going to the battle front in a few weeks and manning the planes that will be produced to meet an emergency. So a most important step in the development of military aviation is the development of civil aviation.

ENCOURAGEMENTS TO AVIATION

The provisions of this bill may be divided into two classes. The first provide encouragements for aviation; the second, regulations. In the way of encouragement we provide that the Secretary of Commerce shall foster aviation and shall encourage the establishment of air ports and air-navigation facilities in the United States. He is given power to chart airways and publish maps showing routes and facilities to accommodate travel on those routes.

The bill also provides that aircraft facilities owned by the United States shall be available for public use, subject to regulation by the head of the department having control of the facilities. In emergency cases supplies may be furnished aviators from the fields owned by the United States. The Secretary of Commerce can designate airways for travel.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. LEA of California. I ask recognition in support of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized in his own right.

Mr. LEA of California. Within the limits of the appropriation provided by the Committee on Appropriations and Congress, the Secretary has power to establish fields, signal facilities, and air-navigation facilities.

The Weather Bureau is authorized to make reports in aid and support of aviation. There is nothing of an unusual character about this provision. As you know, the Government is permitted to aid and encourage many lines of industry in the United States.

REGULATIONS

Now, as to regulations. The bill provides for the registration of all airplanes, with minor exceptions. The planes to be registered must belong to a citizen of the United States, to a public subdivision thereof, or the Government itself. The law also provides for three forms of certificate to be issued by the Secretary of Commerce—one as to the air worthiness of the ship, the other as to the competency of the airmen, and the other as to air-navigation facilities. The air-navigation-facility certificate is not compulsory. The certificates of air worthiness, airmen, and navigation facilities shall not be required as to operations of governmental machines.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman made the statement that each airplane had to be registered, but he did not state where it was to be registered.

Mr. LEA of California. That is subject to regulation by the Secretary of Commerce and arrangements can be made for registration in different parts of the country.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Does the bill provide that it must be so arranged?

Mr. LEA of California. No. It is to be done by regulations of the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Then, as he has general regulatory powers, the regulation may provide for different places outside of Washington or they may not.

Mr. LEA of California. Well, the plan announced is to have a system whereby the machines may be registered in different sections of the country.

Mr. RAMSEYER. They are to be registered with the Commerce Department?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to prescribe traffic rules. Every plan of any nation or political section of a country that has attempted to provide for the regulation of airplanes has provided for air traffic rules. It is manifestly necessary that airplanes operating in the air shall have a system of signal rules as ships have at sea. There must be a signal system so that the operator will know on which side the ship shall pass, what signal shall be displayed in the daytime or at night, and so forth.

Another authority given the Secretary of Commerce is to prescribe the altitude at which airplanes must fly. We are all familiar with the fact that there has been more or less complaint about airplanes flying so low that they disturb people for various reasons.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes.

Mr. BLAND. Has the gentleman any idea as to the size of the staff that will be necessary to enforce this law or how many employees will be needed?

Mr. LEA of California. It is expected that a small staff will be sufficient, because the inspection will be similar to locomotive inspection in the United States. For that service there is a small number of men who inspect about 60,000 locomotives in the United States, with the aid of some subordinate employees.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman realizes that in most of the States, or in numerous parts of some of the States, there are privately owned and privately manipulated airplanes?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Run for pleasure and where they charge so much to go up. All of those will have to be inspected under this bill?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes. They are subject to inspection in States that have inspection laws at the present time.

Mr. BLANTON. But under this bill they are subject to inspection by Mr. Hoover?

Mr. LEA of California. They are.

Mr. BLANTON. And they will have to be inspected?

Mr. LEA of California. They will have to have certificates of air worthiness.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman believe there will have to be at least one inspector for every State and probably a number of them for some of the States, like California, Ohio, and Texas?

Mr. LEA of California. No. We do not have an inspector for every State in the inspection of engines.

Mr. BLANTON. Take Texarkana. It is 980 miles from Texarkana to El Paso across Texas. One inspector would not inspect at Texarkana and also inspect at El Paso, nearly 1,000 miles away. One inspector would not inspect at Dalhart and then go down the coast to Corpus Christi.

Mr. LEA of California. The inspector will not have to follow the machine, but the machine will have to follow the inspector. It will be necessary for the owner of the machine to have a certificate.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from California knows there are to be lots of inspectors under this bill?

Mr. LEA of California. Unquestionably as aviation develops there will eventually have to be a sufficient number; but if we have 48 States regulating aviation, the same situation in multiplied numbers would have to be met.

Mr. BYRNS. Is there any provision in the bill which fixes the number of inspectors or how often inspections shall be made?

Mr. LEA of California. Periodically; that is all. There is no specific time set for inspection, and there is no limit on the number of inspectors or provision as to how many there will be.

Mr. BYRNS. It seems to me there could not arise any particular necessity for a great many inspectors, because even though the inspector may be some distance away an airplane could get to him in a very short time.

Mr. LEA of California. Yes. It will not be the inspector who would chase up the airplane. An airplane will be prevented from operating without an inspection after a certain date.

Mr. BYRNS. What does the bill provide with reference to the cost of the inspection?

Mr. LEA of California. The cost is left to regulation by the Secretary of Commerce with the provision that the fees shall be reasonable.

Mr. BYRNS. Is it expected that the fees will meet the inspection or not?

Mr. LEA of California. It is not. It is not likely, at least during the near future, that the fees received from inspections will pay the cost of regulation.

Mr. BYRNS. How about licenses, plus inspection?

Mr. LEA of California. There are three certificates authorized to be issued. Those are the only certificates charged for—air worthiness, the certificate for airmen, and for air navigation facilities. A certificate is not compulsory for air navigation facilities.

Mr. BLANTON. May I propound one other question?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes, briefly.

Mr. BLANTON. I have in mind intrastate business wholly. There will be a certain amount of airplane business that is intrastate both in Texas and California. That being so, why should the Federal Government have anything to do with that business?

Mr. LEA of California. Because whenever an airplane in Texas, for instance, rises from the ground and enters the air it is in the national air highway. The air of this country is an interstate highway for airplanes, so that an airplane in Texas that enters into the air is in interstate commerce and is in a national highway. It should conform to interstate traffic rules. The State of Florida has passed an air navigation act providing for fees and regulations somewhat similar to this bill.

It also contains a provision that when the United States adopts an air navigation law the law of Florida shall be thereby repealed. They appreciate the advantage of having a uniform system in the United States instead of requiring men to fly under harassing regulations of 48 different States. A man who rises in a State and flies over a State should be subject to the same traffic rules as a man who flies from State to State.

Mr. BLANTON. I will grant that on these national airways that should be law. I imagine there will be a national airway cutting across my State both ways, but in other parts of the State, 200 or 300 miles from that national airway, there will, no doubt, be a local air business that is wholly intrastate and wholly disconnected from this national airway; and that being so, why should the Federal Government control in any way?

Mr. LEA of California. Of course, there are two propositions; one is the law and the other is the wisdom of the legislation, outside of the constitutional question. I think that every practical reason is in favor of the assumption of the Federal power, so that every machine shall have a similar identification mark and be compelled to abide by the same traffic rules. The international convention which has been signed by 12 nations provides for exactly the same traffic rules and the same identification for 12 nations of the earth, and we in the United States should not attempt to encourage a varied lot of identifications and traffic rules. We should encourage unity, which means economy and convenience of operations.

So far as we have the power under the Constitution, we have assumed it in this bill to give Federal regulation. If we have attempted to assume a power that the Constitution does not authorize, of course to that extent the States will retain their power. The States have the power, so far as it does not in fact interfere with interstate commerce.

Mr. BLANTON. But those of us in California and in Texas who are against this everlasting and eternal encroachment by the Federal Government upon the rights of the States, how are we going to reconcile this kind of measure with the views of our people at home when we let the Federal Government come in and tell them what they shall do with respect to every kind of airplane that is flown in a State on intrastate business?

Mr. LEA of California. Well, so far as I am concerned, I recognize the fundamental theory to which the gentleman is attached, but I think as a practical proposition the men who operate the airplanes will want this sort of regulation. They will want this sort of regulating power for their enterprise.

Mr. BLANTON. But there is only a small percentage of them.

Mr. LEA of California. The people will want it, too.

One important feature of the airplane is that it is already being used more or less in aid of the commission of crime. When injuries or damages result from the operation of airplanes or when crimes are committed by their use, the whole United States is interested in identifying those planes. Suppose we have 48 different systems of identification in the United States, what would identification amount to?

Under this bill the President it given power to make certain air reservations for military reasons or to conserve the public interest.

This bill has several provisions in reference to foreign aircraft. Foreign aircraft are not permitted to register under the provisions of this bill. Military aircraft from other nations are permitted to come here only with the consent of the Secretary of State. The civil aircraft of other nations are exempted and may come to the United States under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce, but only in case the nation from which they come grants reciprocal rights to the American aviators.

This bill prevents foreign aircraft from engaging in interstate commerce. This provision follows the rule in reference to water transportation. Only American ships can engage in the coastal trade of the United States or in interstate commerce.

The bill also provides for ports of entry for planes coming to the United States from foreign lands, so that the customs service, the Immigration Service, and the health authorities may have charge of entrances by airplanes the same as by ships or other means of transportation.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will my friend yield for one very brief question?

Mr. LEA of California. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Why does the bill locate a part of the authority with reference to foreign airplanes in the Secretary of State—that is to say, with reference to military airplanes—and a part of it in the Secretary of Commerce?

Mr. LEA of California. The Secretary of State is the representative of the United States in dealing with other nations. It was thought that power should rest with the official who traditionally represents the United States in matters concerning other nations.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Except to meet the traditions or to meet a mere theory, would it not be better to have all the power centered in one official?

Mr. LEA of California. Of course, military machines have to do with the political power, and diplomatic relations to other nations and the Secretary of State may more properly represent the United States as to such matters.

The Constitution of the United States does not specifically give Congress power over water transportation, yet under the decisions of the Supreme Court a steamboat can not navigate on waters inside of a State without an inspection and a certificate by the representative of the United States.

The air may be compared with water as a means of transportation. The vessels of the United States and the vessels of private citizens have the right to navigate the water although a private individual owns the land underneath the water. So the airplanes of the United States have the right, we believe, to navigate the air although underneath them is land owned by some private individual.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will my friend again permit an interruption?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. As I understand it, the gentleman is dealing with a question similar to the question that was dealt with in the early days of the Government when the Congress, sanctioned by the Supreme Court, determined there could be a regulation of navigable streams even though no interstate commerce ever, as a matter of fact, was carried upon the waters of such streams.

Mr. LEA of California. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The mere possibility that there might be was taken as a basis for regulation.

Mr. LEA of California. I was citing the authority established in those cases as authority to justify the assumption of power by this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And in that case the governmental agencies were dealing with navigable waterways.

Mr. LEA of California. They were.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Here the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and the Committee of the Whole are dealing with the matter of navigable airways.

Mr. LEA of California. Yes. In other words, suppose we concede private exclusive ownership from the center of the earth to the highest sky. Then, possibly, no airplane would have the right to cross any man's land without condemning such right to cross. This would be equivalent to saying that we shall have no aviation in the United States. If every individual can prohibit any plane from crossing over his land, the handicap to aviation would be insuperable.

The fundamental principle in reference to damages or even to condemnation suits is that the law does not take notice of trifles. When an airplane crosses over a man's land 1,000 feet or 5,000 feet or 10,000 feet above it, what injury is done? If the owner goes into court to recover damages for the injury from the trespass, his case would be thrown out of court, because he would be unable to show any injury. So whatever trespass might be claimed by the individual against the operator of an airplane crossing over the air would be a trifle of which the courts would not take recognition.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA of California. I will.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Does the gentleman concede that the man who owns the land owns the air to heaven?

Mr. LEA of California. He does, but it is subject to the right of transportation, as is the water over his land. It is impossible to take an archaic theory developed in the time of Blackstone, several hundred years ago, when they did not dream of airplanes, and say that such a theoretical principle is going to stop the progress of the world.

Mr. RAMSEYER. If that is the law, does the gentleman think it can be set aside or repealed by an act of Congress?

Mr. LEA of California. If individuals have a vested right, Congress can not deprive them of that vested right. The individual must show damages before he has any standing in court.

The provision quoted by the gentleman from Alabama as to the assertion and power over intrastate aviation is a paraphrase of the language of Judge Taft in a decision recently made by the Supreme Court. I quote Judge Taft:

Commerce is a unit and does not regard State lines, and while under the Constitution, interstate and intrastate commerce are ordinarily subject to regulation by different sovereignties, yet when they are so mingled together that the supreme authority, the Nation, can not exercise complete effective control over interstate commerce without incidental regulation of intrastate commerce, such incidental regulation is not an invasion of State authority.

Mr. BLAND. What was the character of the case from which the gentleman is quoting?

Mr. LEA of California. That was a railroad case involving the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution. Now, as to the practical question as to what would happen in the way of regulation by the States. Here is the aviation law of Florida. This is about such a law as any State of the Union undertaking to assume State regulation of airplanes would enact. It covers most subjects covered by this act. It provides for a fee of $100 for a certificate of air worthiness; $50 for a certificate for an airdrome; $25 for a certificate for the airman, and a fee of $100 for the license for the operation of an airplane.

There is a penal provision against the operation of an airplane in Florida without having this certificate. An exception is made of airplanes owned by the United States. One provision requires figures 3 feet high on the side of the machine. As a matter of fact many airplanes do not have fuselages large enough to accommodate the figures required by the State of Florida. If such provisions were required by every State in the United States could you imagine a greater handicap? Should we encourage 48 States to indulge in this sort of regulation? That is the practical question we must meet.

We believe in aviation and its future. It deserves the encouragement and support of the American people. I believe this bill is a helpful and a reasonable step toward the accomplishment of greater air navigation.

Mr. BLAND. How soon will the gentleman's committee bring in a bill that will take automobiles under the jurisdiction of the Federal Government?

Mr. LEA of California. We have no intention of bringing in such a bill, but if the gentleman from Virginia wishes to offer such a bill it will be considered.

Mr. BLAND. I think that the Department of Commerce would like to have jurisdiction over the automobiles of the country.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the bill and read the committee amendment instead.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no more debate, the Clerk will read the bill, and the gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the reading of the bill after the enacting clause be dispensed with and that the committee amendment be read in lieu thereof. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Does that mean that there will be no opportunity for amendment?

Mr. PARKER. No amendments may be offered after the reading of the amendment.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. And to any paragraph?

Mr. PARKER. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. This is to be read as one amendment, and at the end it will be subject to amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of Commerce to foster civil air navigation in accordance with the provisions of this act, and for such purpose—

"(a) To encourage the establishment of air ports and other air navigation facilities.

"(b) To make recommendations to the Secretary of Agriculture as to necessary meteorological service in connection with the maintenance of established airways.

"(c) To study the possibilities for the development of commercial air navigation and the aeronautical industry and trade in the United States and to collect and disseminate information relative thereto.

"(d) To advise with the Bureau of Standards and other agencies in the executive branch of the Government in carrying forward such research and development work as tends to create improved light or other signal structures, radio directional finding facilities, and other air-navigation facilities. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to transfer funds available for carrying out the purposes of this subdivision to any such agency for carrying forward such research and development work in cooperation with the Department of Commerce.

"(e) To investigate, record, and make public the causes of accidents in civil air navigation in the United States.

"(f) To exchange with foreign governments through existing governmental channels information pertaining to civil air navigation.

"SEC. 2. Regulatory powers: The Secretary of Commerce shall by regulation—

"(a) Provide for the registration of eligible aircraft. No aircraft shall be eligible for registration (1) unless it is a civil aircraft owned by a citizen of the United States and not registered under the laws of any foreign country, or (2) unless it is a public aircraft of the Federal Government or of a State, Territory, or possession, or of a political subdivision thereof. All aircraft registered under this subdivision shall be known as aircraft of the United States and shall be entitled to the benefits conferred and shall be subject to the duties imposed by law upon such aircraft. All public aircraft of the Federal Government shall be registered as aircraft of the United States.

"(b) Provide for the examination and rating (upon registration and periodically thereafter) of aircraft of the United States as to their airworthiness.

"(c) Provide for the periodic examination and rating of airmen serving in connection with aircraft of the United States as to their qualifications for such service. Such examinations shall be based upon the character, physical fitness, training, and practical experience of the airman.

"(d) Provide for the periodic examination and rating of air navigation facilities available for the use of aircraft of the United States as to their suitability for such use.

"(e) Establish air traffic rules for the navigation and protection of aircraft in the navigable air space or waters of the United States, including rules for taking off and alighting, signal rules for land and water structures, rules as to safe altitudes of flight, rules for identification and marking, rules for the maintenance of log books, and rules for the prevention of collisions between vessels and aircraft.

"(f) Provide for the periodic issuance and expiration and for the suspension and revocation of registration, aircraft, airman, and air navigation facility certificates, and such other certificates as the Secretary of Commerce deems necessary in administering the functions vested in him under this act. Within 20 days after notice that application for any certificate is denied or that a certificate is suspended or revoked, the applicant or holder may file a written request with the Secretary of Commerce for a public hearing thereon. The Secretary upon receipt of the request shall forthwith (1) arrange for a public hearing to be held within 20 days after such receipt in such place as the Secretary deems most practicable and convenient in view of the place of residence of the applicant or holder and the place where evidence bearing on the cause for the denial, suspension, or revocation is most readily obtainable, and (2) give the applicant or holder at least 10 days' notice of the hearing, unless an earlier hearing is consented to by him. Notice under this subdivision may be served personally upon the applicant or holder or sent him by registered mail. The Secretary, or any officer or employee of the Department of Commerce designated by him in writing for the purpose, may hold any such hearing and for the purposes thereof administer oaths, examine witnesses, and issue subpoenas for the attendance and testimony of witnesses, or the production of books, papers, documents, and other evidence, or the taking of depositions before any designated individual competent to administer oaths. Witnesses summoned or whose depositions are taken shall receive the same fees and mileage as witnesses in courts of the United States. All evidence taken at the hearing shall be recorded and forwarded to the Secretary for decision in the matter to be rendered not later than 10 days after completion of the hearing. The decision of the Secretary, if in accordance with law, shall be final. The denial, suspension, or revocation shall be invalid unless opportunity for hearing is afforded, notice served or sent, and decision rendered within the respective times prescribed by this subdivision.

"SEC. 3. EXEMPT AIRCRAFT: (a) The Secretary of Commerce shall exempt from the requirements of regulations made under section 2, except requirements as to registration or as to air traffic rules upon established airways: (1) Public aircraft of the United States and airmen serving solely in connection therewith, and air navigation facilities owned or operated by the United States or any governmental instrumentality thereof and used exclusively (except for emergency public use as provided in section 5) in the service of the Federal Government; and (2) aircraft navigated solely outside of established airways and used solely for experimental or scientific or signaling purposes, and air navigation facilities used solely for such purposes.

"(b) The Secretary of Commerce may exempt from the requirements of regulations made under section 2: (1) Anchored aircraft, aircraft navigated upon established airways and used solely for experimental or scientific or signaling purposes, or aircraft in the custody of any officer or employee of the United States in pursuance of an examination authorized by law or of a seizure for violation of law; and (2) air navigation facilities used solely for such aircraft and airmen serving solely in connection with such aircraft.

"SEC. 4. AIRSPACE RESERVATIONS: The President is authorized to provide by Executive order for the setting apart and the protection of airspace reservations in the United States for national defense or other governmental purposes and, in addition, in the District of Columbia for public safety purposes. The several States may set apart and provide for the protection of necessary airspace reservations in addition to and not in conflict either with airspace reservations established by the President under this section or with any airway designated by the Secretary of Commerce under subdivision (j) of section 10.

"SEC. 5. AIDS TO AIR NAVIGATIONS (a) Whenever at any time the Postmaster General and the Secretary of Commerce by joint order so direct, the established airways under the jurisdiction and control of the Postmaster General, together with all airports, emergency landing fields, and other air navigation facilities used in connection therewith, shall be transferred to the jurisdiction and control of the Secretary of Commerce. All unexpended balances of appropriations in respect of such established airways, airports, emergency landing fields, and other air navigation facilities shall thereupon be available for expenditure under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce, in lieu of the Postmaster General, for the purposes for which such appropriations were made.

"(b) The Secretary of Commerce is authorized, within the limits of available appropriations hereafter made by the Congress, (1) to establish, operate, and maintain along airways the following: Emergency landing fields, light and other signal structures, radio directional finding facilities, radio or other electrical communication facilities, and other necessary air navigation facilities; and (2) to chart such airways and arrange for publication of maps of such airways, utilizing the facilities and assistance of existing agencies of the Government so far as practicable. The Secretary of Commerce shall grant no exclusive right for the use of any airway, airport, emergency landing field, or other air navigation facility.

"(c) Air navigation facilities owned or operated by the United States may be made available for public use under such conditions and to such extent as the head of the department or other independent establishment having jurisdiction thereof deems advisable and may by regulation prescribe.

"(d) The head of any Government department or other independent establishment having jurisdiction over any airport owned or operated by the United States may provide for the sale to any aircraft alighting at the airport fuel, oil, equipment, and supplies, and the furnishing to it of mechanical service, temporary shelter, and other assistance under such regulations as the head of the department or establishment may prescribe, but only if such action is by reason of an emergency necessary to the continuance of such aircraft on its course to the nearest airport operated by private enterprise. All such articles shall be sold and such assistance furnished at the fair market value prevailing locally, as ascertained by the head of such department or establishment. All amounts received under this subdivision shall be covered into the Treasury; but that part of such amounts which, in the judgment of the head of the department or establishment, is equivalent to the cost of the fuel, oil, equipment, supplies, services, shelter, or other assistance so sold or furnished shall be credited to the appropriation from which such cost was paid, and the balance, if any, shall be credited to miscellaneous receipts.

"(e) Section 3 of the act entitled "An act to increase the efficiency and reduce the expense of the Signal Corps of the Army, and to transfer the Weather Service to the Department of Agriculture," approved October 1, 1899, is amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"Within the limits of the appropriations which may be made for such purpose, it shall be the duty of the Chief of the Weather Bureau, under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture, (a) to furnish such weather reports, forecasts, warnings, and advices as may be required to promote the safety and efficiency of air navigation in the United States and above the high seas, particularly upon established airways designated by the Secretary of Commerce under authority of law as routes suitable for air navigation, and (b) for such purposes to observe, measure, and investigate atmospheric phenomena and establish meteorological offices and stations.

"SEC. 6. FOREIGN AIRCRAFT: The Congress hereby declares that the Government of the United States has, to the exclusion of all foreign nations, complete sovereignty over the air space above the lands and waters of the United States, including the Canal Zone. Aircraft a part of the armed forces of any foreign nation, including other aircraft in command of an individual who is a member of such forces, shall not be navigated in the United States, except in accordance with an authorization granted by the Secretary of State. The Secretary of Commerce may by regulation exempt from the requirements of section 2 aircraft that are registered under the law of any foreign nation and that are not a part of the armed forces of such nation, if such nation grants a similar exemption in respect of aircraft of the United States, but such foreign aircraft shall not engage in interstate commerce in the navigable air space or waters of the United States. The President may employ the military or naval forces of the United States to exclude or expel from the United States aircraft of any foreign country entering the United States otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of this section.

"SEC. 7. APPLICATION OF EXISTING LAWS RELATING TO FOREIGN COMMERCE: (a) The navigation and shipping laws of the United States, including any definition of 'vessel' or 'vehicle' found therein and including the rules for the prevention of collisions, shall not be construed to apply to seaplanes or other aircraft or to the navigation of vessels in relation to seaplanes or other aircraft.

"(b) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to (1) designate places in the United States as ports of entry for civil aircraft engaged in foreign commerce and for merchandise carried on such aircraft, (2) detail to ports of entry for civil aircraft such officers and employees of the customs service as he may deem necessary, and to confer or impose upon any officer or employee of the United States stationed at any such port of entry (with the consent of the head of the Government department or other independent establishment under whose jurisdiction the officer or employee is serving) any of the powers, privileges, or duties conferred or imposed upon officers or employees of the customs service, and (3) by regulation to provide for the application to civil air navigation of the laws and regulations relating to the administration of the customs and public health laws to such extent and upon such conditions as he deems necessary.

"(c) The Secretary of Commerce is authorized by regulation to provide for the application to civil aircraft of the laws and regulations relating to the entry and clearance of vessels to such extent and upon such conditions as he deems necessary.

"(d) The Secretary of Labor is authorized to (1) designate any of the ports of entry for civil aircraft as ports of entry for aliens arriving by aircraft, (2) detail to such ports of entry such officers and employees of the Immigration Service as he may deem necessary, and to confer or impose upon any employee of the United States stationed at such port of entry (with the consent of the head of the Government department or other independent establishment under whose jurisdiction the officer or employee is serving) any of the powers, privileges, or duties conferred or imposed upon officers or employees of the Immigration Service, and (3) by regulation to provide for the application to civil air navigation of the laws and regulations relating to the administration of the immigration laws to such extent and upon such conditions as he deems necessary.

"(e) Any person violating any customs or public-health regulation, entry or clearance regulation, or immigration regulation made under this section shall be subject to a penalty of $500, which may be remitted or mitigated by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce, or the Secretary of Labor, respectively, in accordance with such proceedings as the Secretary shall by regulation prescribe. In case the violation is by the owner or the person in command of the aircraft, the penalty shall be a lien against the aircraft. Such penalty may be collected by proceedings in personam against the person subject to the penalty and/or proceedings in rem against the aircraft. Such proceedings shall conform as nearly as may be to civil suits in admiralty, except that either party may demand trial by jury of any issue of fact, if the value in controversy exceeds $20, and facts so tried shall not be reexamined other than in accordance with the rules of the common law. The fact that in a libel in rem the seizure is made at a place not upon the high seas or navigable waters of the United States shall not be held in any way to limit the requirement of the conformity of the proceedings to civil suits in rem in admiralty. The Supreme Court of the United States, and under its direction other courts of the United States, are authorized to prescribe rules regulating such proceedings in any particular not provided by law. The determination under this section as to the remission or mitigation of a penalty imposed under this section shall be final. In case libel proceedings are pending at any time during the pendency of remission or mitigation proceedings, the Secretary shall give notice thereof to the United States attorney prosecuting the libel proceedings.

"(f) Any aircraft subject to lien for any penalty imposed for the violation of a customs, public health, entry, clearance, or immigration regulation made under this section, may be summarily seized by and placed in the custody of such persons as the appropriate Secretary may by regulations prescribe and a report of the case thereupon transmitted to the United States attorney for the judicial district in which the seizure is made. The United States attorney shall promptly institute proceedings for the enforcement of the lien or notify the Secretary of his failure so to act. The aircraft shall be released from such custody upon (1) payment of the penalty or so much thereof as is not remitted or mitigated; (2) seizure in pursuance of process of any court in proceedings in rem for enforcement of the lien, or notification by the United States attorney of failure to institute such proceedings; or (3) deposit of a bond in such amount and with such sureties as the Secretary may prescribe, conditioned upon the payment of the penalty or so much thereof as is not remitted or mitigated.

"SEC. 8. FEES: There shall be paid to the Secretary of Commerce prior to each issuance of a certificate by him under this act a reasonable fee in an amount to be fixed by the Secretary. All fees and penalties paid to the Secretary under this act shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"SEC. 9. ADDITIONAL ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF COMMERCE: To aid the Secretary of Commerce in fostering air navigation and to perform such functions vested in the Secretary under this act as the Secretary may designate there shall be an additional Assistant Secretary of Commerce, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and whose compensation shall be fixed in accordance with the classification act of 1923. Except as otherwise specifically provided, the Secretary of Commerce shall administer the provisions of this act, and for such purpose is authorized (1) to make such regulations as are necessary to execute the functions vested in him by this act; (2) to make such expenditures (including expenditures for personal services and rent at the seat of government and elsewhere and for law books, books of reference, and periodicals) as may be necessary for such administration and as may be provided for by the Congress from time to time; (3) to publish from time to time a bulletin setting forth such matters relating to the functions vested in him by this act as he deems advisable, including air navigation treaties, laws, and regulations and decisions thereunder; and (4) to operate, and for this purpose to purchase, within the limits of the available appropriations hereafter made by the Congress, such aircraft and air navigation facilities as are necessary for executing the functions vested in the Secretary of Commerce by this act.

"SEC. 10. DEFINITIONS: As used in this act—

"(a) The term 'citizen of the United States' means (1) an individual who is a citizen of the United States or its possessions, or (2) a partnership of which each member is an individual who is a citizen of the United States or its possessions, or (3) a corporation or association created or organized in the United States or under the law of the United States or of any State, Territory, or possession thereof, of which the president and three-fourths or more of the board of directors or other managing officers thereof, as the case may be, are individuals who are citizens of the United States or its possessions and in which at least 51 per cent of the voting interest is controlled by persons who are citizens of the United States or its possessions.

"(b) The term 'United States,' when used in a geographical sense means the territory comprising the several States, Territories, possessions, and the District of Columbia (including the territorial waters thereof), and the overlying air space; but shall not include the Canal Zone.

"(c) The term 'aircraft' means any contrivance now known or hereafter invented, used, or designed for navigation of or flight in the air, except a parachute or other contrivance designed for such navigation but used primarily as safety equipment.

"(d) The term 'public aircraft' means an aircraft used exclusively in the governmental service.

"(e) The term 'civil aircraft' means any aircraft other than a public aircraft.

"(f) The term 'aircraft of the United States' means any aircraft registered under this act.

"(g) The term 'airport' means any terminal landing field or other supporting surface (including structures fixed thereto or anchored or floating thereon) which is suitable for use for the landing and taking off of aircraft.

"(h) The term 'emergency landing field' means any landing field or other supporting surface (including structures fixed thereto or anchored or floating thereon) which is suitable for use both as a location for landing lights and other signal structures, radio or other electrical communication facilities, and other necessary air navigation facilities, and as an emergency landing place for aircraft navigating the airway.

"(i) The term 'air navigation facility' includes any airport, emergency landing field, light or other signal structure, radio directional finding facility, radio or other electrical communication facility, and any other structure or facility used as an aid to air navigation.

"(j) The term 'airway' means a route in the navigable air space designated by the Secretary of Commerce as a route suitable for air navigation.

"(k) The term 'established airway' means any airway along which there have been installed emergency landing fields, and light or other signal structures, or radio or other electrical communication facilities, or other air navigation facilities.

"(l) The term 'airman' means any individual (including the master and any pilot, mechanic, or member of the crew) who engages in the navigation of aircraft while under way, and any individual who is in charge of the inspection, overhauling, or repairing of aircraft.

"SEC. 11. NAVIGABLE AIRSPACE: As used in this act, the term 'navigable air space' means air space above the minimum safe altitudes of flight prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce under section 2, and such navigable airspace shall be subject to a public right of freedom of interstate and foreign air navigation in conformity with the requirements of this act.

"SEC. 12. ADVISORY COMMITTEE FOR AERONAUTICS: The membership of the Advisory Committee for Aeronautics is increased from 12 to 15 members, to be appointed by the President. Of the additional members, one shall be a representative of the office of the Assistant Secretary of Commerce in charge of civil air navigation, one of the office of the Assistant Postmaster General in charge of the air mail service, and one of the Coast Guard.

"SEC. 13. PENALTIES: (a) It shall be unlawful, except to the extent exempt under section 3 or 6 of this act—(1) to navigate any aircraft in the navigable air space or waters of the United States otherwise than in conformity with the air-traffic rules and with Executive orders regulating air space reservations; (2) to navigate any aircraft in such navigable air space or waters, unless such aircraft is registered as an aircraft of the United States and has an aircraft certificate; (3) to serve as an airman in connection with any aircraft of the United States without an airman certificate; or (4) to maintain any land or water structure in violation of the air traffic rules. Any person willfully committing any offense in violation of this subdivision shall be punishable by a fine not exceeding $500 or by imprisonment not exceeding 90 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"(b) Any person (1) who, with intent to interfere with air navigation in the navigable air space or waters of the United States, exhibits within the United States any false light or signal at such place or in such manner that it is likely to be mistaken for a true light or signal required by regulation under this act or for a light or signal connected with an air port or other air navigation facility; or (2) who knowingly removes, extinguishes, or interferes with the operation of any such true light or signal; or (3) who without lawful authority knowingly exhibits any such true light or signal; or (4) who fraudulently forges, counterfeits, alters, or falsely makes any certificate authorized to be issued under this act, or knowingly uses or attempts to use any such fraudulent certificate, shall be guilty of an offense punishable by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"(c) The Congress hereby declares that the application of the provisions of this section to intrastate air navigation in the navigable air space is made necessary for the reason that air commerce is a unit and does not regard State lines and that interstate and intrastate air navigation are so mingled together that the United States can not exercise complete effective control and protection of air navigation in interstate and foreign commerce and prevent interference therewith without incidental regulation of intrastate air navigation in the navigable air space.

"(d) The Government of the United States hereby consents that the several States, and the Territories and possessions of the United States (and any political subdivision thereof in pursuance of the law of the State, Territory, or possession), may by law (1) provide for the prosecution of offenses that are punishable by the Federal Government under this section and that occur within their respective territorial jurisdiction or in the air space above such territory, and (2) prescribe penalties or forfeitures, civil or criminal, to be imposed for such offenses. The trial and acquittal, or the conviction, of any person under any such law for any such offense shall constitute a bar to the trial and conviction of such person by the Federal Government for such offense. Prosecution under this subdivision shall be in accordance with such practice and rules of evidence, pleadings, and forms and modes of proceedings as the State, Territory, or possession may prescribe.

"SEC. 14. SEPARABILITY: If any provision of this act is declared unconstitutional or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

"SEC. 15. TIME OF TAKING EFFECT: This act shall take effect upon its passage, except that no penalty shall be enforced for any violation thereof occurring within 90 days thereafter."

Mr. BLANTON (during the reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Is this whole amendment read as an amendment, or is it divisible?

The CHAIRMAN. It is one amendment, the committee amendment in substitution for everything following the enacting clause.

Mr. BLANTON. And all of it will be read by the Clerk at one time?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. If the provisions of this bill shall be enacted into law, I think it is fair to say that they will do more to establish aviation on a permanent basis in the United States than any other thing that has ever been done or proposed. Under existing law there is no regulation at all of the movement of airplanes in the air. All civil aviation is unregulated, except that in the Post Office Department, and that is only regulated by the Post Office Department itself without respect to any law. All the airways that have been built for air-navigation purposes have been built by the Post Office Department. There are about 2,500 miles of these and they were built because of a determination on the part of the post-office authorities that the best way to succeed in air mail transportation is to expedite the movement of the mail. In order to expedite the movement of the mail it is necessary to fly night and day. With distances less than 500 miles, or even more than 500 miles, where a train can leave a place at night and reach its destination in the morning, there is no advantage in the movement of the mail by air, because that is all that could be done by the airplane; but where the distance is a thousand miles or more and where the plane can travel night and day as the train does, then you can expedite the movement of the mail by air.

It is true that it has cost the Government a great deal more money to move mail by air than by train. The original cost by air was about $5.35 per ton-mile. That was finally reduced to about $2.40 per ton-mile and the hope is that as it becomes more perfect and planes can carry a larger load they will be able to reduce the cost to about 60 cents per ton-mile, which will be a great advance; but 60 cents per ton-mile compared with 9 cents per ton-mile by train is still a very large additional cost over train movement.

Commercial aviation is the only medium, in my judgment, through which this country will ever be placed on a successful permanent military aviation basis, because whatever you do for the military or the Navy, however much it may be, will never be enough to maintain factorles in which to construct airplanes for emergency purposes in time of war to the extent that the emergency will require. The only way in my judgment that that can be done is to encourage in every way possible by law the operation of commercial aviation concerns throughout the country. These commercial aviation concerns that are about to be established and many of which are already established are asking no subsidy from the Government. What they are asking is that the Post Office Department shall turn over the carrying of the mail by airplane to these commercial aviation corporations, and when the Post Office Department does that it will be surrendering what now is an opportunity for the Post Office Department to spend a large amount of money, and will be able to get the work done for which the Government is now spending that money without the expenditure of a cent except what it costs those who patronize the air in the transportation of their mail.

Contracts are let by the Government under this law to these commercial aviation companies to carry the mail by air for not to exceed four-fifths of the amount received in postage, so that nothing whatever comes out of the Treasury of the United States under that law for the payment of mail transported by air. What the Government will be called upon to pay for is the establishment of airways. That is, the Government will be building on the ground aids to navigation by air for commercial aviation similar to the guides to navigation at sea in the form of lighthouses and lightships. These will have to be maintained. We have 2,500 miles of these airways now. They have been constructed at the expense of the Post Office Department with appropriations made by Congress. They are being maintained by the Post Office Department. The Post Office appropriation bill for 1927 carries $450,000 to maintain airways. If this bill shall pass, that $450,000 of the Post Office appropriation will be transferred to the Department of Commerce and placed under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Commerce, and there will be added to that under this bill about $225,000 more for the maintenance of the airways already erected and for any airways that may be required to be erected during the coming fiscal year. So that the total cost under this act for the present will be about $225,000 more than the existing cost per annum.

What more? The Secretary of Commerce under this act will have power to license aviators. He will have power to cancel licenses for cause. He will have power to restore these licenses if restoration is justifiable. He will have power to inspect airplanes to be used by every civil company operating in the air. This inspection will in itself be a guaranty to safety of life in the air, because, after all, the one thing that we most need is surety for safety in the air. The Secretary of Commerce will be charged with the responsibility of seeing that no plane which is unfit to fly shall be commissioned to fly, and that will be a wonderful thing in itself. He will have the power, when recommended by the Postmaster General, to build new airways to meet the new air mail facilities that the Post Office Department says may be required throughout the country. He will have the power to establish fields. He will have the power to erect lights. In other words, he will have the power to regulate and see to it that all the airplanes operated by civil interests throughout the country shall be owned and operated by Americans. He will have the power to place in action a civil aviation system that will encourage the investment of money in aviation manufacturing enterprises that will give to America in the long run facilities through which, in case of war, America will be able to manufacture to meet the emergency needs of the country as she never has had, and as no country in the world might have if you carry out this work as it should be carried out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. MADDEN. My time is exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BYRNS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I think some legislation like this is very much needed. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Illinois this question, Whether under this bill the Secretary of Commerce will have the right to issue licenses and also make an inspection?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. He will have the right to do that, and I hope when he does fix the fees they will be moderate, so that they will not be a burden on anybody.

Mr. BYRNS. Will these inspections and these license fees be reasonable, and will they still be sufficient to enable him to cover the cost of administration?

Mr. MADDEN. I think it will be done without a burden on the industry. I hope it will be. And I hope the fees will be sufficient to meet the cost of operation.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman from Alabama, a member of the committee, although the debate on the pro forma amendment is not exhausted. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HUDDLESTON: Page 13, strike out line 8 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(a) Provide for the granting of registration to eligible aircraft if application for registration is made by the owner of the aircraft; but no aircraft shall be required to be registered."

Page 14, line 8, after "aircraft," insert "in interstate or foreign commerce."

Page 28, line 6, after "navigation," insert "in interstate or foreign commerce."

Page 29, line 9, after "aircraft," insert "in interstate or foreign commerce."

Page 29, line 12, after "aircraft," insert "in interstate or foreign commerce."

Page 29, line 19, after "subdivision," insert "or of subdivision (c)."

Page 30, strike out lines 15 to 24, inclusive, and page 31, line 1, strike out "(d)" and insert in lieu thereof "(c)."

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, have I the floor now?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama has the floor on his amendment.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. I understood the Chair said the debate was not exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. What the Chair said had reference to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that by this bill exclusive jurisdiction over aviation is asserted by the Federal Government, jurisdiction over both interstate and intrastate commerce.

The purpose of my amendment is to confine the jurisdiction which the Federal Government asserts to interstate and foreign commerce. I do not know how I could explain it more clearly than in just what I have said. It expresses my opposition to this assertion of comprehensive jurisdiction, which, in my opinion, renders the bill of doubtful constitutionality and certainly as bad from the standpoint of policy. I have offered this amendment for the purpose of correcting that vice.

It is necessary to make the numerous changes provided for by my amendment in order to cover the point. My changes constitute one amendment. If that amendment is adopted and the changes made which I propose, the jurisdiction granted to the Federal Government by this bill will be confined to interstate and foreign commerce, and there will be no assertion of jurisdiction over purely intrastate commerce.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. LEA of California. Does not the gentleman's amendment go further than that and provide that registration is at the option of the owner of the machine?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It leaves the situation exactly as is now provided in the bill, except as to intrastate commerce, which is eliminated entirely out of the picture. Anyone who wishes to avail himself of the privileges of this bill or to use the airways, landing places, or facilities provided, and anyone who undertakes to use aircraft for carrying on interstate or foreign commerce will be subject to all of the provisions of the bill. But the aviator engaged in a purely intrastate activity will not be obliged to get a Federal license to carry it on, nor will he be obliged to have his machine inspected or dealt with in any way. In other words, it holds the Federal Government within its own proper and constitutional jurisdiction.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HILL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the House this morning passed the naval aviation bill. There is pending before the House, and the House will doubtless pass it in the near future, the bill H. R. 1087, the Army aviation bill. This civil aviation bill now under consideration is the second of a series of three bills to take care of the air situation.

Beginning considerably over a year ago, there were held very exhaustive hearings on the air situation as presented by the bills for a separate air defense for the coordination of all national defense under one secretary of defense, with an under-secretary of air, and other suggestions for the air defense.

Now, this bill, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has so ably and comprehensively stated, is the basic fundamental bill for all air defense. I think the House is to be congratulated, after these many months of hearings on the air situation, on the fact that they have finally resulted in a definite program which will take care of aviation in time of peace for commerce, and aviation in time of war for defense.

I have been very much interested in this subject, and at first was inclined to oppose the suggestion of the Morrow Board that there be an Assistant Secretary of Commerce, an Assistant Secretary of War, and an Assistant Secretary of the Navy, whose duties should be primarily to engage in aviation, but after going over the matter fully I think it is quite obvious that these specialists in these departments will render very excellent service in the development of aviation. This particular bill, as I said, is the basis of the whole thing. Aviation must be treated primarily as a commercial thing and secondarily as a defense thing, although the defense is absolutely necessary.

I am very glad to see that there is included in this bill section 9 providing an additional Assistant Secretary of Commerce whose primary duty shall be aviation. I hope that before this House concludes its sessions there will be adopted a revision of the National Council of Defense, which will provide for a real and active council of defense which will be small and effective. And on the executive committee of that council of defense I hope there will be placed the Assistant Secretary of Commerce which the House will doubtless provide for in this bill.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the Huddleston amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama is an amendment in the second degree.

Mr. HOCH. I think a substitute for the amendment would be in order. I am offering it as a substitute for the Huddleston amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think that the substitute would be an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, there is permitted one amendment, an amendment to the amendment, and a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a generalization. The question is upon this particular amendment.

Mr. HOCH. The committee amendment is one amendment. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment to that amendment and the only question is whether this substitute is one in the third degree.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair finds the reference he had in his mind, which is in the Manual on page 356, reading as follows:

An amendment in the third degree is not specified by the rule and is not permissible even when the third degree is in the nature of a substitute for an amendment to a substitute.

Mr. HOCH. Then, Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Huddleston amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland did that. Mr. HOCH. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. That would also be amendment in the third degree. The gentleman will have to proceed by unanimous consent, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. HOCH. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss for a minute the question that is involved before the vote is taken upon the Huddleston amendment. The amendment I propose to offer seeks to strike a middle ground between the provisions of the bill and the suggestion made by the gentleman from Alabama. I confess that as a member of the committee I have been considerably perplexed over this question of the assumption of jurisdiction by the Federal Government over intrastate flights. The bill by one blanket provision wipes out, or attempts to wipe out, all intrastate regulation. Now, my amendment proposes to assert Federal regulation over intrastate traffic or flights only in cases where it may be shown that the intrastate flight, as a matter of fact, does impose a burden upon or interfere with interstate aviation.

As a proposition of law I agree entirely with the statement made by the gentleman from Alabama, that the only theory upon which we can impose Federal regulation on intrastate flights is that those intrastate flights impose a burden upon interstate flights. I know of no other theory upon which we can assume Federal jurisdiction. I will just read a part of the amendment I propose to offer as a substitute in place of the provision in the bill with reference to Federal jurisdiction:

Whenever interstate or foreign commerce by aircraft in the navigable air space or waters of the United States is rendered unsafe, or is unduly, unreasonably, or unjustly burdened by the regulation or absence of regulation of intrastate air navigation under the law of any State, then the Secretary of Commerce may by regulation prohibit such navigation by aircraft not registered as aircraft of the United States and/or extend the application of the air traffic rules to such air navigation, but only to such extent and so long as, after investigation and due notice and public hearing, the Secretary finds such prohibition or application necessary in order to make safe or remove the burdens upon interstate or foreign commerce by aircraft in the navigable air space or waters of the United States.

I may say that this attempts to set up a provision—which members of the committee are familiar with—analogue to the Shreveport doctrine with reference to transportation upon railroads. You will recall that in that case Federal jurisdiction was recognized only where it could be shown, as a matter of fact and reasonably, that there was by the intrastate regulation some burden imposed or some discrimination imposed upon the interstate business.

Now, I certainly do not assume to be at all wise about this proposition, but it seems to me we need not now go further than to set up clearly a regulation of interstate aviation. That, I believe, is necessary if we are to have a development of commercial aviation. But I think we might well leave it to time to show whether the States do seek to impose burdensome State regulation or whether the absence of regulation on the part of the States does, as a matter of fact, impose some burden or some discrimination upon or render unsafe interstate flights.

If it develops that there is any evidence of such burden or discrimination being imposed upon interstate traffic, then upon a proper hearing and a proper showing, as provided in my amendment, the Secretary may in that case have the power to extend Federal regulation in order to remove that burden or that discrimination.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman's amendment will not prevail, because it seems to me we are confounding two things. The gentleman from Kansas cited the Shreveport case, which was a case involving rates. All this bill does is to try to insure safety. It has nothing to do with rates. The Secretary of Commerce has nothing to do with the rates that shall be charged for transportation by planes. It is simply to promote the safety of the planes and the safety of air navigation. I think there is a very decided difference.

Mr. HOCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER. Yes.

Mr. HOCH. I do not, of course, refer to the Shreveport doctrine for the purpose of raising any question about rates, but the Shreveport doctrine—

Mr. PARKER. I did not yield for a statement but for a question. I did not intend to say that the gentleman did mean to say that, but still several people have referred to-day to railroad rates. Railroad rates and this matter have nothing to do with each other at all. One is a question of money and the other is a question of public safety, and I most certainly hope the amendment will not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HUDDLESTON) there were—ayes 16, noes 68.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first part of the amendment, down to the words "page 80," may be omitted in view of the fact that it is identical with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Kansas will be granted, and only the portion indicated will be read, but the entire amendment will be included in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOCH: Page 13, strike out line 8 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(a) Provide for the granting of registration to eligible aircraft if application for registration is made by the owner of the aircraft; but no aircraft shall be required to be registered."

Page 14, line 8, after "aircraft," insert "in interstate or foreign commerce."

Page 29, line 9, after "aircraft," insert "in interstate or foreign commerce."

Page 29, line 12, after "aircraft," insert "in interstate or foreign commerce."

Page 29, line 19, after "subdivision," insert "or of subdivision (c)."

Page 30, strike out lines 15 to 24, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(c) Whenever interstate or foreign commerce by aircraft in the navigable airspace or waters of the United States is rendered unsafe or is unduly, unreasonably, or unjustly burdened by the regulation or absence of regulation of intrastate air navigation under the law of any State, then the Secretary of Commerce may by regulation prohibit such navigation by aircraft not registered as aircraft of the United States and/or extend the application of the air-traffic rules to such air navigation, but only to such extent and so long as, after investigation and due notice and public hearing, the Secretary finds such prohibition or application necessary in order to make safe or remove the burdens upon interstate or foreign commerce by aircraft in the navigable airspace or waters of the United States."

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman, I shall detain the committee just a moment, because I think the issue is well understood.

I recognize the impracticability of leaving to the States alone the matter of regulation of air traffic, and I think we all recognize that if we are to have any commercial aviation development at all and any regulation thereof, the very nature of the thing requires there shall be very complete regulation on the part of the Federal Government in so far as interstate flights are concerned.

Referring just one moment to the Shreveport case, in view of the statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER], I was not referring, of course, to the Shreveport case for the purpose of injecting any question of rates. The Shreveport case, however, did raise clearly the question of the assumption of jurisdiction by the Federal Government over intrastate transportation, and I say there is an analogous situation here.

I am one of those who believe with reference to rail transportation that we have gone further than was necessary in assuming intrastate regulation. If we had stood by the Shreveport doctrine, that there shall be a showing of actual burden upon interstate business before we assume Federal jurisdiction, we would have a much better situation in this country than we have at present with reference to rates. Certainly the same question is here involved, and all I propose is that if there can be a showing that as a matter of fact there is some burden upon interstate flights, then the Secretary shall have power to assume jurisdiction over intrastate flights, and if there is no burden, then I do not know under what warrant of the Constitution we assume to legislate at all.

Mr. LEA of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. LEA of California. Does the gentleman's amendment go further than the Constitution itself goes with reference to the exercise of this power by the States?

Mr. HOCH. No; my amendment simply provides that you do not assume jurisdiction of intrastate flights until you have shown that there is a burden imposed upon interstate flights by the intrastate flights.

Mr. LEA of California. Would not the gentleman's amendment, if it became the law, cast a burden upon the Secretary of Commerce in addition to what the Constitution would require?

Mr. HOCH. No.

Mr. LEA of California. The Constitution takes care of its own protection.

Mr. HOCH. I will say, as a constitutional question, if you ever get into the courts on the question of assumption of jurisdiction over intrastate flights, the burden will be upon those seeking to uphold the law to show that there is a burden upon interstate business.

Mr. LEA of California. Then what is the use of the gentleman's amendment? Why not let the court construe the constitutional provision, instead of placing a particular burden on aviation.

Mr. HOCH. It seems to me that instead of saying that in all cases an intrastate flight is a burden upon interstate flights, we had better impose the burden of showing affirmatively that there is some such burden before we assume jurisdiction.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kansas enlighten the Chair? The Chair understood the gentleman to say he desired only the portion of his amendment relating to page 30 to be read, but the Chair understands the gentleman is offering the balance of the amendment.

Mr. HOCH. Yes; I am offering the whole thing; but in view of the fact the first part is identical with the Huddleston amendment and consists of merely textual changes, I thought it unnecessary to read the first part of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the understanding of the Chair. Mr. LEA of California. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. LEA of California. The Huddleston amendment contained a provision that no aircraft shall be required to be registered. Does the gentleman's amendment cover that part of the Huddleston amendment?

Mr. HOCH. I am not familiar with that particular part of the Huddleston amendment. I may say frankly, the amendment was prepared by the Legislative Drafting Bureau to carry out the idea I have here suggested.

Mr. LEA of California. The first paragraph of the Huddleston amendment provided that no aircraft shall be required to be registered. In other words, it would be just like the case of an automobile. A man owning the machine could go up and have it registered or not, and there would not be any identification mark or any way of holding him responsible for any violation of traffic rules.

Mr. HOCH. No; if he interferes with interstate flights, of course, he would have to be registered.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I hope that this amendment will not be adopted for the reason that the sponsor of the amendment is not sure of what it does. Without making any reflection on the gentleman from Kansas, the subcommittee gave this very careful consideration, and it seems to me that license without the Federal Government gives the whole thing away. I most earnestly hope that the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH].

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, line 5, after the word and figure "section 9," strike out the words "additional assistant," and in line 6 strike out all after "Commerce" down to the period in line 13.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment is to strike out "additional Secretary of Commerce." It is covered by striking out the words "additional assistant" in line 5, so that after section 9 it would read "Secretary of Commerce," and again after the period strike out the rest down to the figures "1923" in line 13. It simply eliminates the additional Secretary of Commerce. My reason is that I desire to bring to the attention of the House the constant growth of additional Secretaries of Commerce. It might be of interest to state that there is on the calendar of the House a bill H. R. 7245, reported from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, in which there is provision for two additional Secretaries of Commerce. Here is a bill with a third additional Secretary of Commerce. I want to submit to the House there seems to be no limit to the creation of additional Assistant Secretaries of Commerce. How far it is going or how far-reaching it will be I do not know, but I think it is about time that we knew how many new offices were going to be created.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. The duties of this Assistant Secretary will be confined to aircraft?

Mr. BLAND. Yes. My amendment seeks to eliminate the Assistant Secretary. We have another bill on the calendar that intends to eliminate the Shipping Board, and it will put more power in the Secretary of Commerce, and there will be no end to the Assistant Secretaries of Commerce, I suppose.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And if the expenses of the Department of Commerce grow in the same proportion that they have within the last five years, it will not be many years before that department will spend as much money as the whole Government spent in 1917.

Mr. BLAND. There is no doubt about that. We hear a good deal about reaching out and taking away the powers that belong to the States, deprecating that tendency; and yet, when the proposition comes down, they do reach out and take over the powers that belong to the States. In other words, I would like to see them practice what they preach.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the committee amendment and amendments thereto close in three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that all debate on the committee amendment and amendments thereto close in three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, the question raised by the gentleman from Virginia was given careful consideration by the committee. The committee thought it entirely probable that you could get a better man for the price if you gave him the title of assistant secretary than if you went out and in cold blood tried to hire the man for the money alone. That is the reason that we gave the extra title of "Assistant Secretary of Commerce" to have control of aviation. I believe the reason is a good one.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. Is the gentleman quite sure that the Assistant Secretary will not get somebody under him to act for him and perform the duties that he would perform if he was made the inspector and placed under the Secretary?

Mr. PARKER. We can do it this way or have a separate bureau, but it seemed to the committee that this was a much cheaper way than to have a separate bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARNETT of Tennessee) there were 34 ayes and 66 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken and the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with an amendment with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to, and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CHINDBLOM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 41) to encourage and regulate the use of aircraft in commerce, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HUDDLESTON moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with instruction to that committee to report the same back forthwith with the following amendments:

Page 25, strike out lines 5 to 13.

Page 13, strike out line 8 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(a) Provide for the granting of registration to eligible aircraft if application for registration is made by the owner of the aircraft; but no aircraft shall be required to be registered."

Page 14, line 8, after "aircraft," insert "in interstate or foreign commerce."

Page 29, line 9, after "aircraft," insert "in interstate or foreign commerce."

Page 29, line 12, after "aircraft," insert "in interstate or foreign commerce."

Page 29, line 19, after "subdivision," insert "or of subdivision (c)."

Page 30, strike out lines 15 to 24, inclusive, and page 31, line 1, strike out "(d)" and insert in lieu thereof "(c)."

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this is a motion to amend an amendment which has already been adopted by the House.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that the point of order comes too late, the motion for the previous question having been made.

The SPEAKER. It does not come too late if the point of order is well taken.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, we have just adopted an amendment to the bill. This motion to recommit seeks to amend the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that the point of order of the gentleman from Illinois is well taken, that this is an effort to amend an adopted amendment, which is out of order under the rule. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 135, noes 18.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I object to the vote and make the point of order that there is no quorum present. We ought to have a record vote on these bills.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the vote may be put off until to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if I will not lose my rights I am perfectly willing to withdraw the point of order of no quorum in order to let this go over by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will protect the gentleman in his rights.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point temporarily for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the vote upon the passage of the bill may be delayed until to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk. Is there objection?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I think there is a special order set for to-morrow.

Mr. BLANTON. That would not interfere.

Mr. MAPES. I think it ought to be understood that the vote comes before the special order.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee objects.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I insist upon the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has counted, and it is clear that a quorum is not present. The question is on the passage of the bill. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 229, nays 80, answered "present" 1, not voting 121, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was ordered to be laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on each of the bills H. R. 3858 and H. R. 10860, which are on the tentative program, the debate be limited to one hour instead of two hours.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent, with regard to House bills 3858 and 10860, that the general debate be limited to one hour instead of two hours.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman wish to arrange for the control of the time?

Mr. PARKER. And half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] or by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] and the other half to be controlled by myself.

The SPEAKER. And that the time be controlled half by the gentleman from New York and half by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It is entirely satisfactory to me, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Texas desires to control the time.

Mr. RAYBURN. It would be entirely satisfactory to me if the gentleman from Alabama should have control of the time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. TILSON. I understand if unanimous consent is not granted, such a course would be taken. As I understand it, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] is in opposition to the bill.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to object, but I want to know what it is about. What is the subject of the legislation?

Mr. PARKER. For the information of the gentleman from Nebraska, I will say that one of the bills is the commercial attaché bill and the other is the lighthouse bill.

Mr. HOWARD. I am for the lighthouse but against the attaché.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

SUPPLEMENTAL REPORT ON H. R. 10356

Mr. WINTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file a supplemental report and resolution on the bill H. R. 10356, the subject matter being a letter from the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

ELECTION CASE OF SIROVICH V. PERLMAN

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Elections No 1 and ask that it be printed under the rule. It is the election case of Sirovich against Perlman.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Report of the Committee on Elections No. 1 on contested-election case of Sirovich v. Perlman, from the fourteenth congressional district of New York.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COLTON. I wanted to serve notice that I shall call up this resolution for consideration next Thursday after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there is a special order on Thursday. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] has obtained permission to address the House.

Mr. COLTON. Following that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah announces it is his purpose to call up the contested-election case mentioned on Thursday, following the address of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL].

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, indefinitely, on account of sickness in the family.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] moves that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 13, 1926, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. TILSON submitted the following tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for April 13, 1926, as reported to the floor leader by clerks of the several committees:

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

(10 a. m.)

Agricultural relief legislation.

COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

To provide for a council of national defense (H. R. 10985).

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

436. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926, for the Department of State, amounting to $92,068.03; also two drafts of proposed legislation affecting existing appropriations (H. Doc. No. 304); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

437. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriations for the United States Tariff Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926, in the amount of $5,000 (H. Doc. No. 305); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

438. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting deficiency estimates of appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the purchase of Indian supplies for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1924, and June 30, 1925, $68,550.16; also a draft of proposed legislation affecting an existing appropriation (H. Doc. No. 306); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

439. A letter from the governor of the Federal Reserve Board, transmitting its annual report to Congress covering operations during the year 1925, made in compliance with the provisions of section 10 of the Federal reserve act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

440. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the Chief of Engineers on preliminary examination of Galveston Channel, Tex. (H. Doc. No. 307); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

Fernald	Keyes	Reed, Pa.

Mr. PHIPPS. I desire to announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. MEANS], is detained from the Senate by reason of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

AMENDMENT OF TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit a conference report and I intend to ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous consent request of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection if it does not lead to discussion. If it does, I shall ask the Senator to withdraw it.

Mr. CUMMINS. It will not lead to discussion. The report is a unanimous one and I think everybody I know of who is interested in the matter agrees to the arrangement which has been made.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what the matter is? I understood he was going to bring up House bill 9398.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is a conference report on a bill which was introduced by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. It passed the Senate, and the House made an amendment by which it is required that before the money shall be paid by the Alien Property Custodian to the claimant he must have declared his intention to become a citizen.

Mr. BRUCE. That is a different matter from the one I had in mind.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read. The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1226) to amend the trading with the enemy act, having met after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment, so that the said House amendment shall read as follows:

"(3A) An individual who was at such time a citizen or subject of Germany, Austria, Hungary, or Austria-Hungary, or not a citizen or subject of any nation, State, or free city, and that the money or other property concerned was acquired by such individual while a bona fide resident of the United States, and that such individual, on January 1, 1926, and at the time of the return of the money or other property, shall be a bona fide resident of the United States; or

"(3B) Any individual who at such time was not a subject or citizen of Germany, Austria, Hungary, or Austria-Hungary, and who is now a citizen or subject of a neutral or allied country, or"; and the House agree to the same.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
WILLIAM H. KING,
WILLIAM E. BORAH.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES S. PARKER,
JOHN G. COOPER,
CLARENCE F. LEA.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CUMMINS. I move that the Senate agree to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

PETITIONS

Mr. CAMERON. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor the bodies of petitions signed by worthy citizens of Globe, Ariz., and vicinity, who present their views in regard to the educational bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona presents certain petitions which he asks to have printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. CURTIS. Are they long petitions?

Mr. CAMERON. No; they are brief.

Mr. CURTIS. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the petitions were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD without the names, as follows:

GLOBE, ARIZ., February 9, 1926.

Hon. RALPH CAMERON,
Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned members of the Hill Street Parent-Teachers' Association, respectfully request that you support the education bill, S. 291, introduced by Senator Curtis.

GLOBE, ARIZ., March 4, 1926.

Hon. RALPH H. CAMERON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We, the members of Gila District Council, Parent-Teachers' Association, respectfully petition that you support the education bill now before Congress for passage.

We, the members of Nottsgier Hill Parent-Teachers' Association, wish to support the education bill.

Mr. NORBECK, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7818) to amend section 304 of an act entitled "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in livestock, livestock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes," approved August 15, 1921, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 590) thereon.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. PHIPPS. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 10198) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 587) thereon. I desire at this time to state that I shall call up this bill for consideration at the earliest opportunity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

CONSOLIDATION OF RAILWAY PROPERTIES

Mr. CUMMINS. From the Committee on Interstate Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3840) to provide for the consolidation of carriers by railroad and the unification of railway properties within the United States, and I submit a report (No. 580) thereon. I ask that the bill be placed on the calendar and that the report be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar and, without objection, the request of the Senator from Iowa for printing the report in the RECORD is agreed to.

The report is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 580, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session]

Mr. CUMMINS, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, submitted the following report (to accompany S. 3840) to provide for the consolidation of carriers by railroad and the unification of railway properties within the United States:

The Committee on Interstate Commerce, having had under consideration the bill S. 3840, recommends to the Senate that it do pass. In order that there may be no possible misunderstanding with respect to the action of the committee upon the bill nor with respect to this report, it is deemed wise to submit a word of explanation. This bill, in substance and effect, was introduced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] on December 21, 1925, and numbered S. 1870. It was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. Hearings were ordered upon it and they were begun January 21, 1926, and continued on January 22, 23, 28, and February 5, 6, 10, 18, 19, 24, and 25, when the hearings were closed after accumulating a showing of 318 pages.

Thereafter the committee, in executive session, considered the bill during five or six separate meetings. Many amendments—some important, some unimportant—were offered in the committee and adopted. A vote was then had upon a motion to report the bill as amended favorably, and that motion was agreed to. Inasmuch as the bill involves a somewhat complicated and intricate subject, it was then agreed by unanimous consent that its author should take the bill as so amended and introduce a new bill, which should be his original bill, with the amendments that had been agreed to in the committee. This was simply for the purpose of presenting the action of the committee in a form easily understood. It was further unanimously agreed that the new bill, when so introduced, should be referred to the committee and that thereupon the author of the bill should be authorized to report it favorably without further action on the part of the committee.

This will explain why it is that the bill reported is S. 3840 instead of S. 1870, and will connect the hearings held upon S. 1870 with the bill now reported to the Senate.

It is thought desirable, in order to fix responsibility for this report, to say that while a very considerable majority of the committee voted to report the bill favorably and while the facts to which reference will be hereafter made are fully established in the hearings, the reasons or argument for its enactment into law have been prepared by its author and have not been specifically acted upon by other members of the committee.

Every charge made for transportation, or indeed for any other public service, is a burden upon industry. We must have, however, adequate and efficient transportation service; but manifestly, the charges for it ought to be the lowest charges that will maintain the service. The object of this bill is to secure the lowest railway rates that will maintain adequate and efficient railway service.

Before attempting to analyze or explain the several sections of the bill it seems wise to refer in a somewhat general way to the facts known to every inquiring person and fully shown in the record of the hearings which furnish the basis for the belief that the consolidation or unification of our railways into comparatively few systems is, in the highest degree, imperative if the people of the country are to enjoy the lowest railway rates that will maintain adequate and efficient service.

A brief survey of what may be called our "railway plant" and railway facilities will be of assistance. In the continental United States there are (using round numbers) 250,000 miles of single main-track railway. There are 40,000 miles of second, third, and fourth main tracks; 116,000 miles of terminal, switching, side, and passing tracks, aggregating 406,000 miles. There is the roadbed upon which these tracks rest; the bridges, culverts, and tunnels over which or through which they pass. There are 70,000 locomotive engines; 58,000 cars used in passenger trains, exclusive of sleeping, parlor, dining, and privately owned cars. There are 2,500,000 freight cars, not including freight cars owned by private enterprises. There are almost an infinite variety and number of station houses, roundhouses, machine shops, elevators, warehouses, and office and other buildings that can not be specifically enumerated but can easily be visualized. These tracks and their facilities constitute more than one-third—nearly one-half—of all the railway tracks and facilities of the whole world, and over these tracks and with these facilities there is moved every year more than half of the railway freight and almost one-half of the passenger traffic of the earth.

These interesting facts are mentioned mainly to suggest that the United States has many railway problems peculiar to itself, and that little valuable information can be secured by consulting the experience of other countries. These tracks and facilities are owned by about 1,500 and are operated by about 1,000 separate and independent railway companies. Of these companies about 190 (the number varying from year to year) are classified by the Interstate Commerce Commission as roads of Class I. This means a road whose annual gross operating revenue is $1,000,000 or more. These roads represent a single-track mileage of about 236,000 miles. The remaining mileage is distributed among the roads of Class II and Class III, with revenues less than $1,000,000 per year.

Another vital fact is that, upon the average, 80 per cent of all railway traffic is competitive in character; that is to say, the shipper or traveler has the choice of two or more railways either at the initial point or somewhere along the line of the freight movement or journey. The significance of this fact lies in the obvious conclusion that the rates for this competitive business must be the same, or substantially the same, from origin to destination.

The "net railway operating income" of a railway, under the rules of the Interstate Commerce Commission, is the amount which remains to the company from operation after paying the expenses of operation and maintenance; and, theoretically considered, that could be distributed by the company in the way of interest upon bonds or other obligations and dividends upon stock. The net railway operating income of all the railways in the United States was, in 1922, $769,411,093; in 1923, $974,917,715; in 1924, $987,123,417. (For 1925 the reports are not yet complete.) If all the railway properties were owned by a single corporation this net railway operating income for 1924 would have paid more than 5 per cent upon the value of these properties, as tentatively determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission in 1920, with the capital investments since that time added. This, it is believed, would closely approach a fair return.

When, however, we inquire with respect to the distribution of this aggregate net operating income, we come to the real question involved in the policy of consolidation. The evidence submitted to the committee shows beyond controversy that no considerable part of our railway mileage can be abandoned. On the other hand, it is not controverted that our railway companies will be compelled for many years to come to invest from seven hundred and fifty million to a billion dollars annually of new money—that is to say, funds not derived from operation—in order to enlarge and improve their properties to meet the constantly growing demands of commerce. There are but two methods that can be employed to secure this new money. One is to borrow it; the other is to issue and sell capital stock for it. To borrow it the company must have good credit and be able to convince the investor in its bonds that it can carry the interest and, at the maturity of the loan, pay the principle. To sell stock at anything like par the company must be able to show that from its operating revenues it can pay the cost of operation and maintenance, its fixed charges and a fair dividend upon its capital stock.

Bearing these things in mind, we are ready to inquire how the aggregate net railway operating incomes of 1922, 1923, and 1924 were distributed. It would prolong this report unduly to set forth the net railway operating income of each of the railway companies performing the service of transportation. For these details, reference must be made to the hearings. The following facts will be sufficient upon which to rest a conclusion.

First, it may be said that the 22,000 miles of Class II and Class III roads, as a whole, barely earned operating expenses, although there was moved a greater tonnage in each of these years than ever before. Specific illustrations of the situation will be confined to Class I roads, which carry about 96 per cent of our entire traffic.

Seventy railway companies of Class I, operating over 54,000 miles for the years 1922, 1923, and 1924, had an average net railway operating income of less than 3 per cent upon their property investment accounts. We use the property investment account because the Interstate Commerce Commission has not yet finished its valuation of all these properties. Twenty-one of these companies did not earn the cost of operation and maintenance. It is obvious that a railway company which earns less than the expense of operation and maintenance must very quickly cease operation, and it is equally obvious that a railway company which does not earn 3 per cent upon its value can not furnish adequate and efficient transportation for those who rely upon it for that service. A table showing the names, mileage, yearly net operating incomes for the three years mentioned is attached to this report. Thirty additional railways of Class I earned during these years an average net railway operating income of less than 4 per cent.

Without taking into account at the present moment the economies that may be secured through consolidation, it is submitted, as an inevitable conclusion, that if a process of wise consolidation is not soon entered upon and rapidly carried forward not less than 60,000 miles, and it may reach 80,000 miles, of our rail transportation system may be either abandoned or, at the best, will be rendering the most unsatisfactory and inefficient service.

These facts present the chief, though not the only, reason for the passage of this bill. Argument upon these conditions seems to be unnecessary. If the facts are fairly understood, consolidation in some form is a foregone conclusion.

While the continued and successful operation of all our railway lines is the principal reason for consolidation, it will be borne in mind that many students of the subject believe that great economies, both in operation and in maintenance, would be attained through intelligent and supervised consolidation. Unnecessary train service could be avoided, great overhead expenses could be eliminated, repairs upon equipment could be immensely reduced, and haulage of empty cars could be largely overcome. It has been estimated that with the service now being rendered there could be a saving of from $300,000,000 to $500,000,000 annually, all of which could be utilized in a reduction of freight and passenger rates.

It is hoped that this showing, drawn from the evidence submitted to the committee, will leave no doubt in any mind respecting the desirability of pursuing the policy of reasonable unification under the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and always with an eye single to the public interest. The committee has not had in mind increasing profits for the railway companies. Its attention has been directed solely to the highest efficiency in service and the lowest rates at which that service can be performed.

II

In order clearly to understand just what the present situation is, it is necessary to refer to the existing legislation upon this subject. In the transportation act, 1920, section (5) of the Interstate Commerce act was amended and paragraph (4), (5), and (6) of that amendment are as follows:

"(4) The commission shall as soon as practicable prepare and adopt a plan for the consolidation of the railway properties of the continental United States into a limited number of systems. In the division of such railways into such systems under such plan, competition shall be preserved as fully as possible, and wherever practicable the existing routes and channels of trade and commerce shall be maintained. Subject to the foregoing requirements, the several systems shall be so arranged that the cost of transportation as between competitive systems and as related to the values of the properties through which the service is rendered shall be the same, so far as practicable, so that these systems can employ uniform rates in the movement of competitive traffic and under efficient management earn substantially the same rate of return upon the value of their respective railway properties.

"(5) When the commission has agreed upon a tentative plan it shall give the same due publicity and upon reasonable notice, including notice to the governor of each State, shall hear all persons who may file or present objections thereto. The commission is authorized to prescribe a procedure for such hearings and to fix a time for bringing them to a close. After the hearings are at an end the commission shall adopt a plan for such consolidation and publish the same; but it may at any time thereafter, upon its own motion or upon application reopen the subject for such changes or modifications as in its judgment will promote the public interest. The consolidations herein provided for shall be in harmony with such plan.

"(6) It shall be lawful for two or more carriers by railroad subject to this act to consolidate their properties, or any part thereof, into one corporation for the ownership, management, and operation of the properties theretofore in separate ownership, management, and operation under the following conditions:

"(a) The proposed consolidation must be in harmony with and in furtherance of the complete plan of consolidation mentioned in paragraph (5) and must be approved by the commission.

"(b) The bonds, at par, of the corporation which is to become the owner of the consolidated properties, together with the outstanding capital stock, at par, of such corporation, shall not exceed the value of the consolidated properties as determined by the commission. The value of the properties sought to be consolidated shall be ascertained by the commission under section 19a of this act, and it shall be the duty of the commission to proceed immediately to the ascertainment of such value for the properties involved in a proposed consolidation upon the filing of the application for such consolidation.

"(c) Whenever two or more carriers propose a consolidation under this section, they shall present their application therefor to the commission, and thereupon the commission shall notify the governor of each State in which any part of the properties sought to be consolidated is situated and the carriers involved in the proposed consolidation of the time and place for a public hearing. If after such hearing the commission finds that the public interest will be promoted by the consolidation and that the conditions of this section have been or will be fulfilled, it may enter an order approving and authorizing such consolidation, with such modifications and upon such terms and conditions as it may prescribe, and thereupon such consolidation may be effected in accordance with such order, if all the carriers involved assent thereto, the law of any State or the decision or order of any State authority to the contrary notwithstanding."

The future policy of railway regulation, in so far as it relates to this subject, was set forth in paragraph (4). The procedure to accomplish that policy was set forth in paragraphs (5) and (6). In accordance with the provisions of these paragraphs, the Interstate Commerce Commission employed Prof. William Z. Ripley, of Harvard University, a distinguished economist, to prepare and present to the commission his view of the tentative plan mentioned in paragraph (5). He was engaged in this work about one year and then presented his plan to the commission. The commission then took up the matter and agreed upon a tentative plan which was published and, after giving the notice prescribed by the law, it entered upon the hearings preliminary to the adoption of the final plan. These hearings were carried on in every part of the country and were not finally concluded until some time in January or February, 1925. Since that time the commission has been engaged in the effort to agree upon a plan. It has been unable to do so largely, if not wholly, because its interpretation of the present law requires a consolidation into a single ownership of the railways which are to constitute any given system. It must be conceded that this view of the existing statute presents an insuperable obstacle in the practical procedure of consolidation. It has been compelled to resort to paragraph (2) of section (5) as the authority for whatever unifications have taken place. It is this unfortunate situation that led to the introduction of the bill now being reported; and with these preliminary observations touching the existing statute, the committee turns to the analysis of the bill now under consideration.

III

The first section of the present bill is to relieve the Interstate Commerce Commission of the duty imposed upon it in the way of the preparation of the plan of consolidation or unification for a period of five years and to substitute for a plan during that time a procedure for voluntary applications upon the part of railway companies for leave to consolidate, merge, or unify, to become effective only upon the order of the commission, which can only be entered when it is believed by the commission to be in the public interest. Paragraphs (4), (5), and (6) of section (5) of the present law are amended so as to comprise paragraphs (1) to (29), inclusive.

Paragraph (1) declares a public policy and, inasmuch as everything which follows must be brought to the test of this policy, it is worth while to quote it, although it does not differ materially from the provisions of the existing law:

"(1) Inasmuch as the public interest requires that adequate transportation service shall be furnished by carriers to the public at the lowest rates consistent with such service and a fair return upon the value of the railway properties held for and used in such transportation, and inasmuch as the varied conditions under which such transportation occurs render it impossible to accomplish that end without the further consolidation of carriers and unification of railway properties, it is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress that a limited number of systems should be established by the consolidation of carriers or the unification of railway properties within the continental United States that will, so far as practicable, maintain the existing routes and channels of trade and commerce and preserve as between themselves evenly balanced and effective competition equalizing, so far as practicable, the opportunities of originating traffic and of its interchange and delivery. Such systems shall be arranged, so far as practicable, that they can employ uniform rates in the movement of competitive traffic and under efficient management earn substantially the same rate of return upon the value of their respective railway properties."

Paragraph (2) provides that it shall be lawful for one or more carriers to make application to the commission for its approval of a consolidation, including a merger, or for the unification of railway properties by the acquisition, through purchase, exchange, lease, or otherwise, of another railway or other railways, or for the unification of control by the acquisition, through purchase, exchange, lease, or otherwise, of securities issued by any other carrier. It may be observed that these provisions cover not only the consolidation contemplated in paragraph (4) of the present law but also the unification of control provided for in paragraph (2) of section (5).

Paragraph (3) specifies certain requirements which must be contained in the application.

Paragraph (4) specifies additional information that must be presented to the commission with the application.

Paragraph (5) refers to the notice and hearing that must be given by the commission upon the application.

Paragraph (6) should be particularly noted. It provides that if, after the hearing, the commission finds that paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) have been complied with and "that the public interest will be promoted by the proposed consolidation or unification" and "that the proposed consolidation or unification is in harmony with and in furtherance of the policy declared in this section, the commission shall enter an order approving and authorizing the consolidation or unification on the terms and conditions and by the methods set forth in the application, or with such modifications thereof, or upon such terms, conditions, and methods as it may prescribe."

Paragraph (7) permits any carrier not included within the original proposal to file a petition of intervention and be made a party to the proceeding. This is to enable any carrier which believes it ought to be included in the consolidation or unification proposed to present its case to the commission, so that its rights may be examined and the fundamental policy preserved and carried into effect.

Paragraph (8) provides that before the order of approval shall become effective the board of directors and the holders of the voting securities of the several carriers affected shall have given their consent to the order.

Paragraph (9) prescribes that consent must be given by a majority of the directors and a majority, in amount, of the voting securities.

Paragraphs (10), (11), (12), (13), and (14) define the effect of any order of approval respecting the properties and liabilities involved in the consolidation, merger, or unification.

Paragraph (15) applies provisions of the existing law to conditions which may exist under any order approving a consolidation, merger, or unification under this bill.

Paragraph (16) provides that any holder of any securities who did not consent to the order of the commission may, within 90 days after the meeting was held, notify the carrier of his dissent.

Paragraph (17) provides that the voting securities held by any non-assenting security holder shall be purchased by the carrier or the corporation which is to manage, operate, or control the property and that if it is not purchased within 90 days that the carrier or corporation must begin condemnation proceedings for the acquisition of such securities; and if the carrier or corporation does not begin such proceedings within 90 days, the nonassenting holder may institute them. This paragraph, and another which will be mentioned later, gives absolute protection to the holder of any security who does not assent to the consolidation, merger, or unification, and it may be remarked here that paragraph (c) of paragraph (29) defines the term "securities," as follows:

"(c) The term 'securities' includes shares, bonds, or other evidence of interest or indebtedness issued by a carrier."

Paragraph (18) is an exemption from taxation of the processes employed in bringing about a consolidation or unification if it is in pursuance of a consolidation or unification approved by the commission. It also provides that "gain from the sale or other disposition of property or income from any distribution, in connection with any such consolidation or unification, shall not be subject to tax by or under the authority of any State or any political subdivision thereof," and further, "Any such consolidation or unification shall be held to be a reorganization within the meaning of that term as used in part (1) of Title II of the revenue act of 1926."

IV

Having dealt with the proceedings for consolidation or unification which follow an application by one or more carriers, we now reach another phase of the subject. It is hoped, and confidently believed, that within five years after the passage of the proposed act there will occur many consolidations or unifications, all of them as prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission and in harmony with and in furtherance of the policy declared in paragraph (1). But it may well be that at the end of this period the work will not be complete, and so paragraph (19) provides that if, at the end of five years from the passage of this bill, the limited number of systems to be established in accordance with the policy set forth in paragraph (1) have not, in the opinion of the commission, been adequately provided for in its orders, the commission shall, as soon as practicable, prepare and by order, entered after notice and public hearing, adopt and publish a plan for the completion of such limited number of systems, either by the establishment of additional systems or by the allocation to any existing system of any carrier or properties not included in any such approved consolidation or unification.

Paragraph (20) restates the policy to be observed in adopting the plan in precisely the same language employed in paragraph (1) applicable to consolidations or unifications upon applications by the carriers.

Paragraph (21) recognizes that there may be terminal properties or outside lines which ought to be omitted from any established system, and discretion is given to the commission in that regard.

Paragraph (22) prohibits, after the five-year period has expired and the plan has been adopted and promulgated, consolidation or unification unless in accordance with the plan.

Paragraph (23) contains the necessary provisions for enabling the carrier which is to operate the system to acquire the ownership or the control of the railway property or properties which have not been theretofore brought into the system, and, to this end, condemnation proceedings are authorized. Paragraphs (24), (25), (26), and (27) are continuations of this subject.

Paragraph (28) deserves particular mention. Attention has already been called to the fact that from 1921 to 1925 the commission was engaged in holding hearings throughout the country upon a tentative plan for consolidations provided for in the existing law and also in hearings upon applications under paragraph (2) of section (5). In the course of these hearings the commission accumulated an immense volume of testimony, and this evidence, with the maps and tables which accompanied it, furnish the most complete information ever gathered together respecting the railways of the United States and the service they render. It is very desirable that this repository of information be at the command of the commission in the work it is authorized to do under this bill. It is, therefore, provided in paragraph (28) that "Any of the evidence included in the records of the commission in its proceedings under paragraph (2), (4), or (5) of this section, as in force prior to the passage of the railway consolidation act of 1926, and any abstract or written materials made by the commission and based upon such evidence shall be available to and may be used by the commission in its proceedings upon an application made under this section after the passage of this act or in adopting the plan provided for in paragraph (19); but any such evidence, abstract, or materials so used shall, by reference or otherwise, be made a part of its record in such proceedings."

Paragraph (29) is a paragraph of definitions and needs no explanation.

V

Section (2) of the bill consists mainly of paragraphs of readjustment in order that this bill may connect properly with the existing law and repeals paragraphs (2) and (3) of section (5) of the interstate commerce act concerning which an explanation has already been made.

VI

Section (3) of the bill rewrites paragraphs (6), (7), and (8) of section 15a of the interstate commerce act as amended. These paragraphs are commonly known as the "recapture" provisions of the existing law. The substantial changes

(a) The test of excess earnings is the average of the three immediately preceding years instead of year by year.

(b) Instead of using the fund accumulated by the Government from such excess earnings for the purpose of loaning to carriers, it is in this bill provided that the sums paid in shall be distributed by the commission among the carriers which have failed during the preceding calendar year to earn a net operating income of 5 per cent in amounts proportionate, as nearly as may be, to the amounts by which each carrier has so failed.

(c) After the plan provided for in paragraph (19) shall have been adopted the amounts paid in as excess earnings, collected from the roads within any system, are to be distributed only to the roads within that system.

The committee fully appreciates the complexity of the proposed legislation, but it begs to remind the Members of the Senate that it is complex only because the subject itself is complicated, and it presents its recommendation and report expressing the hope that Senators will be able to give this measure the study which its importance demands.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

AGRICULTURAL COOPERATION

Mr. McNARY. From the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 7893) to create a division of cooperative marketing in the Department of Agriculture; to provide for the acquisition and dissemination of information pertaining to cooperation; to promote the knowledge of cooperative principles and practices; to provide for calling advisers to counsel with the Secretary of Agriculture on cooperative activities; to authorize cooperative associations to acquire, interpret, and disseminate crop and market information, and for other purposes.

The bill which I report favorably was introduced in the House by Mr. HAUGEN, and I introduced a similar bill in the Senate in the month of January. It has the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture. It merely extends the activities of the Department of Agriculture in the matter of promoting cooperative organizations. An amendment was adopted by the Senate committee this morning as a part of this proposed legislation treating with the general subject of the disposition of agricultural surpluses. At this time, in behalf of the committee, I make merely a verbal report and ask unanimous consent that I may have 10 days in which to file a written report upon the bill and the amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, leave is granted. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN ARKANSAS

Mr. CARAWAY. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 3932) to amend section 71 of the Judicial Code as amended, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered at the present time, there being a necessity for its early passage. It merely affects the judicial districts in Arkansas.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 71 of the Judicial Code, as amended, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 71. (a) The State of Arkansas is divided into two districts, to be known as the western and eastern districts of Arkansas.

"(b) The western district shall include four divisions constituted as follows: The Texarkana division, which shall include the territory embraced on July 1, 1920, in the counties of Sevier, Howard, Little River, Pike, Hempstead, Miller, Lafayette, and Nevada; the El Dorado division, which shall include the territory embraced on such date in the counties of Columbia, Ouachita, Union, Ashley, Bradley, and Calhoun; the Fort Smith division, which shall include the territory embraced on such date in the counties of Polk, Scott, Logan, Sebastian, Franklin, Crawford, Washington, Benton, and Johnson; the Harrison division, which shall include the territory embraced on such date in the counties of Baxter, Boone, Carroll, Madison, Marion, Newton, and Searcy.

"(c) Terms of the district court for the Texarkana division shall be held at Texarkana on the second Mondays in May and November; for the El Dorado division, at El Dorado on the fourth Mondays in January and June; for the Fort Smith division, at Fort Smith on the second Mondays in January and June; and for the Harrison division, at Harrison on the second Mondays in April and October.

"(d) The clerk of the court for the western district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Texarkana, Fort Smith, El Dorado, and Harrison. Such offices shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court.

"(e) The eastern district shall include four divisions constituted as follows: The eastern division, which shall include the territory embraced on July 1, 1920, in the counties of Desha, Lee, Phillips, St. Francis, Cross, Monroe, and Woodruff; the northern division, which shall include the territory embraced on such date in the counties of Independence, Cleburne, Stone, Izard, Sharp, and Jackson; the Jonesboro division, which shall include the territory embraced on such date in the counties of Crittenden, Clay, Craighead, Greene, Mississippi, Poinsett, Fulton, Randolph, and Lawrence; and the western division, which shall include the territory embraced on such date in the counties of Arkansas, Chicot, Clark, Cleveland, Conway, Dallas, Drew, Faulkner, Garland, Grant, Hot Springs, Jefferson, Lincoln, Lonoke, Montgomery, Perry, Pope, Prairie, Pulaski, Saline, Van Buren, White, and Yell.

"(f) Terms of the district court for the eastern division shall be held at Helena on the second Monday in March and the first Monday in October; for the northern division, at Batesville on the fourth Monday in May and the second Monday in December; for the Jonesboro division, at Jonesboro on the first Monday in May and the fourth Monday in November; and for the western division, at Little Rock on the first Monday in April and the third Monday in October.

"(g) The clerk of the court for the eastern district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Helena, Batesville, Jonesboro, and Little Rock. Such offices shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court."

SEC. 2. The following acts are hereby repealed:

(a) The act entitled "An act to fix the time for the holding the term of the district court in the Jonesboro division of the eastern district of Arkansas," approved September 8, 1914; and

(b) The act entitled "An act to transfer certain counties in the several judicial districts in the State of Arkansas," approved March 4, 1915.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BROUSSARD:

A bill (S. 3966) to extend the provisions of the United States employees' compensation act of September 7, 1916, as amended, to Andrew D. Ramelli; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 3967) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River approximately midway between the city of Owensboro, Ky., and Rockport, Ind.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BORAH:

A bill (S. 3968) to provide for the regulation of radio communication, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. ERNST:

A bill (S. 3969) granting a pension to America Parker (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3970) granting an increase of pension to Murcy Kelly (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3971) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Phillips (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RANDELL:

A bill (S. 3972) authorizing an appropriation for the construction and equipment of a light vessel for The Passes at the entrances to the Mississippi River, La.; to the Committee on Commerce.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

H. R. 9690. An act to authorize the construction and procurement of aircraft and aircraft equipment in the Navy and Marine Corps, and to adjust and define the status of the operating personnel in connection therewith, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

HEIGHT OF BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT

Mr. BRUCE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9398) to amend an act regulating the height of buildings in the District of Columbia, approved June 1, 1910, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

GEORGE WASHINGTON-WAKEFIELD MEMORIAL BRIDGE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8908) granting the consent of Congress to George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge, a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Potomac River, asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appointing conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, agree to the request of the House of Representatives for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. COUZENS, Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. SHEPPARD conferees on the part of the Senate.

INDIANS OF THE FORT PECK AND BLACKFEET RESERVATIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1550) to appropriate certain tribal funds for the benefit of the Indians of the Fort Peck and Blackfeet Reservations, which was, on page 1, line 10, to strike out all after the word "Interior" down to and including the word "discretion," in line 11, and insert "in accordance with existing law."

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Montana.

The motion was agreed to.

PRODUCTION OF SULPHUR UPON THE PUBLIC DOMAIN

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3186) to promote the production of sulphur upon the public domain, which were, on page 3, after line 20, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 6. That the provisions of this act shall apply only to the State of Louisiana.

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act to promote the production of sulphur upon the public domain within the State of Louisiana."

Mr. RANDELL. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

On April 9, 1926:

S. J. Res. 58. Joint resolution authorizing the Librarian of Congress to return to Solomon's Lodge, No. 1, Free and Accepted Masons, of Georgia, the minute book of the Savannah (Ga.) Masonic Lodge.

On April 13:

S. 2530. An act authorizing the use of the funds of any tribe of Indians for payments of insurance premiums for protection of the property of the tribe against fire, theft, tornado, and hail;

S. 3108. An act to amend section 2 of the act of June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. L. p. 653), as amended by the act of March 3, 1925 (43 Stat. L. p. 1127), entitled "An act to provide for the protection of forest lands, for the reforestation of denuded areas, for the extension of national forests, and for other purposes, in order to promote the continuous production of timber on lands chiefly suitable therefor";

S. J. Res. 37. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with Territories and other possessions of the United States under the provisions of sections 3, 4, and 5 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the protection of forest lands, for the reforestation of denuded areas, for the extension of national forests, and for other purposes, in order to promote the continuous production of timber on lands chiefly suitable therefor"; and

S. J. Res. 78. Joint resolution for the amendment of the plant quarantine act of August 20, 1912, to allow the State to quarantine against the shipment therein or through of plants, plant products, and other articles found to be diseased or infested when not covered by a quarantine established by the Secretary of Agriculture, and for other purposes.

CUBAN SUGAR

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to take a moment of the time of the Senate to read a special cable dispatch from Habana and then to say a few words with reference to it. The cable dispatch reads as follows:

An appeal to the United States to help Cuba out of its present economic crisis by lightening the tariff on sugar was made to the correspondent to-day by President Machado.

A reduction, President Machado believes, which hardly would be felt by the American producers and would benefit the consumers, would prove to be one of the greatest factors in bringing about a closer friendship not only between Cuba and the United States, but between the United States and all Latin America.

Although the banking situation is regarded in many circles as serious unless an amelioration occurs in sugar prices, President Machado expressed the utmost confidence that no extreme measures would be necessary.

I want also to call the attention of the Senate to a statement which was made by the refiners, referring to their annual statement, from which we can see if there would be any relief given to Cuba as long as the refiners control the price of sugar in Cuba. The statement is dated New York, March 18, 1926, and reads in part as follows:

Statements by the executives of the American Sugar Refining Co., largest of the refiners and distributors of Cuban sugar, cast a light on the reason behind such investments. They say their company made a profit of nearly $3,000,000 on its Cuban investments in the last year, and propose further to develop the Cuban properties.

In 1925 the company's own plantations produced 13 per cent of its raw-sugar requirements, and this percentage is to be increased. This was in a year of exceptionally low prices and a huge Cuban crop. Yet the company showed a profit of $4,000,000 in its refining department, with a total income for the year in excess of $7,000,000 after paying the American tariff requirements.

President Ogelvie, of the Cuba Cane Sugar Corporation, stated at the annual meeting of his stockholders that profits would be increased by $12,000,000 a year if they could get the American tariff removed, with corresponding profits from any reduction that might be obtained.

The American sugar refiners who control the Cuban crop are never going to allow, unless it becomes absolutely necessary, the price of cane to advance beyond just what they want it to be. In other words, they can make their profits in Cuba or they can make them at the refineries in New York. To-day there may be seen on the windows of many grocery stores a sign reading "Sugar, 5 cents a pound," and that is the retail price. I wonder if there is any other commodity produced in the United States that is so low in price, even lower than before the war. I know of none; and I want to say now that if it were not for the tariff on sugar to-day there would not be a single sugar concern in the United States but what would be in the hands of a receiver. And bear in mind the statement read by me is the statement to the stockholders of the refining company, that if it had not been for the tariff they would have made $12,000,000 more, and the consumer never would have gotten any relief if the tariff was reduced; but the sugar refiners, who control the situation, are the ones that would have obtained the benefit, as the president of the company says in this statement to the stockholders.

Mr. President, we all know what the trouble down in Cuba is. People there have been investing their money by tens of millions of dollars in buying land with the avowed purpose of controlling the sugar industry of the world—not of America alone, but of the world. Of course, the immense crop of sugar raised in European countries, in Java, and all over the world has prevented them from doing what they will ultimately do if they can—destroy the sugar industry in the United States. If that ever happens, God help the people, for what they will have to pay for their sugar when that shall have been accomplished no man can tell.

PRESS CLUB BUILDING

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] gave notice on Saturday last that he would ask to have considered this morning Order of Business No. 469, being the bill (H. R. 9398) to amend an act regulating the height of buildings in the District of Columbia, approved June 1, 1910. The bill, as Senators know, relates to the new Press Club building.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not make that request at this time. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] is ready to speak upon the Italian debt settlement bill, and I should like to have him proceed without further delay.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I referred to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and I hope the senior Senator from Utah will not object. The bill to which I refer merely involves granting to the Press Club permission to erect their building to a height of 140 feet. The bill has passed the House and has been pending here now for two weeks. The failure to pass the bill is interfering with their plans of financing and their building plans, and I think the matter should be disposed of, as we agreed the other day it should be.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator think the bill will lead to any discussion?

Mr. KING. It will probably lead to a debate of about 20 minutes.

Mr. SMOOT. I am informed that the bill will lead to discussion, and therefore I ask the Senator from New York not to press his request at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

INDEBTEDNESS OF ITALY TO THE UNITED STATES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, House bill 6773.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6773) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of Italy to the United States of America.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in what I have to say to-day about the Italian debt settlement much of it will be in reference to Premier Mussolini, and I hope to present some facts which may be of interest to the Senate. Let me say at the outset that in what I shall say to-day about the Italian debt settlement, I wish it distinctly understood that I have no criticism to make to the motives of the American Debt Commission. I concede at the very outset that they all acted in accordance with what they believed to be fair and just. I do not question their motives, either collectively or individually. But, Mr. President, I do question their judgment in making this settlement. I do not believe that they gave sufficient consideration to three elements of vital importance in any settlement.

First, I do not think they gave proper consideration to the instructions of the Congress.

In the next place, I do not think the commission gave sufficient consideration to the Italians' capacity to pay, as I shall hereafter point out more fully.

In the last place, I do not think that any settlement ought to have been made with Italy at this time because of the unstable condition of their Government.

I shall take up these three questions in order.

First. Mr. President, the obligations that we now hold of Italy's are for $1,648,000,000, bearing the interest rate of 5 per cent. Italy has paid nothing on this indebtedness, neither principal nor interest.

On February 9, 1922, the Congress passed an act establishing the commission containing this proviso:

That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to authorize or empower the commission to extend the time of maturity of any such bonds or other obligations due the United States of America by any foreign Government beyond June 15, 1947, or to fix the rate of interest at less than 4½ per cent per annum. (Acts of the 67th Cong., 2d sess., p. 363.)

It will be remembered that the commission ignored this provision and reported a settlement with Great Britain, by which the bonds were run for a period of 62 years and fixing the rate of interest at 3 per cent for the first 10 years and 3½ per cent thereafter, and this departure from the first instructions was approved by the Congress. (Acts of 67th Cong., 4th sess., p. 1325.)

It is true that in the act passed February 28, 1923, there are to be found these words:

And settlements with other governments indebted to the United States are hereby authorized to be made upon such terms as the commission, created by the act approved February 9, 1922, may believe to be just, subject to the approval of the Congress by act or joint resolution (p. 1326).

Showing what was intended by this just settlement provision in the act of February 28, 1923, the Republican platform in 1924 provided as follows:

We stand for settlements with all debtor countries similar in character with our debt agreement with Great Britain.

So that, Mr. President, when it is recalled that some financiers say that Great Britain paid us 80 per cent of her indebtedness, and that we settled with her on that basis, and others say that it was as little as 66½ per cent—and I believe that the latter figure is the true figure—when the Debt Commission comes along and arranges a settlement with Italy at about 28 per cent, it seems to me that it is not in accordance with the directions of the Congress expressed by law nor in accordance with the spirit of the "just settlement act" as understood not only by our Republican friends in convention but as understood by the American people.

ITALY

Mr. President, Italy is a great nation. Some 2,000 years ago she was the ruler of the world. She is rich in historic interest, rich in a past and gone civilization, but for hundreds of years she has been torn with internal dissension and external invasion. From time immemorial she has been the prey of Germany and of Austria and of France. Her people have so long been used to tyrannical rule that they hardly know any other kind. Sometimes a spirit of freedom has arisen, but it has been short-lived and Italy has relapsed into autocratic government. For nearly a hundred years she has, indeed, had a constitution and a Parliament, but her people have not been permitted to take any part in her government. Perhaps, under her present King, so long as he had any power, the Italian people enjoyed their greatest measure of liberty in nearly 2,000 years.

Mr. President, I have no word of criticism for the Italian people. They are a great people. Under the circumstances, perhaps, it is a remarkable thing that they have done as well as they have. I would not for the world be harsh in any settlement toward them. If I thought that this settlement would inure to the benefit of the people of Italy, I might vote to confirm it. Nay, I would go further than that, Mr. President. If it were to appear that the Government of Italy vouchsafed to her people any real measure of liberty, if it guaranteed the rights of freedom of property, if it enabled the people to be governed by representatives of their own choosing, I might be willing to cancel the indebtedness entirely.

Those Italians who have come over here and made their homes have, for the most part, become splendid citizens—some of them leading citizens—the great part of them industrious, honest, frugal, and successful citizens. In the city where I live, and in the other cities of my State, we have no better people than the citizens of Italian birth and lineage, and I would dislike to be considered ungenerous to them or to their native land.

But, Mr. President, we must be just before we are generous. We represent American constituents in this body, and, when we say American constituents, I mean naturalized American citizens as well as all other constituents, and we must see that their rights are protected before we undertake to give their money to other governments.

WHAT THE ITALIAN DEBT SETTLEMENT MEANS

Mr. President, the settlement with Italy reported by our debt commission is a very ingenious piece of work. It is misleading to the nth degree. The Italian commissioners certainly proved themselves very able and adroit, and I think, with every respect toward our members of the commission, that they were out-traded in every point in the game.

In explanation of this remarkable proposed settlement, in its report to the House the commission said:

The commission has always insisted that the full amount of the principal owed by all the debtor nations should be paid in full, and if any reduction was to be made on account of economic conditions and inability to pay, this reduction should be reflected in the interest rates.

Mr. President, this statement is without any real foundation in fact. The financial gentlemen on the commission who worked out this theory would make Machiavelli look like a piker. It is the very essence of sophistry. The truth is that the payment suggested by the commission, instead of being a payment of the principal indebtedness in full, is exactly the sum of $528,192,000. In other words, if Italy had the money to take up this loan to-day she could take up the entire indebtedness of $2,042,000,000 and any interest that may have accrued up to date for $528,192,000.

Mr. President, I stop here long enough to ask, Why should we attempt to delude ourselves or delude other people? What we are getting for the $2,042,000,000 is $528,192,000.

Financial men have means of determining the present worth of a deferred debt, and according to calculations accepted everywhere, $528,192,000 is the present worth of what this commission obtained. So that, Mr. President, when the commission report that they got "the full amount of the principal," this was a palpable mistake of fact.

THE FACTS

Mr. President, the United States loaned Italy during and after the war sums aggregating $1,648,034,050.90. I am informed that the Treasury Department now holds Italian 5 per cent bonds for that principal sum, together with interest thereon. None of the interest has ever been paid by Italy. I believe there is credit for $173,000 allowed on some matter of difference between the two countries, but really no payment has been made. In the meantime, the United States has already paid out in interest on this debt the sum of $497,188,351.70. The Debt Commission arrived at the total indebtedness of $2,042,000,000 by calculating past due interest at 4½ per cent up to December 5, 1922, and at 3 per cent until June 15, 1925. Not only under this proposed settlement does Italy not pay the principal indebtedness but she pays only a fractional part of the interest.

This is shown by the table furnished by the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] on page 6236 of the Record. This table shows what Italian pays on the Italian debt. Mr. President, I put the same figures in parallel columns and add another column showing what America pays each year on the Italian debt.

It is idle to call, as the Senator from Utah does call, a portion of these payments, payments on the principal, when as a matter of fact, the payments obtained from Italy never at any time, during the 62 years, reach the amount of interest we are now paying on said loan. We are paying on said loan the sum of $86,785,000 annually on the principal loan as fixed by the commission, and the table submitted by the Senator from Utah shows the highest payment made by Italy as $80,988,000 in 1937. In other words, Mr. President, if the present arrangement continues to the end of the period, not a dollar will ever be paid on the principal and the United States will have paid out in interest on account of moneys loaned to Italy the enormous sum of $2,972,992,500.

I herewith submit a statement of the amounts of the total annual payments made by Italy under the proposed agreement, the amounts we are paying out in interest on account of the Italian loan, and the deficit in interest paid by us during the life of this agreement.

I ask unanimous consent that this table may be inserted in the Record without reading, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The table is as follows:

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to refer to the table, however, to show just what we are doing under this agreement.

If this debt settlement is approved, what happens the first year? Italy pays us $5,000,000, and we pay out $86,785,000 on account of the Italian debt. In other words, of Italy's interest due to us by contract Italy this year will pay $5,000,000 of the interest and America will pay $81,785,000 in interest, and that will go on for five years. In June, 1931—and I give only the round numbers—Italy will begin to pay as much as $14,000,000 on the interest. America will pay $72,000,000 on Italy's interest, in round numbers.

Later on those figures continue to rise; but the last payment made by Italy will be $80,000,000 and America, under the present condition of the debt, will be paying $86,000,000; and at the end of that period Italy never will have paid in any one year the interest on that money. The result is that at the end of the period, if present conditions obtain, Italy will have paid off her entire debt, principal and interest, to the United States, if this settlement goes through, and America will still have to pay the entire amount of the $2,042,000,000.

Mr. President, when that learned commission comes before us and tells us that under those circumstances Italy is paying the full amount of the principal it is an insult to the intelligence of reasonable men. I hope that no Senator will vote for this settlement on the ground stated by the commission that he is ratifying a settlement which guarantees that Italy will pay the full amount of the principal, because it is no such thing.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know by what philosophy or reasoning the Senator makes any such statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. I make it upon the basis of the plain facts, the plain figures as to what we are paying. They can not be misunderstood. Does the Senator doubt that we are paying—

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. Wait one moment; let me ask the question before the Senator answers it. Does the Senator doubt that we are paying to-day, on this indebtedness, $86,000,000 in interest?

Mr. SMOOT. Why, Mr. President—

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator just answer the question? Does he doubt it?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the bonds—

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course if the Senator does not want to answer the question, he does not have to.

Mr. SMOOT. I will answer the Senator if he will only be patient. If he wants me to answer him, I desire to answer him intelligently. I do not want to be chopped off with a half sentence.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do want the Senator to answer me.

Mr. SMOOT. Under the stress of war the Government of the United States was required to pay on certain of her bonds 4½ per cent, and England and Italy and all other countries agreed to pay 5 per cent, as the Senator has said. Taking the rate of interest paid during war time on the full amount Italy owes, with the interest added up to date at the rate of 4½ per cent, it would amount to about what the Senator says.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why, of course, it would amount to exactly what the Senator says.

Mr. SMOOT. Just wait a moment. Mr. President, the Government of the United States is not going to pay for 62 years 4½ per cent on those bonds.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield right there? The Government is going to pay that rate until 1947—

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no.

Mr. McKELLAR. Because these bonds run until 1947, and the Senator does not believe that America is going to pay all of her bonded indebtedness before 1947; so for that much of the time we know that we are going to pay the $86,000,000 a year.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no, Mr. President.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator realizes that, does he not?

Mr. SMOOT. If we had the money, we could buy the bonds.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, if we had the money; but if we give it away to Italy, we will not have the money to buy the bonds.

Mr. SMOOT. What a silly statement—giving it away to Italy!

Mr. McKELLAR. I decline to yield further. The Senator has no business making such a statement about what I have said, and I decline to yield to him unless he can be respectful.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not—

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has made the statement that what I said is a silly statement. I resent it, and I am not going to yield to the Senator if he has not gentility enough to talk respectfully to a Senator who has been kind enough to yield to him. The Senator can take his seat, because I am not going to yield to him.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all right. The Senator has that right. Mr. McKELLAR. That is exactly right. The Senator ought to be genteel enough, he ought to be respectful enough, when he asks another Senator to yield, not to make remarks of that kind about him.

Mr. SMOOT. I never had any intention whatever of reflecting on the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator did not have any intention of reflecting on another Senator, he ought to have sense enough not to make the sort of a statement that indicates it.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator does not want to know what I was about to say, then.

LESSER INTEREST RATE

Mr. McKELLAR. But it is claimed by those who favor this settlement—and this is what the Senator claims—that hereafter the United States is going to get a smaller rate of interest.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator—

Mr. McKELLAR. Who knows whether we are going to get a smaller rate of interest in 1948 or not? Nobody knows whether we are going to get a smaller rate of interest or not. I hope we will. I hope we will be able, by our own act, to obtain a smaller rate of interest, and thus save us from the enormous losses or a portion of the enormous losses that the Debt Commission is seeking to fasten upon us throughout all these years. It will be very fortunate, indeed, if we can do it; but Italy makes no contract to get us a better rate of interest. Italy is not concerned with our rate of interest. What she is doing is canceling her entire debt. As I understand, these bonds run for quite a period yet, until 1947—just how long I am unable to state—but, even if we are able to refund them, there will still be an enormous loss to the American Government; and we take the risk of whether we shall be able to refund them at a lower rate of interest or not. It may be that we will have to pay a greater rate of interest, and there is no guaranty upon the part of Italy that we may not do it. No one knows what the future will bring forth. It may be we will have to pay a greater rate of interest. If it was a question of a rate of interest, of course, everyone would agree that should the United States refund her bonds at a lower rate of interest, Italy should receive the benefit of it. I am perfectly willing that Italy shall receive a lower rate of interest if we are able to obtain it. I am perfectly willing that that shall be put in the contract; but even if we are able to reduce this rate of interest to 3 per cent, we will still have an enormous loss in interest alone, and the principal never will be paid.

ONE AND EIGHT-TENTHS PER CENT FOR 62 YEARS

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Nebraska a day or two ago made a striking statement of the facts when he pointed out that the meaning of this settlement was that the United States would get, during the period of 62 years, 1.8 per cent interest on the principal sum, and that was all. At the end of that period all the interest would be paid and the whole principal would be paid as far as Italy was concerned, and that is all that America would get out of it. We are paying 4½ per cent now; we are going to continue to pay 4½ per cent until 1947; and yet at no time does Italy pay more than 1.8 per cent, and the principal is canceled, under this agreement. America would not get a dollar of the principal, but under the agreement would merely get 1.8 per cent on the principal sum, while America now is paying 4½ per cent; and at the end of the period Italy, by the payment of 1.8 per cent interest, will have acquitted herself of the entire debt, while America will still owe the entire amount. In other words, Italy under the proposed settlement does not pay a dollar of the principal, and only pays 1.8 per cent interest on the principal sum during the period of 62 years.

Senators, can we afford to effect a settlement of that kind? Is it right to the American taxpayer? Is it right toward the American people? I say that it is not right, and that the Senate should not confirm this Italian debt settlement, that will mean practically a cancellation of three-fourths of the Italian debt.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am very sure that the Senator from Tennessee has given deep study to this question, and I should like to ask him two questions, either now, or at some later stage in the development of his thesis.

Mr. McKELLAR. I would prefer if the Senator would wait just a few minutes, until I get my case before the Senate.

ITALY'S ABILITY TO PAY

The Senator from Utah stated that the Debt Commission made a most careful survey of Italy's resources, of her farm resources, of her bank resources, of her industrial resources, and all resources, and from this they concluded that the $528,000,000 was all that Italy could pay, and hence the settlement as reported by the commission.

I heard a part of the speech of the Senator from Utah and have since read it as carefully as I could. I find, Mr. President, that a much better statement of Italy's resources, of her finances, of her production and industry, of her manufactures, of her commerce, and her navigation and shipping, is to be found in the Statesman's Yearbook of 1925 than is to be found in the report of the commission or in the speech of the Senator from Utah. Indeed, Mr. President, I find much in that book, which I take to be reliable, that I do not find in the Senator from Utah's address. I herewith attach a copy of the statements found in that yearbook and ask that it be printed as a part of my remarks as Exhibit A.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, there are some features of it that I wish to discuss. The bonded indebtedness of Italy as of present date is about three and a half billion dollars. Her settlement with the United States will, in effect, add $528,000,000 more, and assuming her settlement with Great Britain is what is claimed for it, it will add another $528,000,000. So that her entire bonded indebtedness after the two settlements are ratified will amount, in round numbers, to little more than four and a half billion dollars. America's bonded indebtedness amounts to $20,000,000,000, or more than four times Italy's bonded indebtedness, and we have already paid six and a half billions on it. I speak in round figures. Our own bonded indebtedness, if this settlement goes through, will be more than four and a half times as great as the bonded indebtedness of Italy. Yet this commission would have us settle with Italy on the ground that she is a bankrupt. She has 36,000,000 people to our 110,000,000.

I wonder how much consideration the commission gave these facts when they took off three-fourths of the burden of this indebtedness from Italy's shoulders and put it upon the backs of the American taxpayers; three-fourths of it, a billion and a half dollars and more, which they took off of the backs of the Italians, the bonded indebtedness of whose government compares with ours as four and a half billion compares with $20,000,000,000, and we have already paid six and a half billion of our war debt.

Again, Italy's domestic bonded debt of three and a half billions of dollars and her foreign debt of a little more than a billion more, constitutes all of her indebtedness, while the 20 billion of America's bonded debt constitutes only a portion of her bonded debts. The bonded debt of our various States amounts to more than $5,000,000,000. Our counties and cities are also enormously bonded. I wonder how much consideration our commissioners gave to these facts when they agreed to accept three-fourths of this indebtedness. It seems to me they were thinking too much of the interest of Italy and too little of the American taxpayer.

Again, Mr. President, Italy owns all of her own railways, all of her telegraph lines, all of her telephone lines. She likewise conducts a monopoly of tobacco business which is exceedingly profitable to her. I do not recall that the Senator from Utah had much to say about these properties belonging to Italy, when he declared her bankrupt.

Again, I invite the special attention of the Senate to her productions in agriculture, forestry, and mines and minerals, on pages 1042 and 1043 of the Statesman's Year Book. Her manufactures of cotton and silk, of sugar, and of machinery, are all most important and are shown to be in excellent condition and constantly increasing. There is another item of wealth that I do not recall that the Senator from Utah mentioned. It is Italy's navigation and shipping. Her merchant marine consists of 880 vessels of more than 2,700,000 gross tons. She has a splendid merchant fleet. Its business is enormous and growing. She has more than 10,000 miles of railways, and these statistics show that they are paying a profit. She has over 84,000 miles of telegraph wire and more than 116,000 subscribers to her telephones. The life-insurance business of Italy is a state monopoly. She has rich valleys and the very best of farms, and while she does not make all she consumes, still they make wonderful crops in Italy just as they do in Germany. They fertilize their lands well, they work them well, and they get out of them very much more than we do in this country. No European country makes in foodstuffs all that she consumes, unless it be Russia.

Great stress was put on a statement by the Senator from Utah that Italy did not raise all she consumed. No European country does. Great Britain does not do that, France does not do it, Belgium does not do it, Germany does not do it. Russia is the only one that does, and she does not do it entirely.

The Senator from Pennsylvania paints a vivid picture of the poverty and distress of the Italians. You can not get such a picture from actually looking at their country. The northern part especially, while mountainous, is a most prosperous looking country, to say the least of it, and with every available space cultivated. I am afraid that our Debt Commission took the views of the Italian Debt Commission as expressed to them, rather than to dig into the facts independently.

Again, Mr. President, take the $100,000,000 bond transaction. That transaction shows that J. P. Morgan & Co., international bankers, take a very different view of the Italian situation from what our Debt Commission does. Our Debt Commission took the position that Italy was bankrupt to the extent of 72 per cent. J. P. Morgan & Co. assured the bankers of this country, in selling the bonds, that Italy was bankrupt only to the extent of 6 per cent. The bonds were sold at 94, and I understood they were taken up three times over, and the transaction was at the very time that the Debt Commission was operating.

Did that look like the transaction of a bankrupt? Yet it was at the very time the Debt Commission was operating. If Italy had been in the condition our Debt Commission reports, surely J. P. Morgan & Co., one of the most reliable financial firms in the country, or in any country, would not have been advising its correspondents and customers to accept Italian bonds at 94, if Italy could only pay to the extent of 28 cents.

Mr. President, as I understand it, J. P. Morgan & Co. are the financial representatives of the present Government of Italy. We may rest assured that they know something about Italy's ability to pay. They know what her properties are. They know what her resources of every kind are. They are familiar with her banking situation. They have been lending her money before. It came out the other day that they had lent her recently $50,000,000 and had taken security therefor. What arrangements there may exist between the Italian Government and the House of Morgan no one knows. I am quite sure that the commission did not ask as to these relationships. The commission does not know, as none of us know, whether the funds arising from the sale of $100,000,000 of bonds were used for the purpose of taking up the $50,000,000 previous debt that Italy owed Morgan & Co. or not. We do not know what private securities the House of Morgan still holds belonging to Italy and for the security of this $100,000,000 of bonds. Is it right for America to give validity to these bonds under such circumstances as here appear? These matters should have been examined into by the commission so that they could have told Congress before this debt settlement was approved. It is an important matter if, as suggested, that Morgan & Co. negotiated these bonds solely on the general credit of the Government of Italy and sold the bonds at 95 per cent of their face value, why, it is perfectly clear that this settlement at 28 per cent should not be approved. On the other hand, if Morgan & Co. have private collaterals to guarantee the payment in whole or in part of these bonds, then it may be that the settlement is all that could be obtained. It is certainly a most significant fact that at the very time Italy was settling her debt to America at 28 cents on the dollar she was contracting another debt through her financial agents in this country at 94 cents on the dollar. It is claimed that one transaction had nothing to do with the other. It is a fallacious claim, Mr. President. If it had not been for the Italian debt settlement, perhaps the $100,000,000 loan would not have been floated. In other words, in my own mind I have no doubt that the flotation of the $100,000,000 loan in America was entirely dependent upon whether or not this marvelously good settlement for Italy was agreed to. I think the matter should be referred back to the Finance Committee to hold hearings about this matter and see just what the facts are in reference to the Morgan Italian loan. Many questions have arisen in regard to this loan, but not one word have we seen from the House of Morgan.

ITALY'S SHARE OF REPARATIONS

Mr. President, the Debt Commission seems to have left out of consideration entirely the reparations Italy will receive from Germany under the Dawes plan. Within a year or two she will be receiving something like $50,000,000 a year as reparations from Germany. For the next 30 years, Mr. President, Italy will pay to the United States an average of a little more than $20,000,000 a year. She will pay to Great Britain about the same sum. In other words, she will pay to her two foreign creditors about $40,000,000 a year. She will receive during the same period between $45,000,000 and $50,000,000 a year from Germany, so that the enormous sums lent her will be quite easily repaid, if this settlement goes through. And we must remember at all times that $648,000,000 of this sum that we are canceling was lent to her after the war and should have gone for the benefit of her Government and the upbuilding of her nation. It was not used for war purposes at all, but it was used for peace purposes.

The reparations she will get from Germany will give her a substantial balance of several million dollars after paying all she owes America under this agreement, and after she pays all of her engagements to Great Britain. We must remember that $648,000,000 of this amount was not loaned for war purposes at all. It was loaned to enable Italy to rehabilitate herself after the war, and, as I shall call to the attention of the Senate later, this money was used for the purpose of putting Italy on her feet. It is not a war debt. It is a debt of the greatest importance to the civilian life of Italy, and yet it is classed as a war debt, and we take 28 cents on the dollar. It is probably more than she ever will get from Germany. In other words, if we accept this settlement, the reparations we will pay Italy will probably be greater than she will get from any of those who were her enemies during the war. I do not know whether these gentlemen took into consideration Mr. Mussolini's views about the Italian capacity to pay. If the Senator from Utah will not be ungracious enough to call me names I will be glad to know.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not ask the Senator to yield to me.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no doubt for the first time that the Senator from Utah is about to hear Mussolini's ideas with reference to the ability of that nation to pay. I give it to him in Mussolini's own words.

MUSSOLINI'S IDEA OF ITALY'S CAPACITY

Mr. Mussolini is a great speaker and he has talked about many things. I quote from one of his speeches:

We are not in a good condition in Italy; but look at England, opulent, swollen, overgrown, gripped by the throat, and involved in a social crisis of fierce intensity. She is in danger at home and on her borders, in danger of the revolt of all the people of the Mediterranean against her Empire, a revolt which would justify the saying that the Mediterranean is for those who inhabit its coasts.

Look next at Germany, and see what a close escape she has had from an acute communistic crisis. And as for France, is her health perfect? This is no time for the Panglossian creed that everything is going for the best in the best possible of worlds. France is undergoing a hidden crisis, and if she seems more settled, it is for the tragic reason that she is literally exhausted by her military efforts.

And if we look at Switzerland, where unemployment rages, at Spain, at Portugal, at the states that have emerged from the ruin of Austria, at Austria herself, we have reason to comfort ourselves as to our own condition (p. 155, Gorgolini).

I fear, Mr. President, that our Debt Commission did not take into consideration Mr. Mussolini's evidence, wherein he points out that Italy is in a better condition than any of the European nations. Yet we made Great Britain pay at least 66% per cent and the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoot] says he is going to make France pay more than Italy, and Switzerland has never been affected by the war.

I am afraid they did not have his views when they declared Italy a bankrupt. Here is the statement of her ruler that she was in better condition than any other of the great European nations, and yet while her premier and her autocratic ruler is declaring that she is in better condition than any other nation in Europe our Debt Commission takes 66% per cent of the indebtedness of Great Britain, whom Mussolini commiserates, and accepts 28 per cent from Italy on the ground that Italy is bankrupt. It seems to me they might have taken the opinion of Mr. Mussolini on that subject before bringing in this proposed settlement.

ITALY, RUSSIA, AND MEXICO

But, Mr. President, there is another reason why this settlement should not be entered into at this time. In my own judgment it is a most important reason.

For nearly 10 years we have refused to recognize the Russian Government because of their revolutionary and autocratic form of government. In that country a few revolutionists got together, overturned the government, murdered the royal family, killed or ran out the ruling classes of Russia, and assumed autocratic power. Apparently this autocratic power was lodged in a committee rather than one man, though Lenin was at the head of it.

Our Government has steadfastly refused to recognize the government set up in Russia, as she has a right to do, and the wisdom of this course I am not now disputing.

In 1922, a very similar situation arose in Italy. The revolutionists were called Bolsheviks in Russia and the revolutionists were called Fascists in Italy. In Russia they killed the royal family. In Italy the royal family capitulated and made terms with the revolutionists. The result was precisely the same. Attending the revolution in Italy was violence, murder, oppression, driving out of Italy those who were opposed to the revolutionists, just in the same manner as the revolution had occurred in Russia. Yet our Government refuses to recognize Russia in any way whatsoever and we not only recognize Italy but settle our debt on such liberal terms as will probably make complete the purposes of the revolutionists and turn Italy for all time over to a government quite as autocratic, quite as cruel, as the Government of Russia.

Our Government refused recognition to Mexico for a long time because of revolutions that were perhaps not half as far-reaching and not half as disastrous to human life and human liberty as the revolution has been in Italy, and yet it is only recently that we have recognized the Mexican Government, and even now the friendliness of our association with Mexico is constantly subject to comment.

MUSSOLINI

Mr. President, in my judgment, perhaps the greatest evil that has befallen the Italian people in a hundred years is Mussolini. In the period from 1919 to 1922 Italy's position was indeed a trying one. The King was weak and revolution was rife. The communists were trying to get control and had committed many depredations and outrages. The socialists were likewise trying to get control and their conduct was in every way revolutionary. Mussolini, D'Annunzio, and other revolutionists were each trying to make headway in Italy. The Duke d'Aosta, a near relative of the King, was popular and supposed to be a man of courage and capacity. The King was jealous of him. He had taken an active part in the war and was then a general in the army, and the King supposedly relied on him. Mussolini's nondescript bands of bandits were marching upon Rome. It seems that he was not with them but he was for them. He had become quite a leader and he was to be reckoned with. Evidently the King debated as to what was best and safest for him to do. If he called in D'Aosta he was afraid of revolution from that source which would put D'Aosta in his place, and so he concluded to deal with Mussolini. He sent D'Aosta out of Rome to await his directions and while he was out of Rome the King then sent for Mussolini and made him Premier and turned over supreme power to Mussolini, or at all events, Mussolini assumed supreme power. The King was and has been ever since as putty in his hands and has had no real share in the Italian Government.

According to an Italian paper printed in this country, Mussolini has been careful to arrange salaries for all the royal family and near-royalty. He provides that the King is to receive $3,250,000 a year, the Duke d'Aosta $200,000 a year—and we must realize that the King of England, which country Mussolini declares is a poverty-stricken country, does not receive as much—and six other dukes and princes $200,000 each, while Mussolini takes himself only the relatively small amount of $70,000 a year. Of course, the King and these princes and dukes are faring very well at the hands of the new dictator and will no doubt, as long as they do the bidding, or until he gets tired of them.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I am sure the distinguished and high-minded Senator from Tennessee would not wish to mislead the Senate and certainly would not wish to mislead the country.

Mr. McKELLAR. Indeed, I would not.

Mr. COPELAND. I fear that from what the Senator has said to-day and what he said on the 1st of April in discussing the same subject, the tendency for the Senate and country would be to believe in a thing which is probably not true. I know that the Senator, as he has already said, would not wish to have such an impression prevail.

I hold in my hand a letter which came to me from the Italian Embassy, and in this letter the statement is made that I may inform myself through Mr. Castle, of the Department of State, whether or not the figures given are correct. I took the pains to verify the figures and find that they came to the Department of State through Mr. Fletcher, our ambassador to Italy. The fact, which is quite contrary to the statement of my friend from Tennessee, is that these officers do not receive any such sums as the Senator has stated in his otherwise very interesting address.

If these figures are correct, His Majesty the King receives not the enormous sum mentioned by the Senator, but receives $450,000. The crown prince receives $120,000, and members of the royal family all together $80,000, while the Prime Minister himself receives not the enormous sum mentioned by the Senator from Tennessee, but receives the sum of $1,000 and $300 for house rent. These figures are undoubtedly as reliable as any American can receive. I know that the Senator from Tennessee would not wish to impress upon a friendly power the thought that a Senator of the United States was seeking to put out figures which are so exorbitant and extravagant as in themselves to make them break down. If I am rightly advised, the figures which I have stated to the Senate are the correct figures.

I think we ought to be very modest in our expressions here. The country of Italy has a right to maintain its own sovereignty and to maintain its Government in its own way.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am not going to yield any longer to the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly the Senator will yield to the extent of allowing me to complete my statement?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not going to yield for the Senator to make a speech during my speech.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut for a question.

Mr. BINGHAM. It will take but a moment to state what I desire to say. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator unduly. I trust that the Senator will not proceed to give the Senate his opinions with regard to the Government of a friendly power in the spirit in which he has just done. It seems to me our rules in regard to discussing matters concerning foreign nations require that it shall be done in executive session where Senators may express themselves in accordance with their views just as freely and just as earnestly as they please without causing any disruption of friendly relations with foreign nations. I hope the Senator will not proceed as he has done several times this morning. I have been on the point of suggesting that we go into executive session in order that we might receive his opinions without their being cabled all over the world.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, after having been chastised by my distinguished friend on the other side, which chastisement I accept with all due grace, let me say that I am going to give him not my opinions, but I am going to give him the opinions of the man for whom this settlement is made.

I wish to digress here long enough to say that this is an international question, and it is not only the right but it is the duty of an American representative, as I understand his duty here, before we turn over to another nation, friendly or unfriendly, a billion and a half dollars of the money wrung from the American people by taxation, to look into the facts; and I am making no statement here that can not be made in any forum at any time, and no government that has a concern for its own obligations has any right to complain.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not misunderstand me—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield further to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. McKELLAR. I decline to yield further at this time. I am going to give to the Senate the views of Mr. Mussolini himself about a very important matter.

MUSSOLINI, COMMUNIST AND REVOLUTIONIST

A day or two ago, in a colloquy between the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and myself, the Senator from Utah vehemently declared that Mussolini was not and never had been a communist, that he had only been a socialist, and that I did not seem to know the difference between the two "isms."

Of course, I pass that over. I might say that the Senator from Utah seems not to be very well acquainted with Mr. Mussolini's history, but I will not do that. I merely call his attention to Gorgolini's history of the Fascist Movement in Italian Life (1923) in which he says of Mr. Mussolini:

Having obtained a degree in French letters and become editor of a stirring revolutionary paper, in which he advocated the doctrines of Marx, he was soon expelled, as undesirable, from Swiss territory (p. 30).

This is the man to whom we are giving a billion and a half dollars, who only a few years ago was expelled from Swiss territory for being a communist; and yet, after America has raised a billion and a half dollars from her people by taxation, the Debt Commission proposes to turn over that amount for the purpose of upholding the administration and the power of Mussolini.

Again, on the same page, in speaking of his occupation after he had to leave Switzerland and came back to Italy:

He enlisted as a volunteer in the war against Austria, and performed all his duties as citizen and soldier. Being wounded, he returned to Milan to fight, in the columns of his journal, a battle against that subversionism which was fed by Russian, and perhaps by German, gold (p. 30).

On the subject of violence, says Mr. Mussolini—

And now I am quoting Mr. Mussolini himself. I call the attention of the Senate and the country to the fact that the statements I am about to quote are from Mussolini, to whom we are giving a billion and a half dollars of the American taxpayers' money in order that he may continue his régime.

Thirdly—

Says Mr. Mussolini—

we must choose the rightful objectives of violence. It is not always possible, in the excitement of the moment, but we must try to strike only those who deserve to be struck, and not others. And also, Fascist violence must be chivalrous. Absolutely so.

And again:

Violence is an exception, not a method or a system. It is not directed to personal vengeance, but to national defense. When it has reached its end it is a very grave error to urge it further.

And again:

We must act as strong men, we must watch with pistol in hand, so that the enemy may not be tempted to return to his counter-offensive, and at the same time we must allow ourselves the luxury of being generous and chivalrous toward those who are puzzled or ignorant (p. 104).

And again:

The complaints of the national press in regard to some sporadic individual violence on the part of the Fascists deserve instant attention. Let us first say that to-morrow, or soon after, we will give abundant documentation, through the files of Avanti, of the unheard-of verbal and physical violence to which socialists of all kinds and in every part of Italy abandoned themselves during the last electoral campaign.

Mr. President, here is the head of a government with a secret police numbering into the hundreds of thousands, committing almost every kind of violence and depredation upon the people of Italy, who gives as his reason for it and as his excuse for it that the socialists who are opposing him have been violent.

And again:

We add that certain violences on the part of individuals, if not justifiable, are nevertheless explainable.

I read Mussolini as revealed in his political speeches, November, 1914, to August, 1923, by an Italian named Severino.

On page 24, in discussing revolution, Mr. Mussolini says:

The country is young, but its institutions are old, and when, if I may be allowed to quote once more from Karl Marx—

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] said Mussolini was not a communist; yet he quotes from Marx—the old pan-Germanist, a conflict between new forces and old institutions begins to shape itself that means the new wine can not any longer be kept in old skins or the inevitable will occur. The old forces of political and social life of Italy will fall into fragments.

That speech was delivered at Milan in 1915.

Again, in 1917, he quoted Karl Marx approvingly on the subject of revolution. In June, 1921, just before he was Premier, he says:

I know the communists. I know them because a great many of them are my sons—I mean, of course, spiritually [laughter], and I recognize with a sincerity that might appear cynical that it was I who first inoculated these people when I put into circulation among the Italian socialists a little Bergson mingled with much blanqui.

He was the first to inoculate the Italian people with the doctrines of Karl Marx and communism.

In several places in the speeches he speaks of having been a disciple of Marx.

Again, Mr. President, his speeches on revolution and violence show beyond controversy how he felt.

From pages 146-147 I quote from one of his utterances as follows:

I come now to the question of violence. Violence is not immoral.

Violence is not immoral! Here is the Premier with whom we are settling this great indebtedness, to whom we are giving a billion and a half dollars of the money of the American people, defending murder and other forms of violence of which he has been accused.

Violence is not immoral. On the contrary, it is sometimes moral—

Says Mr. Mussolini—

We dispute the right of our enemies to bewail our violence because, compared with that which was committed in the unlucky years of '19 and '20 and with that of the bolsheviks in Russia, where 2,000,000 people have been executed and another 2,000,000 still pining in prison, our violence is as child's play. On the other hand, violence is decisive, because at the end of July and August, having made use of it systematically for 48 hours, we got results which we should not have obtained in 48 years of sermons and propaganda. When, therefore, violence removes a gangrene of this sort it is morally sacred and necessary.

It is morally sacred and necessary to commit murder and other forms of violence.

And again, on page 138, in speaking of necessary violence, Mr. Mussolini says:

But we do not make a school, a system, or, worse still, an aesthetic violence. We are violent when it is necessary to be so. But I tell you at once that this necessary violence on the part of the Fascisti must have a character and style all its own, definitely aristocratic and, if you prefer, surgical.

Aristocratic murder! It is aristocratic to lay violent hands upon and put men in prison, shoot them down in the streets! That is aristocratic violence; and we are giving him a billion and a half dollars to continue his régime of violence in Italy. No doubt, Mr. President, Karl Marx would be delighted to know that he has such a promising pupil.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Why does the Senator say we are giving Mr. Mussolini a billion and a half dollars to continue his violence, to use the words of the Senator? How can he be violent or raise armies or maintain them under the settlement which we have before us? How does it give him any money with which to do this thing?

Mr. McKELLAR. By this proposed settlement we relieve the kingdom which he controls of a billion and a half dollars of indebtedness, and the interest that might have been paid on the just debts of Italy is to be used for keeping up an army twice as large as ours. To-day they are keeping up such an army. If they are bankrupt, how do they get the money with which to maintain an army which is twice as large as that of the American Army? However, I will come to that in a few moments.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator will pardon me a moment further, I wish he would get to it, because I should like to find some way by which I can run my affairs and pay my bills if my creditors will be lenient with the past.

Mr. McKELLAR. O Mr. President, it is not a question of leniency. It is a question of a gift, a gift to a despot, as I shall show in a moment by his own words.

Again, to quote from one of his speeches made in 1923, Mussolini says:

To make a revolution it is not necessary to play a great drama of the arena. We have left many dead on the roads to Rome and naturally anybody who deludes himself is a fool. We have the power and we shall hold it. We shall defend it against anybody. The revolution lies in this firm determination to hold power.

And again he says:

And now I come to the practical side of the discussion. They speak of liberty, but what is this liberty? Does liberty exist? After all, it represents a philosophic and moral concept. There are various manifestations of liberty. Liberty never existed. The socialists have always denied it (p. 354).

Here is a man who boasts of his violence toward his fellow man in running the Italian Government, who boasts that liberty never lived; and yet America is contributing its billion and a half dollars of her taxpayers' money to keep in office and in power a man with such views to rule over the Italian people.

Again, Mr. President, he admits he is a despot and admits it in no uncertain terms. I quote from his speech made on the 16th day of July, 1923:

I am not, gentlemen, a despot who locks up in a castle protected by strong walls. I circulate freely amongst the people without any concern whatsoever, and I listen to them. * * * Well, the Italian people up to now have not asked for liberty (p. 355).

And again:

And how can you check this discontent? By force? What is the state? It is the police (p. 356).

And again:

They say we want to abolish Parliament.

Mr. President, he has already abolished it.

No; it is not true. First of all, we do not know what we can substitute for it. Parliaments—the so-called technical councils—are still in the embryonic stage.

In his view, the Senate and the House of Representatives are "still in the embryonic stage"; and yet he is asking for a gift from them of a billion and a half dollars of the American taxpayers' money!

Maybe they represent some principles of life.

I suspect that this one will be regarded as representing "some principles of life" if we give Mr. Mussolini the billion and a half dollars that our Debt Commission wants to give to him.

With such subjects one can never be dogmatic or explicit; but in the face of to-day's state of affairs they represent only attempts.

I suppose Mr. Mussolini will call this a righteous attempt.

May be that in a second stage it may be possible to allot to these technical councils a portion of the legislative work (p. 357).

"A portion of the legislative work"!

This man who thus declares that he is the Italian state was the son of a blacksmith, and he himself worked at the trade. That is in no wise to his discredit. If he had risen in the world without violence, it would be to his credit. He went into the army for a short time, and it is claimed that he was wounded and was returned home. How he got out of the army writers seem not to know. At all events, while the war was going on and after he was entirely recovered he became the editor of a newspaper. It seems that he is also a natural leader of men and quite an orator. After the war he was teaching the doctrines of socialism, but the socialists got tired of him and he was turned out of the order. It seems at one time he was forced to leave Italy. He went to Switzerland, and because of the doctrines he taught he was compelled to leave Switzerland, and, finally, about the outbreak of the war, he got into the Italian Army, but was there for only a short time, and seems to have simply gone in and come out. But after the war was over, he became a great man of war.

I want here and now to call attention to some of the things that he has done.

First. He has overturned and destroyed the constitutional government of the Italian people.

Second. Out of the taxes wrung from the people he has in substance bought off the King and those about him.

Third. Out of the taxes of the people he has bought and paid for princes and dukes and other important personages in the Kingdom who were likely to give him trouble.

Fourth. He has abolished free speech in Italy.

Fifth. He has muzzled the newspapers in Italy. They can only print what he directs them to print.

Sixth. He has in substance and in fact abolished both houses of the parliament.

Seventh. He postpones or holds elections at his will.

Eighth. He has established a secret police or cheka, fashioned after the Russian cheka.

Ninth. He has abolished local self-government.

Tenth. These secret police, by his direction, have murdered or made away with or exiled all who have gotten in his way.

Eleventh. He has abolished established trade-unions and co-operative societies in Italy.

Twelfth. He has, by murder, intimidation, or exile, rooted out or attempted to root out Free Masonry in Italy.

I wonder what our Freemason friends are going to say about that. Here we are giving the man who has rooted out Freemasonry from Italy by violence a billion and a half dollars to further his own government.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HARRELD. I want to say that I have made some investigations along that line, and I have failed to find any of this so-called mistreatment of the Masons as being directed toward American Masons. Italian Masonry is quite a different thing from American Masonry. It is entirely different. I should like to ask the Senator if he knows whether or not my information is correct—that so far as any persecutions are concerned, they are confined to Italian Masonry?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; he is persecuting his own Masons, not the American Masons. The Senator is right to that extent. I never said that he was persecuting American Masons. If he did, he would probably reap the reward of having America look after her own citizens. The Senator is right about that; but the Italian branch of the Masons, as I understand, is a branch of the Scottish Rite Masons that exist all over the world. It is one of the branches of Freemasonry, and here is a man who is undertaking to run out Freemasonry from his own borders.

Mr. HARRELD. Is it not more of a religious question in Italy than it is in this country?

Mr. McKELLAR. It may be that a ruler of a nation who declares with pride that he is a despot, who declares that he has been guilty of all kinds of violence, acted from religious motives in running out Freemasonry in his own kingdom. That may be so. The Senator may be right, but I doubt it.

Mr. HARRELD. Perhaps he is acting from religious motives.

Mr. McKELLAR. I doubt it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. What did Mussolini do about Masonry?

Mr. McKELLAR. He put his cheka or secret police—and I will give the number of them to the Senator; I think there are about 200,000 of the secret police—on the tracks of the Italian Freemasons, and destroyed some of them and ran many of them out of the country and silenced the rest.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania in a moment, after the Senator from New York has concluded.

Mr. COPELAND. Just a moment. Did not Mr. Mussolini do exactly what the State of New York did about the Ku-Klux Klan when it said that there could not be an order whose membership was kept secret, insisting that the Ku-Klux Klan in New York should reveal the names of their members? Is not that what Mr. Mussolini did regarding Masonry in Italy?

Mr. McKELLAR. I know what Mr. Mussolini has done, because I have read it from authoritative sources; but I do not know what the State of New York has done and has declared. That is a matter of some doubt.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I have been informed that the Masonry of France and Italy is professedly antireligious, and that for that reason the Masonry of Great Britain and of America, which is frankly religious, has declined to recognize the French and Italian Masons as being members of the same order. Has the Senator information on that point?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no information about that matter. I will say, however, that I would not have very much confidence in the views of Mr. Mussolini when he takes up the religious side of any question, in view of the record of his life as he gives it and as I have presented it here in his own words, not in mine. I doubt very much whether Mr. Mussolini, in his war on the Italian Freemasons, is impelled by religious beliefs or principles.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Disregarding for a moment the secret of motives of men, which we are unable to fathom—

Mr. McKELLAR. We can fathom them from what they say; and I read to the Senate this morning—I do not know whether the Senator from Pennsylvania was here or not—excerpts from Mr. Mussolini's speeches which show conclusively what he thinks and how he feels in the inner recesses of his heart toward his fellow men. I yield further to the Senator.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator would be impressed, I should suppose, by the statements of the Encyclopedia Britannica as to the difference between Masonry in Italy and Masonry in our own country, and the fact that one of them is frankly atheistic and antireligious, while at home what we know as Masonry is profoundly religious. The Senator thinks that distinction is important, does he not?

Mr. McKELLAR. If it is correct, it is important. I have no knowledge about what the beliefs of European Freemasonry are.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator can find them in the encyclopedia.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do have some knowledge about American Freemasonry. It is intensely religious and in no wise opposed to the church.

Mr. SHORTTRIDGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. SHORTTRIDGE. The inquiry put by my friend the Senator from Pennsylvania prompts me to observe that I am not aware that the Italian Masons or the French Masons or any legitimate Masons in the world are atheistic. I understand that the fundamental principle of Free and Accepted Masonry throughout the world is a belief in the immortality of the human soul, and the accountability hereafter of man for what he does on this earth during this little spell we call life.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator that I have always so understood.

Mr. SHORTTRIDGE. I am not aware that any man can be a Mason anywhere in the world who does not subscribe to a firm belief, without evasion or equivocation or any mental reservation, in a Supreme Being, and, to repeat, the immortality and the accountability of the human soul.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have always understood that to be so.

Mr. SHORTTRIDGE. I do not wish to get into any controversy over the matter with my friend from Pennsylvania, but I was surprised at the implication of his question.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Just one moment. I simply want to say that while I am not an expert on the subject, I have always understood that the principles and doctrines of Freemasonry were substantially as has been well stated by the Senator from California; and I am quite sure, without having direct knowledge about it, that the Freemasons of Europe hold a like doctrine, and a belief in religion and in the immortality of the soul.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator has very kindly yielded to me once. Will he yield again?

Mr. McKELLAR. Indeed I will.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senator's information can be completed by a mere reference to the encyclopedia as to the distinction between British and Italian Masonry. Now I want to ask the Senator this question:

If, in a nation so profoundly religious as Italy, an organization arises which is professedly antireligious and atheistic, and endeavors in every way to obstruct the peaceful worship of the religious people of Italy, does the Senator think that the movement against that organization ought to be discouraged even by talk in the United States Senate, just because they throw over themselves this distinguished name of Masons?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, Mr. Mussolini having started life as a communist, as a disciple of Karl Marx, having been for a long time a socialist, until he was turned out of that order, and now being a professed believer in violence, in the commission of all kinds of violent crimes; having a secret army in his own country known as the national police, known in Russia by the name of "Cheka," having for its purpose arresting, trying, and condemning, without public trial, I want to say that I would not have very much confidence in the religious belief of Mr. Mussolini. A man who is a communist does not believe in God, and Mr. Mussolini certainly was a communist—

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. McKELLAR. And a disciple of Karl Marx. He may be, in the political exigencies of the case, a religious man now, but if so, he has recently become such. I have read a number of lives of Mr. Mussolini. I examined into his record before I brought this material to the Senate. I find nothing in his nature or in his speeches—and there are several books of his speeches—I have never seen anything about his record that indicated in the slightest degree a religious nature, and if Mr. Mussolini is attempting to defend himself and his violence toward the Freemasonry of Italy by claiming that he thus acts because of his religious belief, I would not have any more confidence in him after he made the claim than before.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Does not the Senator realize that it is a matter of world-wide knowledge that Mussolini and the movement which he heads have saved Italy from communism?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I know that is claimed for him, but instead of having saved Italy from communism, unless I am more mistaken in the political situation than I ever believed I could be, in Italy to-day they have a government following even harsher, more cruel, more criminal practices than have ever been indulged in by any communists.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Does not the Senator know that the Fascist movement has brought about a state of order in Italy so that to-day the streets of Naples are safer than the streets of New York?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad the Senator mentioned that fact, because it reminds me of something I saw with my own eyes.

Two years and a half ago I visited the city of Moscow, where the bolsheviks reigned supreme. Instead of having a one-man communistic government, as they have in Italy, they have a government presided over by several men. I want to say to the Senator and to the Senate that I have been in all the cities of this country, and I believe of Canada, and most of the cities of Europe, and I have never seen such perfect order in all my life as I saw in the city of Moscow. Why was that so? Because the government had killed off all of its enemies, and the citizens were afraid to have disorder in Moscow. I have no doubt in my own mind that if conditions in the city of Naples are as the Senator has described them, it means that the secret police, under Mr. Mussolini, have taken such cruel and inhuman steps as to make every one in that great city afraid to act.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I think somebody ought to say a word in behalf of the police of New York. The fact of the matter is that in my opinion, from traveling the world to a limited extent, the best police force there is in the world is to be found in the city of New York to-day. I speak of surface indications; I know nothing of what goes on under the surface. So far as regulation is concerned, so far as protection is concerned, so far as efficiency is concerned, there is no police force, in my opinion, on the face of the earth, that comes within gunshot distance of the police force of the city of New York.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President—

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, when the Senator first asked me about Naples I had in my mind to refer to the city of Moscow, which is ruled in somewhat the same way. I intended also to say something along the line of what has been said about New York City by the Senator from California, who has, however, said it much better than I could possibly say it. I frequently visit New York and I see no such disorder there as the Senator from Pennsylvania charges exists there. Of course, I do not know the inner workings of the police force, but it has always seemed to me that it was one of the best, one of the most efficient, one of the strongest police forces in the Nation. I believe that New York is a well regulated city and I am sure that is not due to fascism or communism or socialism or any other "ism," but is due to a splendid American spirit of efficiency that exists there.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield first to the Senator from New York and then I will yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. COPELAND. I am sure the Senator from Pennsylvania was using "New York" in the generic sense, meaning Pittsburgh and all the other cities of the country as well, because, as the Senator from California has said, New York is the best governed city in the country and has the best police force and is the best city in every sense. That is recognized, and I think the Senator from Tennessee will admit it.

Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. JOHNSON rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. McKELLAR. I must yield first to the Senator from Missouri. I want to yield to all Senators.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I merely wanted to inquire of the Senator from Tennessee whether he did not think the Senator from California was referring to the high intelligence of the policemen in New York City as evidenced by a little story which is told of a Frenchman who was run over by an automobile. When dragged to the curb on the side of the street, he said to the policeman, "Parlez vous Français?" to which the policeman replied, "No; Chevrolet coupé." [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield now to the Senator from California.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I dislike to interrupt the Senator's interesting historical review—

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not mind interruption as long as the Senator does not call me names.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I understand the Senator from Tennessee opposes the proposed settlement with Italy.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I do.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. May I inquire whether the Senator thinks that Mussolini is to pay the debt or the Italian people are to pay it?

Mr. McKELLAR. Such of it as we are seeking to recover is to be paid by the Italian people, but the Senator can realize that if we relieve the present Italian Government by a stroke of the pen of a billion and a half dollars, it will add very greatly to the stability and the power and influence of the Mussolini government, which I do not think is a good government for the Italian people. I now yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania if he desires to interrupt.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Pardon me for a moment. The Senator has answered my question. The thought I wish to draw out is this: No matter what may be thought of Mussolini, in the final analysis the Italian people, not the individual, Mussolini, will pay whatever amount is agreed upon to be paid.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say, in answer to the suggestion made by the junior Senator from California, that if the settlement were with the Italian people and for their benefit, if I could be made to believe that it was to give them even a larger measure of liberty; if it were not, as it appears to me, an aid to another war brought on by their ambitious premier; if what we do with this debt could benefit the Italian people, for whom I have the profoundest respect and esteem, I should be very glad to go the limit in arranging any settlement with Italy.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that it is not the Italian people who are to pay; it is the American taxpayers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course. I will continue now for just a moment. I was enumerating what this self-called despot was doing for the Italian people.

Thirteenth. He has increased the army, navy, and air service of Italy.

Fourteenth. His autocratic rule is as complete as that of the Bolsheviks in Russia and infinitely more concentrated, as it is all in himself.

Fifteenth. The methods of Mussolini and the methods of Lenin and Trotsky are exactly the same. Originally they held the same views and probably Mussolini's views have not changed much. The only difference between the two systems is that Lenin and Trotsky murdered the royal family in Russia, and in Italy Mussolini let them live and bought them off.

Mr. President, there is no use in our camouflaging this situation. These are the plain facts. Does free America, does liberty-loving America, does justice-loving America want to uphold and defend, furnish the sinews of war and make secure for all time this dictator bandit, or would we like to help the Italian people? To my mind this is the great question before us. I not only believe that if we ratify this settlement we will do great injury to the American people, and especially to the American taxpayers, but I believe we will do a greater injury to the Italian people. We would be just as well justified to recognize Russia and take up the cudgels for the autocratic soviet régime in Russia as to ratify this settlement with Mussolini and take up the cudgels for his autocratic rule.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Before the Senator gets away from this other thought—

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator was asked, in an ironical way, whether he thought Mussolini was going to pay these debts. I beg to suggest that Mr. Mussolini has a good deal to do with the present ability to pay.

Mr. McKELLAR. Indeed he has.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Which is the test we are now applying.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator for his contribution to the debate.

INTERNAL AFFAIRS

But, Mr. President, it is said that we have no right to be concerned about Italy's internal affairs. That we have no right to criticize the government that it now has. Why, Mr. President, the proposed settlement affects the internal affairs of both nations. It affects the internal affairs of America by taking an indebtedness of a billion and a half dollars off of the taxpayers of Italy and placing the burden upon the taxpayers of America. It is in every sense an international affair. It is absolutely proper that we should inquire whether this great gift of the American people is going to benefit the Italian people or whether it is going to inure to the personal and political fortunes of a revolutionist dictator. I say again that I would have a thousand times rather cancel the Italian debt if thereby it would inure to an orderly, peaceful, free, righteous government of the people of Italy, but I can not reach the conclusion that we ought to be thus liberal with a revolutionary government that may fall at any time.

MUSSOLINI'S AMBITION

Almost daily we see the evidences of Mussolini's ambition. From his published statements, it is perfectly apparent that he feels he is another Caesar or another Napoleon. He has visions of empire. He imagines himself as being the Man on Horseback. Of course he has no regard for financial obligations. In my own judgment I do not believe he would have ever sent a commission over here to treat about these past obligations had it not been for his desire to raise $100,000,000 by a loan in America. His only regard for financial obligations is to get finances to back up his ambition. He wants to get rid of these debts to America and Great Britain naturally. He sends his agents over here and they plead bankruptcy, and while they are pleading bankruptcy over here, he is holding out to the Italian people in his speeches visions of the revived glory of Rome. He tells them he is going to build them a new Rome greater than the old Rome, a new empire greater than the old empire. He is undertaking to dazzle their imaginations and awaken their ambitions, and all for his own selfish ambition, and we are told by our debt-funding commission that we must help him. Mr. President, why should free America undertake to aid this bandit in his exploitation of the Italian people? We all know that Mr. Mussolini has flouted his treaties made solemnly with other nations. He has invaded territory of others in violation of those treaties. He has flouted the League of Nations of which his government is a member. He has tried to bring on war with Germany. He has disregarded, not only the right of individuals in his own country, but he has disregarded the right of every free nation of the world. Of course, Mr. President, under these circumstances, we have a right, nay, it is our greatest duty, to look into the nature of this government to which we are offering the enormous prize of more than a billion and a half of dollars.

NO HARD BARGAIN

But it is said that those of us who oppose this treaty want to drive a hard bargain with Italy. This is not true. I would not want to drive a hard bargain with Italy. I would be glad to be exceedingly lenient to her, but I think, considering the government she has, considering her resources, considering her capacity to pay, that the insignificant sum that we are demanding from her in this proposed settlement is permitting her to escape from her just obligations. Why should she be given better terms than is given Belgium, when Belgium lost her all during the war? Belgium has a constitutional government. She has a just and honorable man at her head. She does not present the spectacle of revolution, of violence, of anarchy, and yet the settlement with Italy is infinitely better for her than was our settlement with Belgium.

Why should we give Italy better terms than we give France? Nay, why should we give any of them better terms than we gave to our own kindred in Great Britain. Practically every real argument that has been made in favor of this settlement could have been made for these other countries. Great Britain raises on her farms but a fraction of what she consumes. France does not raise what she consumes. Belgium does not raise what she consumes. Every argument that has been made in reference to the resources of Italy could, with equal force be made with regard to the natural resources of each of the other nations.

It is not true, Mr. President, that anybody is trying to drive a hard bargain with Italy. Ah, Mr. President, the hard bargain in this case is not toward Italy, but it is toward the American people. The hard bargain that this commission is undertaking to drive home is to make this Congress ratify and confirm one of the hardest bargains that was ever proposed toward the American people. The hard bargain that is being undertaken to be riveted upon the American people is to take an indebtedness of a billion and a half of dollars off of the backs of the people of Italy and place it upon the backs of the American taxpayers.

ARMY, NAVY, AND AIR FORCE

Mr. President, in considering Italy's ability to pay us more, our Debt Commission did not seem to take into consideration the relatively enormous sums that are now being expended by Italy on her army, navy, and air service, in other words, the sum that she is now spending to prepare for war. The despot of Italy—and he calls himself that—as I have heretofore pointed out, is anxious to make war. He is building up his army and his navy and his air service for that purpose. America has an army of about 125,000 men. Italy has an active standing army of 220,898 men. She has organized reserves of 947,912 and unorganized reserves of 1,500,000. She has 18,000 military officers, and she has a police force—the Italian cheka—of 290,000. Its police force is more than twice as big as our army, and yet, Mr. President, we are furnishing the sinews of war for Mussolini to maintain this great standing army, which is a constant menace to the peace of Europe. We are helping him do it. In addition to that, Italy has a navy of 5 battleships and battle cruisers, she has 15 lighter cruisers, she has 135 destroyers and torpedo boats, and she has 2,460 officers and 43,000 men in her navy. And we are called upon in this settlement to tax the American people to keep up this great naval army. What need has Italy for this naval armament anyway? The only purpose of it can be and the only purpose of this army can be to prey upon weaker nations around her, and yet we are helping her to maintain both army and navy.

Mr. Mussolini has recently organized an air service and is spending large sums for that. He has 753 officers in his air service and more than 10,000 enlisted men. When our Debt Commission were considering Italy's ability to pay, did they consider the lessening of the Italian Army and the Italian Navy as they should have done?

I herewith attach as Exhibit B statements from the library concerning the army, navy and air service of Italy. I call especial attention of Senators to this statement. It is a very enlightening one.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

[See Exhibit B.]

BUDGET

Mr. McKELLAR. In this connection, Mr. President, I call the especial attention of Senators to Italy's budget. She spent for the year ending June 30, 1925, about $850,000,000. More than half of it she spent under the heading of "Treasury and finance." Probably $140,000,000 of this was spent in interest on her internal bonds and other obligations. What the other $350,000,000 was spent for, we do not know. She spent $6,000,000 more on foreign affairs, $17,000,000 on colonies, $50,000,000 on education, $37,000,000 on interior, $45,000,000 on public works, $48,000,000 on communications, $95,000,000 on war, $42,000,000 on the navy, and about $20,000,000 on air service, and $7,000,000 on agriculture, commerce, and labor combined. In other words, apparently out of the $850,000,000 spent by her in 1925, probably half of it was spent in interest on bonds which financed past wars, and about $170,000,000 on future wars, or preparing for future wars, and little or nothing on building up her country. It seems to me, Mr. President, our Debt Commission ought to have insisted that she cut her great standing army in two. It would be better for Italy, better for her people and better for the civilized world. If she had done so, she could have paid Great Britain twice as much as she did pay and have paid America what she in equity and good conscience should have paid America.

COMPARISON OF BRITISH AND AMERICAN SETTLEMENTS

But the advocates of this settlement say that Italy's debt to Great Britain was between two and a half and three billions of dollars, and that under the British settlement she does not pay Great Britain much more than she pays America. Ah, Mr. President, there is a reason for this. The reason is to be found in the secret agreements that have come to light. During the war she was promised by Great Britain that if she went into the war and stayed in the war, equitable adjustments of this indebtedness would be made, and it was this factor that accounts for the remarkable settlement that she obtained from Great Britain, but even then, Mr. President, Great Britain got the best of it, because she has in her own possession more than $110,000,000 of gold to carry out the debt settlement made by her.

But, Mr. President, we have no such secret agreement with Italy. The result of our going into the World War was for Italy's benefit. We also lent her a billion dollars for war purposes, and after the war was over we lent her an additional $648,000,000. In other words, Mr. President, not for war purposes, but for peace purposes, for rehabilitation purposes, we lent the Italian Government $648,000,000. Under this settlement we cancelled about one-third of this $648,000,000 and all of the thousand million we lent her for war purposes. Surely we have done our part. The obligations of Great Britain and our obligations toward Italy are very different. As I understand it, all of Great Britain's money was spent by Italy for war purposes. Whatever may be said of the thousand million loan to Italy for war purposes, surely she should pay back the $648,000,000 she borrowed from us after the war was over, together with the same rate of interest on it that we pay.

THE SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA'S BAD PICTURE

Mr. President, I was greatly interested in the splendid speech made by the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]. I was greatly touched by his pathos as he described the poverty of the Italian people, the bleak hills on which they live, their wasted homes, and their lack of fuel. Mr. President, I have not traveled all over Italy as the Senator from Pennsylvania apparently has, but I traveled in the northern portion of the country two years ago. I did not see the suffering then that he depicts. That part of it that he speaks of as bleak hills I thought as beautiful as I had ever seen. The eye can not imagine anything much prettier than the mountains and the valleys in northern Italy. Their crops appear to be abundant. Their houses were in good order, much better than many of the houses that many of our people live in, their lands were better tilled than ours. Grapes were growing everywhere, and I could see little evidence of the misery which the Senator from Pennsylvania describes.

But, as I say, I did not go over all of it, and I can only call attention to that which I saw. And, furthermore, I say that the description that Senator REED gives of Italy in his pathetic but powerful plea, that we should make a present to the present Italian Government of a billion and a half dollars, differs wholly from the picture as painted by Mr. Mussolini, which I have heretofore read.

Ah, Mr. President, speaking of pictures, the very day that the distinguished and able Senator made his speech, as I left my hotel I came by an employment office on Pennsylvania Avenue and there stood dozens of citizens standing around waiting for the office to open, with the hope of getting employment; and involuntarily, as I listened to the eloquent plea of the distinguished Senator for Italy, for Mussolini, for building up the power of a despot and a dictator, I could not help but think that perhaps our charity had better begin at home.

More than that, Mr. President, as I listened to him my mind turned to a visit I paid to western Pennsylvania several years ago when there was a great steel strike on and when I was sent with other Senators to investigate and see if an adjustment of it could not be found. I recall one morning that I went to the little town of Monessen—if I remember the name correctly—and examined into the homes of the people who lived there, and I was unable to speak to any of them, and they were unable to speak to me, because they did not know our language, and I did not know any of theirs. I was told that out of the 23,000 people who lived there, 21,000 of them could not speak the English language and only 2,000 of them could. I was told also that they spoke 26 different languages. I found, through interpreters, that they were unfamiliar with our institutions, that they did not go to American schools, that they had very little education, and that many of them did not really understand that for which they were striking. This town is a suburb of the great city in which the distinguished Senator lives. There are numerous other little towns around there and all in relatively similar situations, as we found on investigation. And as I listened to the eloquence of the great Senator from Pennsylvania, my mind could not help but turn again to his neighbors near Pittsburgh and wonder if it would not be better to use a part of this billion and a half that we are going to turn over to an Italian despot to make his neighbors a little better Americans, to give them a better training in citizenship, to give them a better chance in their race of life. Again, Mr. President, it seems to me that charity ought to begin at home.

Again, Mr. President, down in my own country there are many people whose lives are just as hard as the lives of those who live in Italy. They have not as good homes to shelter them. They have no better food to give them nourishment. They have no better advantages than have the Italians, and I am wondering whether it would not be better to use a portion of this billion and a half of dollars in improving their conditions.

Ah, Mr. President, one other illustration. In the great cities of our country there are many poor people. Their lives are hard in the extreme. Many of them do not get the necessities of life. It is a constant struggle with them to live, right here in our own country. Oh, when we are distributing charity, when we have a billion and a half dollars to give away, and to give away to an Italian despot, would not it be a little better and a little more human to make the lives of our own people better and happier and more successful. I was touched indeed by the plea of the distinguished Senator for the people of another country; but, Mr. President, as long as there is suffering and want in our own country, as long as there are poor housing conditions in our own country, as long as there is unemployment and poverty and want, it seems to me that it is the duty of us as representatives to be just to our own people before we are generous to the people of other nations, and especially before we are generous to a man who proudly declares himself to be a despot, ruling by force and violence, without regard, as it seems, for either God or man, for law at home, or for contract abroad.

Oh, Mr. President, it is little short of a crime to give this vast sum of money to this Italian despot. A settlement to-day means nothing because if the Italian people ever come to themselves and shake off this yoke of tyranny, one of the first things they will do will be to repudiate his acts in this settlement as well as in all things else, and the people of the United States will have yet again to settle with the representatives of the Italian people. In making these remarks, Mr. President, I have no hard feeling against the Italian people. Their plight may indeed be pitiable but no more pitiable than many people in this country. I for one here declare that when it comes to charity, as in all else, that I believe in America first.

EXHIBIT A

STATESMAN'S YEARBOOK, 1925

PAUPERISM

In Italy legal charity, in the sense of a right in the poor to be supported by the parish or commune, or of an obligation on the commune to relieve the poor, does not exist. Public charity in general is exercised through the permanent charitable foundations, called "Istituzioni pubbliche di beneficenza" (Opere pie), regulated by the law of July 17, 1890. The general results of an inquiry in 1900 were: Leaving out of account institutions intended for lending or for the encouragement of saving (that is, monti di pietà, monti frumentari, casse di prestanze agrarie), there were 27,078 opere pie, with a gross capital of about 2,205,000,000 lire. Their net income amounted to 52,559,000 lire. Added to this net income were casual legacies, contributions from private benefactors, subsidies from communes (for hospitals), etc., all of which receipts are spent annually, and thus the sum at the disposal of the opere pie in 1900 (last available data) amounted to 120,765,000 lire. Between 1901 and 1917 the capital of all the benevolent institutions was increased by 385,000,000 lire. On December 31, 1921, the charitable foundations numbered 34,463, and their capital was 2,786,372,770 lire.

FINANCE

REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE

Direct taxes are those on lands, on houses, and on incomes derived from movable capital and labor. The tax on houses is at the rate of 12.5 per cent (with three-tenths additional) of the amount taxable, which is two-thirds of the real annual value in the case of factories and three-fourths in the case of dwelling houses. The tax on incomes from movable wealth was raised to 20 per cent of the amount taxable. The communes and Provinces also tax lands and buildings. The State grants to the communes one-tenth of the proceeds of the tax on incomes as compensation for other communal revenues made over to the State by various laws.

The principal indirect taxes are the customs duties, the octroi, the taxes on manufactures, the salt and tobacco monopolies, lotto.

In the financial year 1922-23 the revenue from State property was: Ecclesiastical, 272,364 lire; from fixed capital, 17,361,169 lire; from the Cavour Canals, 6,037,728 lire; various, 2,477,064 lire; total, 26,748,925.

DEFENSE

I. FRONTIER

The extent of the land frontier of Italy is as follows: French frontier, 300 miles; Swiss, 418; Austrian, 566; frontier of San Marino, 24; in all (exclusive of San Marino), 1,284 miles. The coast line of the peninsula measures 2,052 miles; of Sicily, 630; of Sardinia, 830; of Elba and the small islands, 648; the total length of coast is thus 4,160 miles.

On the Continental frontier of Italy the principal passes of the Alps are defended by fortifications. The basin of the Po is also studded with fortified places; the chief strong places in the region are the following: Casale, Piacenza, Verona, Mantua (these two belong to the old Austrian Quadrilateral), Venice, Alessandria. On the coasts and islands are the following fortified places: Vado, Genoa, Spezia, Monte Argentario, Gaeta; works in the Straits of Messina, Taranto. To the north of Sardinia a group of fortified islands form the naval station of Maddalena. Rome is protected by a circle of forts.

II. ARMY

Service in the army (or navy) is compulsory and universal. The total period is 19 years, beginning at the age of 20. The young men of the year are divided into three categories; the first being posted to the permanent army; the second also to the permanent army, but with "unlimited leave"; and the third—that is, those exempted from active service—to the territorial militia. The second-category men form what is called the "complementary force."

The term of service in the ranks of the permanent army is 18 months for all arms. After passing through the ranks, the men are placed on "unlimited leave"; that is, they are transferred to the reserve, in which they remain until they have completed a total of eight years' service. From the reserve the soldier passes to the mobile militia, the term of service in which is four years. After completing his time in the mobile militia he is transferred to the territorial militia, in which he remains seven years; thus finishing his military service at the age of 39.

The second-category recruits are regarded as belonging to the permanent army for the first eight years of their service. During this period they receive from two to six months' training, which may be spread over several years. They then pass to the mobile militia, and afterwards to the territorial militia, the periods of service in each being the same as in the case of the first category soldiers. The men allotted to the third category, who are posted at once to the territorial militia, receive 30 days' training.

In Italy each regiment receives recruits from all parts of the country, and the troops change their stations by brigades every four years. On mobilization regiments would be filled up by reservists from the districts in which they are quartered at the time. Reliefs are so arranged that at least half the reservists shall have previously served in the unit which they would join on mobilization.

The field army is organized into 10 territorial army corps, subdivided into 30 divisions and 2 cavalry divisions, and includes the general staff and commands of the larger units, the royal carabinieri, infantry, cavalry, artillery, engineers, aerial corps, the military districts, invalid and veteran corps, mechanical transport, railway transport, medical corps, supply corps, administrative services, veterinary corps, the military schools, institutes, and various technical establishments, the army and navy supreme tribunal and the military penal establishments.

Besides the above-mentioned units, the volunteer militia for national security was formed by decree of August 1, 1924. It is organized in 12 areas and 95 legions. Its members are required to fulfill the normal obligations of service in the active army. The establishment of the active army in 1924 was: Officers, 18,000; other ranks, 290,000, inclusive of Carabinieri.

The army corps consists of 2 divisions, the divisions of 2 brigades of infantry each of 3 battalions, and of artillery, engineers, and auxiliary services. A regiment of Bersaglieri and a proportion of heavy artillery will be attached to each army corps.

Each regiment of Bersaglieri (light infantry) consists of 3 battalions of infantry and 1 battalion of cyclists, the cyclists being intended to supplement the cavalry in the field. The Alpini are frontier troops, specially organized to defend the mountain passes leading into Italy; they consist of 8 regiments (26 battalions) of Alpine infantry and 2 regiments of 86 mountain artillery batteries.

Cavalry divisions each consist of 2 brigades of 2 regiments and of a horse-artillery regiment. Each cavalry regiment comprises regimental headquarters, 2 squadron groups, and 1 depot squadron.

The regiments of field artillery, heavy field artillery, heavy and coast artillery each comprise 1 headquarters, 4 groups, and a depot. The mechanically transported artillery is composed of a headquarters, 5 groups, and a depot. The regiment of horse artillery comprises 1 headquarters, 2 groups, and a depot.

The carabinieri are a force of military police. They are recruited by selection from the army and remain in the force for three years. They then serve in the reserve of the carabinieri for four years, after which they are transferred to the territorial militia for the remainder of their service and are reckoned as a part of the army. In 1924 the Carabinieri numbered 60,000; the public safety police 30,000 and the customs guards 30,000.

The garrison of Libya consists of 4 infantry battalions, 4 companies mounted infantry, and 3 mountain batteries of colonial troops recruited voluntarily in Italy for three years' service. The native army consists of 10 battalions, 6 squadrons, 4 mountain batteries, 3 camel squadrons, etc.

The Italians have a special African corps in Erythrea consisting of 2 companies of white infantry and 4 native battalions; also 12 native machine-gun sections, a local company of artillery (Italians), and a native mountain battery. Its total strength is about 5,500 of all ranks.

In Italian Somaliland there is a native corps of 10 infantry companies, 1 camel company, and 1 artillery company, with Italian officers, and a body of military police. Total strength, about 3,000 of all ranks.

III. AIR FORCE

By royal decree of April, 1923, the Italian royal air force is constituted as a separate force under a high commissioner for aviation. Detachments of the royal air force doing duty with the army and navy are for the time under the control of these services. The expenditure for 1924 was estimated at 399,000,000 lire. The number of airplanes in possession of the air force was 1,500, of which about 850 were available for active employment. It is proposed to increase this number to 4,500, of which 1,500 will be with the active force, 1,500 in second line, and 1,500 in third line. The royal air force is organized in one division of 6 regiments, and comprises 17 squadrons of airplanes, 5 squadrons of seaplanes, and 1 group of dirigibles.

IV. NAVY

The future of the Italian Navy is yet uncertain, but developments are contemplated. The treaty of Washington makes Italy the equal of France in capital-ship tonnage, and establishes a replacement tonnage at 175,000 tons (177,800 metric), but the existing ships have a gross displacement of only 135,100 metric tons. The complete new program, 1923-24 to 1927-28, which is really for replacements, includes 5 cruisers of 10,000 tons, 20 destroyers, and 20 submarines. Italy may begin to build capital ships, if she should so desire, in 1927, but there will be no compulsory scrapping until 1931.

The navy underwent complete revision and much reduction after the armistice. The armored cruisers are of little value. The list of light cruisers has been expanded by the accession of five enemy vessels. No large shipbuilding is contemplated, and all attention is directed to the flotillas and to the naval air service. In the 1923-24 estimates were 2 light cruisers, 4 destroyers, and 4 submarines, and the same program is to be repeated in 1924-25. Mine layers and other vessels are also in the program. There were considerable reductions in the personnel, but now there is to be expansion. The expenditure in 1922-23 was 614,182,767 lire, and the estimates of 1923-24 amount to a total sum of 773,616,662 lire.

The naval administration is under the Minister of Marine, with an assistant secretary; a chief of staff; a superior board, which controls the general administration and advises on policy. Under its direction are the heads of the various services of the personnel, naval constructors (genio navale), ordnance, equipment, engineering, and civil administration. A civil officer administers the department of the merchant marine, which is under the direction of the assistant secretary for the navy. For purposes of local naval administration there are rear admirals at all the important ports, while the naval commands are at Spezia, Naples, Taranto, and Venice. There are torpedo stations all round the coast. Summary of the Italian Navy:

The five cruisers last named are ex-enemy vessels. There are nine modern flotilla leaders, ranging upward from 1,300 tons to 2,350 tons and a speed from 33 to 37 knots. Twelve of the light cruisers and other smaller vessels are equipped as mine layers and carry large supplies.

The large flotilla of destroyers are composed of 30 and 35 knot vessels, very effective in character, and there are flotillas of quite modern torpedo boats. Considerable additions are being made. The flotilla leaders and destroyers include three ex-German and five ex-Austrian. The naval flying service is being developed.

The personnel consists of over 1,000 officers and 40,000 men, including 10,000 volunteers, which latter number is to be increased to 15,000.

PRODUCTION AND INDUSTRY

I. AGRICULTURE

The systems of cultivation in Italy may be reduced to three: (1) The system of peasant proprietorship (coltivazione per economia o a mano propria); (2) that of partnership (colonia parziaria); (3) that of rent (affitto). Peasant proprietorship is most common in Piedmont and Liguria, but is found in many other parts of Italy. The system of partnership or colonia parziaria, more especially in the form of mezzadria, consists in a form of partnership between the proprietor and the cultivator. This system is general in Tuscany, the Marches, and Umbria. Large farms (la grande coltura) exist in the neighborhood of Vercelli, Pavia, Milan, Cremona, Chioggia, Ferrara, Grosseto, Rome, Caserta, and in Apulia, the Basilicata, Calabria, and at Girgenti and Trapani in Sicily. In Italy generally the land is much subdivided.

The area of Italy comprises 71,652,592 acres. Of this area 65,995,000 acres are under crops and 5,662,500 acres are waste.

Number of proprietors in Italy, 1911: Proprietors of lands, 1,326,736; of buildings, 732,484; of lands and buildings, 1,737,341; total, 3,796,561. Proprietors of lands and buildings (3,796,561) per 100 of population, 11; proprietors of lands (3,064,077) per square mile, 27.

The principal crops for three years were as follows:

In 1918 Italy had 989,786 horses, 949,162 asses, 496,743 mules, 6,239,741 cattle, 24,026 buffaloes, 2,338,926 pigs, 11,753,910 sheep, and 3,082,558 goats.

Silk culture, while flourishing most extensively in Lombardy, Piedmont, and Venetia, is carried on all over Italy. In 1923 the production of cocoons was 12,365,833 kilos; in 1922, 9,457,633 kilos; in 1921, 8,797,168 kilos.

II. FORESTRY

The forest area (belonging to the state) on June 30, 1921, was 115,629 hectares (289,072 acres). The yield from these forests was valued as follows in 1920-21: Timber, 26,933 cubic meters; firewood, 248,960 cubic meters; of a total value of 3,724,282 lire.

This total is exclusive of secondary produce valued at about 55,000,000 lire annually. The forest produce thus amounts to 225,000,000 lire. From 1867 to June 30, 1915, 33,555 hectares were replanted by or with assistance from the Government.

III. MINES AND MINERALS

The Italian mining industry is most developed in Sicily (Caltanissetta), in Tuscany (Arezzo, Florence, and Grosseto), in Sardinia (Cagliari, Sassari, and Iglesias), in Lombardy (particularly near Bergamo and Brescia), and in Piedmont.

Production in metric tons (1 metric ton=2,204 pounds or 1,019 metric tons=1,000 English tons) of metallic ores and other minerals in 1922:

The quarries of Italy employed in 1922, 48,073 persons (1,193 females), the output of building and decorative stone being valued at 323,945,716 lire.

IV. FISHERIES

On December 31, 1915, the number of vessels and boats employed in fishing was 26,725, with an aggregate tonnage of 70,443. These numbers include 48 boats of 419 tons engaged in coral fishing. There were 162,755 fishermen, of whom 6,902 were engaged in deep-sea or foreign fishing. The value of the fish caught in 1916 (excluding foreign fishing) was estimated at 17,473,503 lire; the value obtained from tunny fishing was in 1915, 221,331 lire, and from coral fishing 350,340 lire, the quantity being estimated at 327 kilograms.

V. MANUFACTURES

The Italian industrial census of June 10, 1911, showed that there were 243,926 industrial establishments in the country, having 2,304,438 employees and possessing 1,620,404 horsepower.

Cotton is an important industry. In 1923, 584,000,000 yards of single width and 203,000,000 yards of double width of cotton were woven.

On June 30, 1923, there were 785 silk-spinning mills and 193 weaving mills.

The manufacture of sugar is growing in importance. Sugar output (in metric tons) in 1904-5, 74,831; in 1905-6, 90,377; 1910-11, 169,250; 1913-14, 269,946; 1914-15, 146,888; 1919-20, 167,767; 1922-23, 264,250.

On December 31, 1923, the gold reserve amounted to 1,117,609,981 lire, the silver reserve to 125,010,387 lire, and the note circulation to 17,246,678,450 lire.

On June 30, 1918, there were 747 cooperative credit societies and popular banks, 1,904 rural banks, 221 ordinary credit companies, and 10 agrarian credit institutions, and (January, 1921) 11 credit foncier companies, of which 4 were in liquidation, with 752,185,375 lire of "cartelle fondiarie" in circulation, and with 727,830,047 lire of "mutui con ammortamento."

Deposits in the savings banks on June 30, 1924, were as follows: Post-office savings banks, 9,430,614,448 lire; ordinary savings banks, 10,331,121 lire.

On June 30, 1923, the savings deposited with the cooperative credit and ordinary credit companies amounted to 7,321,000,000 lire, and Monti di piet , 506,000,000 lire, and with Casse rurali, 797,000,000 lire.

On August 12, 1912, a law came into operation establishing life insurance as a State monopoly. The existing insurance companies were allowed to continue their operations for 10 years under certain conditions. The National Insurance Institute carries out the Government business. It started operations on January 1, 1913, and has already assumed large proportions, having absorbed the business of 24 insurance companies (15 foreign and 9 Italian). According to the law, the companies which at the end of 1911 were engaged in life insurance in the kingdom which did not cede their business to the Government were given the privilege of continuing their business for not more than 10 years, with the obligation of turning over to the Government Institute 40 per cent of the business done after the beginning of the new regime. Only 3 Italian and 9 foreign companies continued business in Italy under these conditions, and later one of these also ceded its business to the institute. Branches of the National Institute of Insurance were established in every Province of Italy, 2,386 branches in all.

The insurance effected by the institute in the years 1922 and 1921 was as follows:

[Margaret G. B. Blachly, Mar. 31, 1926.]

Mr. HEFLIN obtained the floor.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for two minutes?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I do not think that the remarks of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] should go into the Record or go upon the telegraph wires unchallenged. I believe that in his expression of hostility toward the Prime Minister of Italy and toward the present Government of Italy he speaks almost alone in the American Senate. I believe that the vast majority of this body recognize the right of Italy to establish such a government as she pleases, not as we please, and that if that government preserves order, respects property rights and contracts, guarantees foreigners full safety of person and protection for their property, and if it acts with good faith toward us in its international dealings, it is none of our business, Mr. President, what system of internal government, given those requisites, the Italians may see fit to establish to themselves.

The Senator from Tennessee has been talking about the present government of a friendly nation for whom we have the highest respect and feelings of friendship, and yet his words sound as if they were leading up to a declaration of war against that nation rather than a consideration of a bargain worked out in full amity and unanimously approved by the representatives of the United States.

The Italian people are patriotic; they will resent what the Senator from Tennessee has said; and I should like them to know that he speaks for himself alone and not for the rest of us who sat here listening to him. The Italians are not only patriotic but they are an industrious and deeply religious people, and what the Senator from Tennessee has said can not help but wound their feelings. Under the Constitution the Senator has a right to say whatever he pleases on the floor of the Senate, but he has no right to commit us to the sentiments of hostility that he has expressed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, is the Senator from Pennsylvania now speaking for the Italian people?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am speaking for the American Senate and for our sentiments toward a nation with which our relations are most friendly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, I imagine that the American Senate will speak for itself when it comes to a show-down on this question, and I doubt very much whether the Senator from Pennsylvania, eloquent as he may be and strong as he may be, speaks for the American Senate. We shall later see how that works.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEFLIN. I can not yield any further just now until I shall have made my statement.

Mr. KING. Very well.

THOMAS JEFFERSON

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, this is the anniversary of the birthday of a great Democrat, the author of the Declaration of Independence, the founder of the Democratic Party, a former President of the United States—Thomas Jefferson. I hold in my hand a newspaper which is published in Washington, known as the Pathfinder. It contains the two definitions of a Democrat which recently won the two highest prizes. Thirty thousand people submitted definitions as to what is a Democrat. The one winning the first prize reads as follows:

First prize in our "What is a Democrat?" contest is awarded Dr. M. D. Taylor, county health officer at Aztec, N. Mex. His definition, which captured the $50 prize, follows:

"A Democrat is one who believes in the fullest freedom of speech, press, and religion; and separation of church and State; laws that bear equally upon all classes, without special privilege or monopolistic advantage; rights of States guaranteed by the Constitution; and less national paternalism."

The second prize was won by the brilliant and efficient representative of the minority on the floor of the Senate—Col. Edwin Alexander Halsey. His definition reads as follows:

A Democrat is one who votes to adhere to the principles of the party as expounded by Jefferson, Cleveland, and Wilson; which assure personal liberty, freedom of religion, speech, and press; equal justice, industry, frugality, and happiness; abhorring corruption and privilege, and preserving inviolate the Republic in vigor and union.

Mr. President, I would add to that list of great Democratic Presidents the name of the immortal Jackson, so that it would read "Jefferson, Jackson, Cleveland, and Wilson." I commend these definitions to Democrats everywhere and to the whole people of the United States generally, and I join with the thousands and hundreds of thousands throughout the Nation who to-day honor the name and principles of Thomas Jefferson.

INDEBTEDNESS OF ITALY TO THE UNITED STATES

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6773) to authorize the settlement of the indebtedness of the Kingdom of Italy to the United States of America.

Mr. COPELAND and Mr. KING addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, we have been reminded by the Senator from Alabama that to-day is the anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson. I am sure the Senator from Tennessee will not misunderstand me when I say to him that I am afraid he forgot it was Jefferson's birthday. I want to join in the protest against what has been said to-day. I recall that when Thomas Jefferson died—

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Instead of the Senator from Tennessee forgetting that to-day is Mr. Jefferson's birthday, he is a devoted follower of that great statesman and the principles and policies for which he stood, and I have the honor of having been invited—and I expect to accept the invitation—to make a speech to-night at Chambersburg, Pa., in memory of Jefferson.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I trust that in his speech at Chambersburg, Pa., to-night the Senator from Tennessee will not repeat what he has said in the Senate to-day.

I recall when Mr. Jefferson died there was found in his papers a statement of the inscription he wanted placed upon his tombstone. He did not say that he wanted placed upon his tombstone the words, "Here lies Thomas Jefferson, former Governor of the great State of Virginia." He did not say that he wanted placed upon it the inscription "Here lies Thomas Jefferson, former President of the United States." But he did say that he wanted placed upon his tombstone the inscription, "Here lies Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence, author of the statute of religious freedom for the State of Virginia, and father of the University of Virginia."

Mr. Jefferson took pride, first, in the fact that he believed in political freedom.

If Italy desires to have Mussolini for its dictator, that is Italy's business. It is not the business of the Government of the United States; it is not the business of the United States Senate; it is the business of Italy.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, does the Senator mean to inform the Senate and the country by what he has said that, in his belief, if Mr. Jefferson were alive to-day, being the great lover of liberty and freedom that Mr. Jefferson undoubtedly was, he would be defending, as apparently the Senator from New York is defending, the dictatorship of Mr. Mussolini in Italy or a dictator in any other country?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, Mr. Jefferson would not be defending any act of cruelty or intolerance upon the part of Mr. Mussolini. Neither am I seeking to defend any such act; but Mr. Mussolini has the position which he occupies in Italy by the choice, or at least by the acquiescence of the Italian people.

Mr. McKELLAR. O Mr. President—

Mr. COPELAND. And I have no doubt, Mr. President, that if Mr. Jefferson were alive to-day he would take the position that some Senators have taken here in opposition to the attitude of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. I dissent to the statement that Mussolini occupies his present position as a result of the choice of the Italian people. He is a dictator to-day because the person who shot at him last week was such a poor marksman that she hit his nose instead of his head.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the second inscription that Mr. Jefferson asked to have placed upon his tombstone was, "Here lies Thomas Jefferson, author of the statute of religious freedom in the State of Virginia." No matter what Mr. Mussolini may think about religion or about religious institutions, I think, so far as we are concerned, that it is not for us to criticize or dictate to Mr. Mussolini or the Italian people in that regard.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield further to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Remembering that Mr. Jefferson was the great defender of religious freedom by word and act in this country, does the Senator believe that if Mr. Jefferson were alive he would give countenance to, directly or indirectly, or give expression of his approval, directly or indirectly, to any ruler who sought to drive out, as has been claimed here to-day of Mussolini, a portion of his people and do violence to them because of their professed religious belief? If the Senator has that sort of a view of Thomas Jefferson, I must say that it is the first time I ever heard such a view expressed.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator from Tennessee now refer to the attitude of Mr. Mussolini toward the Masonic movement?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Masonic movement. It has been claimed that it was a religious act on the part of Mr. Mussolini; that he was driving out the Masons of Italy because of his devotion to the church in Italy. Does the Senator believe that that is the religious freedom for which Mr. Jefferson gave the best years of his life? If he has any such view as that about Jefferson, I ask him to go and read again the life and character and record of Mr. Jefferson.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Tennessee has misstated—unintentionally, of course—the position that Mr. Mussolini has assumed toward Masonry in Italy.

I referred a few moments ago, in replying to the Senator from Tennessee, to the fact that in the State of New York our legislature saw fit to pass an act making it unlawful for any organized institution in that State to have a secret membership. It was required of every institution that it should give publicity to the rolls of its membership. The act sought to take the mask from persons who were marching about in certain sections of our State in opposition to the best thought of our people, in my judgment; and, if I am correctly advised, that is what Mr. Mussolini insists shall be done in Italy.

I do not regard Masonry in Italy as at all like Masonry in the United States. It is an entirely different institution; and, to get back to the question of the Senator from Tennessee, I believe that if Mr. Jefferson were alive and active to-day he would be taking this position too.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not believe it.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator does not approve, does he, of the action taken by Mussolini against the Masons and against the Methodists and the Baptists and the Catholics over there?

Mr. COPELAND. I assume that the Senator from Montana is setting a trap for the Senator from New York.

Mr. WHEELER. No; I am not setting any trap—nothing of the kind.

Mr. COPELAND. I want to say, as I have said before to-day and in my own formal address a few days ago, that I hold no brief for Mr. Mussolini. If this matter of the debt settlement hinged upon Mr. Mussolini, I presume I should take exactly the same attitude that the Senator from Tennessee assumes; but now I want to go on with what I was going to say.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon the trespass, Thomas Jefferson, if he were alive, in my opinion would look beyond the acts of any man, whether he were a dictator or an oligarch, and look at the people. He would look at the Italian people and seek to understand their aspirations and to aid them in all movements which they might make toward higher liberty and toward greater freedom. Because for the moment there may be a dictator, Mr. Jefferson, if he were alive, would not attack that government. He might seek by argument and reason, if he had the opportunity, to advance the cause of liberty, and to lead them to the abolition in the proper way of any tyranny or intolerance existing in their own land.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator from Utah for his high sentiments.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. BORAH. The reasoning of the Senator from Utah might lead him to favor the recognition of Russia.

Mr. KING. No; it will not lead to a recognition of Russia, for the reason that the people of Russia are not in favor of a dictatorship, and the communistic organization there is not, by reason of its record, entitled to the recognition of the United States. If the question before us were whether we should recognize Mussolini and his Government as a de facto or as a de jure government, a different question might be presented. We have recognized the de facto and the de jure existence of the Government of Italy, and we found no reason to withdraw that recognition.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just one moment?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to answer one suggestion made by the junior Senator from Utah.

Not only would the reasoning of the Senator from Utah lead him into a recognition of the Soviet Government of Russia, as has been suggested by the Senator from Idaho, but it would lead him not to remember the views of Mr. Jefferson himself, because we all know that while Mr. Jefferson was our ambassador to France he took a very active part in declaring his belief in a free government for France. Mr. Jefferson had the courage at any time and at all times in his life to stand and plead for the freedom of the individual, for liberty everywhere, and that is why I am for him. Mr. Jefferson was opposed to dictators, was opposed to autocratic government, was opposed to the kind of government they have in Italy, and I do not see how any disciple of Mr. Jefferson can take any other view.

Mr. WHEELER. He would be opposed to a political dictator in New York or New Jersey or Vermont or anywhere else.

Mr. McKELLAR. Anywhere.

Mr. COPELAND. Now, Mr. President, I want to revert to what I was saying about Mr. Jefferson. However, I think these interruptions have added to the value of the hour.

The third thing that Mr. Jefferson wanted placed upon his tombstone was:

Here lies Mr. Jefferson, the father of the University of Virginia.

That was the first university to permit elections in studies; the first university where the student was permitted to choose the thing that he wanted to study. In other words, Mr. President, in politics, in religion, in education, Mr. Jefferson believed in self-determination; and I contend that the Senator from Tennessee, ardent advocate as he is of the beliefs of Mr. Jefferson, has to-day given an example of his opposition to views which, in my judgment, Mr. Jefferson would hold if he were alive to-day.

There is one other matter to which I want to refer. Of course, the Senator from Tennessee is a bachelor, and he is not informed on these matters; but he spoke about the appearance of wealth and of the well-to-do appearance of the people of Italy. I want to say to the Senator from Tennessee that there is just one sure way of knowing whether a people is a well-to-do people or whether poverty abounds, and that is by the infant death rate. The infant death rate in Italy is twice as high as it is in the United States; and that is a sure indication of poverty. I may say to the Senator from Tennessee that I hope that as he goes on in life he will come to have a more practical knowledge of all these things having to do with the family life.

When I know that the infant death rate in Italy is higher than it is in any other civilized country, I know that it is a country where poverty abounds. Let not the Senator from Tennessee say that Italy is rich and well-to-do and can pay this money, because if these mortality figures mean anything, to one who is somewhat versed in the subject, they mean that there is poverty in that country; otherwise the babies would not die like flies, as they do.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to admit frankly that I do not know anything about the subject the Senator is now discussing.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am very glad indeed that the Senator confesses that there is one subject of which he is not fully the master, as he is of all other subjects.

Mr. McKELLAR. I admit it frankly.

Mr. COPELAND. But he is a young man yet, and it must be said that he has much to learn.

So, on Jefferson's birthday I want to say from this side of the Chamber, as a Democrat, that I do not approve the sentiments expressed by my colleague from Tennessee. I think that it is wrong—and the Senator will bear with me if I say it—for a Senator of the United States to reflect, as I fear that he has reflected to-day, upon the sovereignty and upon the right of self-determination of the Italian nation, a friendly nation, and one of our allies in the late war. So I want to add my protest to the protest of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], across the aisle, against what the Senator has said.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is quite a remarkable statement for the Senator from New York to make, after having candidly admitted on the floor just a few moments ago that if he believed that Mussolini would be the beneficiary of this settlement, or substantially that, he would be inclined to vote against it; that he indorsed what I had said about Mussolini. Mussolini apparently is the bone of contention here; and after the Senator having indorsed what I said about Mussolini, I do not see how he can take issue with what I have said in reference to him. I want to say to him—I do not know whether he was here all the time or not—that all he will have to do is to look in the Record in the morning, because it will all appear there, and read what Mr. Mussolini says about himself; and if he can find there aught that is in consonance with the great principles of freedom for which Thomas Jefferson stood he is an abler man to get that out of Mr. Mussolini's statements than I have been. I see nothing in common between the two men; and I have no doubt in my own mind that if Mr. Jefferson were a Member of the Senate to-day he would be found lining up against dictatorship, against violence, against autocratic government, just as he lined up against them during all the years of his life.

Mr. BORAH and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield, and to whom?

Mr. COPELAND. Just one moment. Mr. President, nothing in my remarks, I am sure, would make anybody believe that I was comparing Thomas Jefferson to Mussolini. Nobody but the Senator from Tennessee got that idea.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has defended Mussolini on the ground that Jefferson would have defended him if he had been here.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am defending the Italian people, a friendly nation, against an attack made in the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator does not want to misrepresent what I have said. I have been defending the Italian people in everything I have said here. I have gone so far as to say that if I thought the cancellation of this debt would be to the interest of the Italian people, I might be induced to vote for its entire cancellation. I am not against the Italian people. I am defending them. I say that I do not approve of the dictatorship that the Senator from New York appears to be defending here.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, at last the Senator from Tennessee is coming to his real self. I congratulate myself and the Senate and the country that I have been able to stimulate the Senator from Tennessee into making what is really a very good speech now. I hope he will not add anything to what he has just said, because if he does he will detract from its force. He has said at last that we ought to deal with some degree of humanity with Italy, and that we ought to be lenient with them. At last he has set aside Mussolini as being unimportant in the controversy; and I congratulate him that at last he has taken a position which is tenable and sound.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have received a number of telegrams and letters from citizens of Arizona urging me to vote in favor of the measure providing for the Italian debt settlement. I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

There being no objection, the telegrams and letters were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PHOENIX, ARIZ., February 25, 1926.

HON. HENRY F. ASHURST,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We believe that the confirmation of the Italian debt settlement will be of benefit to the citizens of Arizona. The production of copper in this State is directly affected by the export of copper, which, in turn, is affected by the credit of the national who buys copper. The maintaining of copper production in Arizona is certainly in the best interests of this State. Would appreciate your using your efforts to secure confirmation of Italian debt settlement.

HENRY G. BOICE,

President Arizona Cattle Growers' Association.

PHOENIX, ARIZ., February 26, 1926.

Senator HENRY F. ASHURST,

Senate Chambers, Washington, D. C.:

The citizens of this city sincerely believe you should support Italian debt settlement as presented by the Senate Finance Committee. Italy uses great quantities of copper at present, and if their finances are cut off our State will suffer, which means all business will suffer. We urgently pray for your support.

C. B. FLYNN,

President Mesa District Chamber of Commerce.
O. B. STAPLEY.

PHOENIX, ARIZ., April 10, 1926.

Senator ASHURST,

Washington, D. C.:

The Gazette believes that the ratification of the Italian debt proposal now before Congress will be of benefit to the copper industry of Arizona in that more orders for copper will be placed in Italy and southern Europe than otherwise. We believe that this is an economic question from Arizona's standpoint and has no other important significance in this State.

JOHN HENRY WHITE,

Managing Editor.

BRYAN AKERS,

Editor and Publisher of Arizona Daily Gazette.

PHOENIX, ARIZ., February 27, 1926.

HENRY F. ASHURST,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The Italian debt settlement now before the Senate seems to be of importance to the mining industry of Arizona. As an economic problem, the sheepmen are interested in the continued operation of the mines, and for this reason request that you support the Italian debt settlement.

A. A. JOHNS,

President Arizona Woolgrowers' Association.

INSPIRATION CONSOLIDATED COPPER CO.,

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,

New York, February 24, 1926.

HON. HENRY F. ASHURST,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

MY DEAR SENATOR: Personally I am very strongly of the opinion that we should accept the debt settlement recently arrived at with Italy for two reasons: The first is that if we don't we will ultimately get less; and the second is that it is essential for Europe to get its debts settled before the countries can properly get established and obtain credit for the purchase of supplies, which largely come from this country.

Arizona is especially interested. The copper exports for the last half of last year were only three-fourths of the exports for the first half, and the foreign market is stagnant at the present time. It is, as you know, the top few per cent of demand above or below normal production that really makes the price of copper, and if Arizona is going to pick up it sadly needs a greater export demand and a consequent reasonable price for copper. Since the first of this year the falling off has continued, and the exports are lower than the average rate for the last half of last year. This situation is serious, and if it can not be corrected it will force curtailment of copper production in our State and elsewhere, with a consequent decrease in employment and the injurious depressions that follow.

I take the liberty of presenting to you my views, and hope in studying this very important question they may be of some service to you.

Yours very truly,

L. D. RICKETTS,

FLAGSTAFF, ARIZ., February 28, 1926—1.50 a. m.

HON. HENRY F. ASHURST,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We respectfully request your earnest support to the passage of the Italian debt settlement now before the Senate. We believe it will in a large measure benefit basic industries of Arizona.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

MIAMI, ARIZ., February 26, 1926.

HON. HENRY F. ASHURST,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Understand that Italian debt-settlement question is soon to be taken up by Senate. Large part of the copper exported in 1925 was taken by Italy, and prospects are for them to take a greater tonnage in 1926 provided the debt settlement is satisfactorily arranged, and it is of utmost importance to copper producers of this State that that plan under consideration may be ratified, and I trust you may be able to use your best efforts to further this program.

J. H. HENSLEY, JR.,

Mine Superintendent, Miami Copper Co.

BISBEE, ARIZ., February 26, 1926.

HON. HENRY F. ASHURST,

Washington, D. C.:

The Bisbee Chamber of Commerce very strongly urges that you lend the influence of your efforts to the support of the legislation now before the Senate in reference to the debt settlement with Italy. As you know, Arizona is producing 42 per cent of all domestic copper, and in order that export copper business be increased European countries must receive credit from the United States settlement of Germany's financial problems immediately reflected itself in copper demand. Prosperity in Bisbee district and entire State depends upon stimulation of copper demand. Please wire us your opinion regarding final passage.

GEORGE JAY,

President Bisbee Chamber of Commerce.

PRESCOTT, ARIZ., February 26, 1926.

HON. HENRY F. ASHURST,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Exporting copper has fallen off rapidly. Italy has taken half total production Arizona. Believe Arizona faces serious economic problem unless treaty proposing Italian debt settlement approved by Senate. If copper mining curtailed as result nonapproval, all Arizona will suffer. Urge your favorable action.

YAVAPAI COUNTY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
HARRY W. HEAP, President.

PHOENIX, ARIZ., February 26, 1926.

HON. HENRY F. ASHURST,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Success of Arizona agriculture is tied up with the continued operation of the mines. For this reason we believe they are justified in asking ratification of the Italian debt settlement, so as to support purchasing of copper for export. We believe Arizona will benefit by prompt settlement, and therefore ask your support.

ARIZONA FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
GEO. M. BRIDGE, President.
WALTER STRONG, Secretary.

PHOENIX, ARIZ., February 26, 1926.

Senator HENRY F. ASHURST,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Arizona is vitally affected by the output of its copper mines. The copper output is at present reduced because of lack of export demand.

Europe is in need of copper, but unable to buy because of debt due this country. In order to relieve the copper situation we urge that you give every possible support to the passage of the Italian debt settlement now before the Senate.

ARIZONA PACKING CO.

DOUGLAS, ARIZ., February 26, 1926.

Senator HENRY F. ASHURST,
Washington, D. C.:

This association convinced failure to indorse Italian debt settlement would work great injury to copper industry of Arizona. Therefore our organization will greatly appreciate your support.

ARIZONA WHOLESALE PRODUCE ASSOCIATION,
JOHN F. BARKER, President.
GEORGE E. BUXTON, Secretary.

PHOENIX, ARIZ., February 26, 1926.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We are informed that the Italian debt settlement is now before the Senate, and that continuance of copper purchases by Italy is largely dependent on approval of same. In view of vast importance to all interests in Arizona of maintenance of good demand for copper, we respectfully urge that you give every support possible to passage of Italian debt settlement.

BEARDSLEY INVESTMENT CO

TUCSON, ARIZ., February 25, 1926.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Washington, D. C.:

Please support legislation now before Congress on debt agreement, United States and Italy. Same of importance to our State. Italy large buyer of copper.

A. H. CONDRON,
Secretary Tucson Chamber of Commerce.

CLARKDALE, ARIZ., February 26, 1926.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Referring to Italian debt settlement, we are advised favorable action this bill by Senate will have favorable effect on copper export business. While I have been following press reports concerning this bill, I am naturally in no position to pass upon it, but would appreciate your giving consideration to it from viewpoint of copper exports and otherwise, and if consistent support it.

ROBERT E. TALLY.

GLOBE, ARIZ., February 26, 1926.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Economic situation of your constituents engaged in producing copper in Arizona absolutely demand that the exportation of metal be not interfered with by making the Italian debt settlement a purely political issue. We appeal to you to use your best efforts to defeat this proposal.

GLOBE LUNCHEON CLUB,
F. A. WOODWARD, President.
W. A. SULLIVAN, Secretary.

MIAMI, ARIZ., February 26, 1926.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Representing a group of your Democratic constituents, I appeal to you to consider the economic effect of making the Italian debt settlement a purely political issue. Italy takes 300,000,000 pounds of copper a year, and our industry, just struggling out of a five-year depression, needs this market badly. Get back to ancient and honorable issues that made our party great. Tariff for revenue only; and, above all, State rights.

Dr. JOHN E. BACON.

PHOENIX, ARIZ., February 26, 1926.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The importance of confirming in the Senate Italian debt settlement has been brought to the attention of Arizona. Every citizen of this State is interested in the sale of the excess production of copper abroad. The export of copper has fallen off in an alarming degree during the past eight months, and in the last two months the loss has become dangerous. We believe that the credit which will be available to Italy, based on the settlement before the Senate, will allow the increased purchase of copper. Every citizen and every industry of Arizona is dependent in great measure on the continued operation at large production of our copper mines. The directors of industrial congress, representing all industries, have voted for confirmation of this settlement and have instructed me to wire you, placing the matter wholly in your hands as our representative, asking that you give the matter your very earnest consideration as a support to the economic development of the State.

(Signed) ARIZONA INDUSTRIAL CONGRESS,
P. G. SPILLSBURY, President.

INSPIRATION, ARIZ., February 25, 1926.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Washington, D. C.:

I understand the Italian debt question will be up this week for consideration. Italy purchased a large tonnage of copper in 1925, and the prospects for American producers making heavy exports of copper to that country in 1926 are better than last year, provided the debt question can be disposed of. It is of the greatest importance to the mining interests of this State that the proposed agreement be ratified, and we sincerely hope that your influence can be exerted in that direction.

T. H. OBRIEN.

DOUGLAS, ARIZ., March 29, 1926.

Senator ASHURST,
Washington, D. C.:

We feel that the Italian debt settlement proposition should be approved by Senators representing Arizona. We feel that the copper industry will be greatly benefited should this settlement be made.

DOUGLAS CHAMBER OF COMMERCE AND MINES,
By REX RICE, President.

RAY, ARIZ., March 3, 1926.

Senator HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We believe that settlement of Italian debt is of great importance to the copper industry of Arizona, as for reasonable prosperity it is essential that foreign sales be maintained and increased if possible. Postponement of the Italian debt settlement will undoubtedly hurt our foreign business and bring about depression in the industry which will not only be detrimental to ourselves but to all other industries in the State of Arizona who either are dependent upon the copper industry in some measure or who themselves have foreign market to sustain.

W. S. BOYD.

PHOENIX, ARIZ., March 3, 1926.

Senator HENRY F. ASHURST,
Washington, D. C.:

Your support in securing the early passage of the Italian debt settlement before the Senate is of very vital importance to every citizen of this State in its effect upon the operation of the copper-mining industry of Arizona, and will, we, believe, be heartily appreciated by all those who have at heart the interests of Arizona.

PRATT GILBERT CO.

FLAGSTAFF, ARIZ., March 1, 1926.

Senator HENRY F. ASHURST,
Washington, D. C.:

I hope you can consistently support confirmation Italian debt settlement. I believe it will be for best interests our country.

T. A. RIORDAN.

PHOENIX, ARIZ., March 1, 1926.

Senator ASHURST,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

The general business interests of Arizona are so dependent on the purchasing power of the mines and are so interested in every policy of betterment that we earnestly ask you to favorably consider and give your support to the passage of the Italian debt settlement before the Senate.

W. S. MASON.

PHOENIX, ARIZ., March 2, 1926.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We understand the Italian debt settlement is now before the Senate for confirmation.

As I understand it, this settlement has the approval of Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mellon, also the administration. For that reason we believe it would be to the best interest of the State of Arizona to approve this settlement. Unless foreign countries can receive credit from the United States we will be unable to export to those countries, and this will particularly effect Arizona, for the reason that we are, as you know, very large producers of copper and must depend on foreign demand to keep our mines operating.

This is our sincere viewpoint, and we trust you will give it your serious consideration.

Very truly yours,

ARIZONA GROCERY CO.,
By GEO. W. MICKLE.

SOUTHWEST METALS CO.,
Humboldt, Ariz., March 2, 1926.

HON. HENRY F. ASHURST,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Permit me to respectfully call your attention to the important bearing on the copper industry of our State of the ratification of the Italian debt settlement agreement proposed by the present administration.

Without an increasing copper trade the copper market is certain to go still lower and the industry of Arizona is at present in a very precarious condition, where any further depression in the market may cause reduction in output or entirely shutting down of certain mines with the resultant unemployment of labor and general hardship upon the community.

Our own company, being a comparatively high-cost producer, will be among those who will feel this situation most keenly, and we believe that the prosperity of this State as well as of other States producing copper is very largely dependent upon the purchasing power of Europe, which can only be stabilized through ratification of the present agreements for funding debts to the United States.

Yours very respectfully,

G. M. COLVOCORESSES,
General Manager.

THE PUBLIC DOMAIN AND STATE RIGHTS

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter from the Hon. George W. P. Hunt, Governor of Arizona, addressed to the President of the United States, concerning the problem of the public domain in the Western States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, STATE HOUSE,
Phoenix, Ariz., April 9, 1926.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The year 1926 is the sesquicentennial of many stirring events in the history of our country. And, perhaps, it is due to the fact that ancestors on both the paternal and maternal sides of my family participated in some of these events that makes me feel so keenly the necessity of adhering to the fundamental principles upon which our Government was founded and causes me to reflect that "a frequent recurrence to fundamental principles is necessary."

In particular I feel the importance of recognizing and sustaining the fact that this Government is made up of sovereign States and that the Federal Government derives its authority from powers conferred upon it by the States, rather than the Federal Government being all powerful and governing 48 subject States.

While the doctrine of State rights has long been the primary doctrine of the particular political party with which I have been affiliated all my life, yet many ardent Republicans have also enunciated and sustained the doctrine of State rights, among whom may be listed Abraham Lincoln, and I note that in several of your State documents, Mr. President, a reference to the necessity of maintaining the integrity of our State governments.

I am addressing you at this time for several reasons:

First. Because of the occurrence of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of many of the historical events which go to make up the early history of our Nation, a record in which all American citizens take a deep and lasting pride, and which constitutes the fount from which we imbibe the spirit of liberty and the ideals of our country.

Second. Because I see the continual encroachment and building up of the Federal Government at the expense of the States, and the consequent weakening of the power and influence of the States.

Third. Because the State of which I have the honor of being chief executive has been one of the chief sufferers from the policy of Federal aggrandizement; and Fourth. Because there appears to be a definite, well-defined movement under way, which is sustained by several of the members of your Cabinet, to perpetrate a crime against the State of Arizona and to violate one of the most sacred and fundamental principles of our Constitution.

It needs no statement from me, Mr. President, to impress you with the fact that this Nation was not built by a race of men who were nurtured and coddled by any group of Federal bureaucrats.

The men who conquered the West and girdled it with bands of steel, who bridged our rivers, tamed mountain torrents, and wrested from the mountain and desert fastnesses the mineral treasures they contained; who have conquered the desert and made it bloom and produce for mankind; these men did not want, and their progeny do not want, to be nurtured by any Federal bureau. In fact, Mr. President, the experience in my State—and I think the same is true of other Western States—is that Federal bureaus do not nurse and protect the builder. They act as a drag to sap his vitality, and thus prevent the conquering of nature, and retard the putting of the resources of nature to the use and benefit of mankind.

In the State of Arizona 67 per cent of the area, Mr. President, is still in the control of the United States Government, in spite of the fact that we were granted Statehood and sovereignty 15 years ago.

I direct your attention, Mr. President, to the treaty with Mexico, in which that nation ceded a considerable portion of the territory which now constitutes the State of Arizona. That treaty provides that the territory "shall be formed into free, sovereign, and independent States and incorporated into the Union of the United States as soon as possible, and the citizens thereof shall be accorded the enjoyment of all the rights, advantages, and immunities as citizens of the original States."

It is pertinent at this point to inquire, how it can be contended by anyone that the State of Arizona and other Western States have been admitted to this Union on a parity with the other States in the Union where no reservations of lands were made, in view of the fact that the original price paid for the territories that were acquired by the Federal Government, and out of which the Western States were formed, was nominal, and the National Treasury has been repaid manifold.

This 67 per cent of the area of the State of Arizona, which is controlled by the Federal Government in one way or another, pays no taxes to assist in maintaining the State government or in developing the State; and if the land were in private ownership, Mr. President, and the private owner did no more to develop the territory owned by him than the Federal Government is doing to develop the West, that citizen would receive and merit the condemnation of his neighbors.

But that is not the worst phase of the situation, Mr. President. There now appears to be a tendency in the bureau, which now to such a large extent control our Federal Government, to sponsor legislation which will create a monstrous condition in the West, in the shape of the United States Government as the permanent landlord of all this vast domain. A permanent landlord, leasing the public domain, exacting rents and royalties from those who undertake to make a living by grazing livestock, cutting timber, or developing minerals upon the public domain within the borders of sovereign States and paying no taxes to those States.

This policy, I think, Mr. President, is repugnant to every vital and fundamental principle underlying the Constitution of the United States and the principles upon which this Nation is founded.

A careful perusal of the ideas and the spirit which actuated the early statesmen of this Nation in acquiring the territory which constitutes the public domain indicates beyond any question of doubt that it was their intent to divest the Federal Government of control over public lands as rapidly as the country could be settled and the lands sold.

When Thomas Jefferson executed the Louisiana Purchase he recognized the fact that this act of his administration was consummated without authority of law, and he proposed an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to ratify the act.

Many of the ablest statesmen this Nation has produced, and who were imbued with the spirit and principles of the founders of this Republic, have denied the constitutional authority of the Federal Government to hold lands within the limits of the States, except for such purposes as forts, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings, and for the purpose of maintaining a place for the Capitol of the United States.

I have asked attorneys to advise me under what authority the United States continues to hold dominion over the vast areas in the Western States, and I am advised that there are only four sections of the Federal Constitution upon which such authority rests:

1. Article I, section 8, paragraph 17, reads as follows:

"To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such District (not exceeding 10 miles square) as may by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress become the seat of government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased, by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings. And to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof."

2. Article III, section 2, provides:

"The judicial power shall extend to controversies . . . between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grant of different States."

3. Article IV, section 3, paragraph 2, provides:

"The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States, and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States or of any particular State."

But I am told by attorneys that the full scope of this paragraph has never been construed or settled by the Supreme Court.

4. Article XI provides:

"The judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by citizens of another State, or by citizens or subjects of any foreign state."

Attorneys have advised me that these are the only powers ever granted by the States or the people of the United States to the General Government regarding lands.

But the fact remains that the whole tendency and policy of the Federal Government in the early years of this Nation was to recognize the proposition of creating new independent sovereign States from the public lands, as early as possible, and to dispose of the public domain within the States by sale, homestead, or other means, as rapidly as the lands could be absorbed into private use.

The outstanding menace to the development of the West, in the matter of State sovereignty, is the new policies being discussed and formulated by bureaus in Washington and by Congress, which seek to perpetuate Federal ownership of the public domain in western States.

It is a ridiculous proposition, Mr. President, in addition to being disheartening and destructive to the building up of the West, to have some young man—whose chest and head have recently been expanded because he has received a beribboned diploma—announcing that he has been graduated from some school of forestry in the East, and that he is able to fill a swivel chair position as a forestry expert; with his diploma, burnished puttees, and semi-military uniform, decorated with gold buttons and insignia, undertaking to tell a gray-haired, sunburned, and frostbitten stockman, who has survived the experiences of marauding Indians, of drouths, fire, epizootic, and other epidemics of disease, how to run his business.

It is even more discouraging to the development of the West to have some self-conscious, highly important graduate of a school of forestry advising and instructing men who have lived in the woods 40 and 50 years, and who know the timber industry from the tree to the market, how to run their business, and informing some of them that they have been in business too long and that they should retire and give some one else a chance.

It is exceedingly exasperating to the sour-dough prospector, who has survived a diet upon which only the hardiest could survive—yea, who has even undergone the pangs of hunger and thirst because of his optimism that the vein of metal was only another day's labor away—those days piling one upon another, running into years—when applying for a patent upon his claim to be required to prove to some swivel-chair bureaucrat that he is not a crook trying to rob the Government.

The men who have built the West and wrested it from savage nature for the use of man; the men from the West who enlisted under the banner of Roosevelt and fought at San Juan, whose breed and progeny still live in the West, were not men, as I have already said, who were nurtured by Federal bureaucrats.

The present policies, if pursued and carried out to their ultimate conclusion, Mr. President, can only result in the change of the ideals of America, and instead of men taking pride in their hardships and labor in wresting a continent from nature and making it productive for a new race of men, we shall set up in their place a system that is very graphically illustrated by Emil Jannings in the Last Laugh, in which it is illustrated that under some circumstances the worth of a man is judged by the uniform he wears.

You can render a great service to this Nation, Mr. President, during this year, when our people have their minds attracted to the great historic principles upon which our Government is founded, by directing their attention to the fact that we have departed from the principles of the fathers and by urging a return to those principles. You can render a great service to this Nation, Mr. President, by urging that the intent of the fathers be fulfilled and the territory within the borders of the Western States be ceded to them to be administered by the States in the interest of the people within the States where the territory lies, and accomplish the completion of the establishment of 48 sovereign States.

If the Federal Government sets out on the path of becoming a perpetual, permanent landlord, deriving rents and royalties from the public domain, the time will come—it must come in the West—when the whole foundation upon which State sovereignty rests must break down.

One can not walk the streets, enter any public building, or go anywhere within the State of Arizona to-day—and I presume the same is true of other Western States—that he does not collide with Federal employees of every type, form, and character.

There is scarcely a public activity in the State of Arizona that does not impinge upon some Federal bureau or department. There is not an industry but is affected thereby. The horde of Federal employees continues to grow. New additions are made every year, and the trouble is, Mr. President, that the greater number of these employees are wholly nonproductive.

I am writing, Mr. President, not as one who believes in the exploitive theory concerning the resources of our country, but as one who has been a staunch advocate of conservation.

As a young man, a member of the Legislature of Arizona when it was still a Territory, I advocated and supported the turning into a forest reservation of some of our mountain country, of the county which I represented, which had been cut over to secure timber for the mines.

I have supported many of the other conservation ideas and policies, but when I observe the stock industry of our State driven to the verge of bankruptcy by governmental policies; when I was informed by the manager of the Saginaw-Manistee Lumber Co., which has been operating in the State for the past 40 years, that due to new policies in the department, which are instituted overnight without any consultation with the men who are in the lumber business, and which are based upon mere interpretations of leases and regulations of the department, that his company has been operating at a loss for the past several years, due to these policies, and that if such policies continue it means the company must cease operations; when I observe some of the most progressive men among our mining engineers and prospectors seeking locations and spending their money in the nation south of the Arizona line rather than put up with and contend with the harassment and with the policies formulated by the Federal Government within our own State concerning mineral ground; when I see the money being paid by our stockmen as grazing fees and the money paid by the lumber industry for the purchase of timber being utilized to pay a lot of uniformed nonproductive Federal employees, I can not see the benefit to either our State, our industries, or our Nation of the present governmental policies.

And, finally, Mr. President, when I contemplate the activities in Washington of members of your Cabinet and others in connection with the proposals for development of the Colorado River, and the plans they have put forward to invade the State of Arizona and the State of Nevada without the consent of those States for the purpose of enriching and aggrandizing another State, I pause to inquire what has become of the principles which underlie the Government of this Republic?

I note from Associated Press reports of April 6 that an amendment to the proposed Boulder Canyon bill, proposed by a representative of the sovereign State of Nevada, was brusquely brushed aside by the chief of one of the bureaus—the Secretary of the Interior—who proposes that the Federal Government shall regulate the matter of controlling the Colorado River, a matter which vitally concerns the interests of two sovereign States.

I, as Governor of Arizona, have repeatedly protested against the pending legislation. The Legislature of the State of Arizona has twice refused to ratify the Colorado River compact without another compact first being made between the three States in the lower basin which would fully carry out the provisions of the law enacted by Congress, which authorized the making of a compact which would apportion the water of the Colorado River "among the States."

The State of California, which will profit most from the pending legislation in Congress concerning the Colorado River, has repeatedly refused to negotiate, and has obstructed the carrying out of the provisions of the law enacted by Congress and the seven States in the Colorado River Basin to make such a compact. And when a committee was finally appointed by California to negotiate, it undertook to make conditions precedent to negotiating which would give that State everything it wanted.

It is true that a member of your Cabinet, a gentleman from California, has undertaken to assure you and the country that the State of Arizona is adequately protected under the provisions of the Colorado River compact. I pause to inquire of you, Mr. President, who, under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, is best able to determine whether this State is protected by the compact, a citizen of another State who will profit by the despoiling of this State or the Legislature and the Governor of the State of Arizona?

I think, Mr. President, that the time has come to call a halt upon proposals to increase the powers of the Federal Government, and that it be definitely recognized that the safety of this Government lies in maintaining 48 sovereign, strong, and virile States; that the strength of this Nation is dependent upon its citizens enjoying to the utmost the benefits of local self-government, so that they may be self-reliant and ready to fight, if necessary, for the maintenance of ideals and principles upon which the Government of this Nation is founded.

If we continue to travel the path we have been on for the past several years, we will eventually adopt the goose step.

I also pause to inquire, Mr. President, why any of the sovereign States of this Nation should place their destiny in the keeping of any member of the President's Cabinet, especially, Mr. President, of the Secretary of the Interior, irrespective of who he may be or what political party he may belong to.

The record of Secretaries of the Interior during the past generation is not one, Mr. President, to give confidence to the States. And I particularly direct your attention to the fact that if enlarged powers are to be given to the Secretary of the Interior and the Government continues to maintain in the West the vast public domain it still pos-esses, and in addition becomes a Shylock landlord, collecting rents and royalties, that the West will be at the mercy of the Secretary of the Interior and be without protection, as our Senators and Congressmen now spend a great amount of their time as messengers among the bureaus.

I have been so bold upon several occasions, Mr. President, as to suggest that the public domain in the Western States be ceded to the States. Last year I addressed a communication to the governors of the Western States suggesting that they join me in advocating that this policy be urged upon the Congress of the United States.

The Government has been in the land business nearly a century and a half, and I think the time has arrived when the remaining unreserved, unappropriated, and nonirrigable public domain should be disposed of in the quickest manner for the benefit of the people of the States in which the lands are located. A considerable portion of the land will never be worth very much, acres of it being required to graze a single cow. But, instead of keeping it as the property of the Federal Government to produce revenue to maintain a horde of non-productive clerks and uniformed traveling inspectors, the citizens of this country should be permitted to acquire the property so that it may be placed upon the tax rolls of the several States for the benefit of those States.

If this policy is not adopted, I would advocate that you recommend to Congress that the surface rights in these lands be sold and disposed of at a nominal cost, and that the homestead law be amended so as to permit a homesteader to take up adequate land to permit of some farming and stock raising, so that the Western States may grow, increase in population, and that this territory in the West may be developed. If the latter policy is adopted, provision should be made to have the policy conform to State laws governing sheep driveways, etc., and the right to prospect for minerals retained.

The youth of this country should be permitted its opportunity to suffer hardships and heartbreaks, to have its soul tested, to undergo discouragements, and to anticipate and taste the fruits of victory which come from having achieved success in making useful for mankind what have been condemned as desert wastes.

I have confidence in the West, Mr. President. I love its deserts and its mountains, and I believe the time will come when even some of the least productive sections can be made to sustain and grow produce which will be useful to men, and I think and believe that the youth of our Nation will find a means of utilizing this domain, provided it is given the opportunity, and that opportunity, Mr. President, will not come with the Government as a land-leasing landlord.

I commend these thoughts to you in connection with many of the great problems which confront our country.

Very respectfully yours,

GEO. W. P. HUNT,
Governor of Arizona.

HON. CALVIN COOLIDGE,
President of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

STATUE OF SIMON BOLIVAR

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, we have been listening to eloquent utterances on behalf of a great American. There was a great American in South America by the name of Bolivar, a man who is regarded as the Washington of South America. When the Pan American Congress met in Santiago in 1923 they recommended that a statue be erected in Panama in honor of this great South American. Panama was to donate $10,000 to the $100,000 that was provided. It was recommended that the United States should also contribute $10,000 for the purpose. The matter has been taken up with the Secretary of State by correspondence from South America; the President of the United States recommended it in his last message to Congress; and the Committee on the Library has reported favorably unanimously that the $10,000 be contributed for this purpose.

I ask unanimous consent to present the report of the committee, and I ask for immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection to the Senator submitting the report, but my attention was diverted. Do I understand that this is a bill to erect a statue to General Bolivar?

Mr. FESS. Yes; on which $100,000 is to be expended by the Pan American countries, $10,000 to be provided by this Government.

Mr. BORAH. I shall not object to the consideration of the measure, but I take this opportunity to say that there are several great Americans connected with the organization of this Government to whom we have not yet seen fit to erect statues. It occurs to me that while we are considering this matter of paying tribute to those to whom we feel indebted for the great work of the past, we might very well, while reaching out into other countries, consider several of those to whom we are indebted for the existence of this Republic, and to whom we have never yet seen fit to erect statues, or in any other way to pay proper tribute to their memories.

Mr. FESS, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the bill (S. 2643) to provide for the cooperation of the United States in the erection in the city of Panama of a monument to Gen. Simon Bolivar, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 588) thereon.

Mr. FESS (continuing). Mr. President, I appreciate what the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee has said. If time permitted, I would like to have an opportunity of setting before the Senate the claim of Simon Bolivar for this recognition. I will not have time to-day, and I therefore will not ask for the immediate consideration of the measure, but will defer it to a future time and let it go to the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

AMERICAN LEGION MUSEUM

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I report back, without amendment, from the Committee on Military Affairs, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 91) directing the Secretary of War to allot war trophies to the American Legion Museum, and I submit a report (No. 589) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection if it will not lead to debate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I think, if the Senator will bear with me just a second, that there will be no discussion of the joint resolution for the reason that it simply provides that the Secretary of War shall be directed to allot and deliver, without cost to the United States, for the National Museum of the American Legion, in Indianapolis, at their headquarters, war trophies from the World War, without any expense to the Government. A similar joint resolution passed the House of Representatives without any debate, and with no dissenting voice of any kind. I assume there will be no objection to it here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BLEASE. As a member of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

HEIGHT OF BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I rose to ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9308, to amend an act regulating the height of buildings in the District of Columbia, approved June 1, 1910.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood that my colleague would call up the bill to-morrow morning.

Mr. COPELAND. May we expect to take it up to-morrow morning?

Mr. SMOOT. I think so. I have no objection, if it will not lead to very much debate. My colleague says it will not lead to any debate to speak of.

Mr. COPELAND. The junior Senator from Utah promised to call it up to-day, but if it is understood that we can bring it up to-morrow morning that will be agreeable.

Mr. KING. I shall ask for its consideration to-morrow morning.

Mr. SMOOT. That will be all right, if it does not lead to any further debate than my colleague has stated to me.

Mr. KING. I do not think it will take more than 10 or 15 minutes.

ORDER FOR RECESS

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that when we recess to-day, we recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow. I will state that it is desired that we shall have a short executive session now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and the Senate (at 1 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.), under the order previously entered, took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 14, 1926, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, April 13, 1926

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art our heavenly Father, who givest liberally of all good things that make life worth while, we seek to worship Thee. We thank Thee that we are still living in the enjoyment of Thy love and mercy. We bless Thee for life's gifts and opportunities. May they mean to us self-denial, industry, courage, patience, and perseverance, rather than success, greatness, or victory. Oh let us be faithful to our daily tasks. Rebuke every excess and every defect and let our energies bend toward a large, orderly, and balanced life. If hope is fading, if our step is faltering, if our strength is weakening, if our ideals are lowering, oh take us by the hand, bend our wills to Thine, and lead us on. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 5701. An act to designate the times and places of holding terms of the United States District Court for the District of Montana.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and resolution of the following titles:

H. R. 3932. An act to amend section 71 of the Judicial Code as amended;

H. J. Res. 213. Joint resolution for participation of the United States in the Third World's Poultry Congress to be held at Ottawa, Canada, in 1927.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 3186. An act to promote the production of sulphur upon the public domain and in the State of Louisiana; and

S. 1550. An act to appropriate certain tribal funds for the benefit of the Indians of the Fort Peck and Blackfeet Reservations.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 8908) granting the consent of Congress to George Washington-Wakefield Memorial Bridge, a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Potomac River, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Jones of Washington, Mr. Couzens, Mr. Bingham, Mr. Fletcher, and Mr. Sheppard as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1226) to amend the trading with the enemy act.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 8917. An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT TO THE TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (S. 1226) to amend the trading with the enemy act, for printing under the rule.

VISIT OF CERTAIN MILITARY ORGANIZATIONS TO FRANCE, ENGLAND, AND BELGIUM

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 204, authorizing certain military organizations to visit France, England, and Belgium. It is a resolution which was introduced by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], and has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 204, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Virginia whether he has talked with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] about this matter?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. No; I have not. I overlooked doing that, but the resolution has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the joint resolution be reported so we may know what it contains.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Richmond Light Infantry Blues Battalion, of Richmond, Va.; the First Company Governor's Foot Guard, of Hartford, Conn.; the Second Company Governor's Foot Guard, of New Haven, Conn., and the Putnam Phalanx, of Hartford, Conn., are authorized to visit France, England, and Belgium during the month of May, 1926, as military organizations of the United States, under such conditions as may be imposed by the Governments of the countries aforesaid to be visited.

Sec. 2. That the visits herein authorized shall be without expense to the United States.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "authorized" insert the words "to accept the invitation."

Page 1, line 9, after the words "of" insert the words "their respective States recognized by."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question. Admitting that these are deserving organizations of Richmond, Va., and Hartford, Conn., why should they be picked out above all of the other organizations in the United States, which likewise rendered worthy service in France? Why should they be singled out?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I may say to the gentleman that they are not singled out. They have been invited—one of them, at least, has heretofore been invited by Marshal Foch—all of them, I believe, have been invited to make this visit in May. We would not ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution except that the time is approaching when these organizations expect to start on their journey.

Mr. BLANTON. One further question. Does the gentleman know that when this joint resolution gets to the other end of the Capitol the little clause in this resolution, the saving clause, which says that it shall be without expense to the United States, will not be stricken out; and if it is stricken out, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] will not permit the resolution to pass, will he?

Mr. TILSON. The resolution will never pass this House if that clause is stricken out.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted, I wish to extend here a few remarks on the character of the military organizations referred to in the resolution called up by my friend from Virginia [Mr. MOORE], and which has just passed this House. I do this because under the circumstances I did not have the opportunity to speak when the resolution was passed.

The history of all the organizations mentioned in the resolution goes back to an early period in our history. As to the Richmond Light Infantry Blues, I shall not attempt to say anything except that this well-known organization of splendid men of the Old Dominion State is not only a historical organization but under a different military designation is an integral part of the federalized National Guard of the State of Virginia, and as such rendered notable service in France during the World War. For a number of years this fine organization has been exchanging visits with the Connecticut organizations referred to in the resolution, which visits have accomplished a noble purpose in bringing together in more friendly social relationship the young manhood of Virginia and Connecticut.

The Connecticut organizations have had an enviable record of service from a period prior to the Revolutionary War. The First Company of Governor's Foot Guard was formed in October, 1771, and the Second Company, of New Haven, in March, 1775. Both of these companies saw actual service in the Revolutionary War, and in every war since that time in which our country has been engaged these organizations have furnished an active fighting company.

The personnel of all these organizations is made up of men of high character, of fine standing in the communities in which they live, and they are well qualified in every way to worthily represent this country on their visit abroad. They have been invited to Europe by Field Marshal Foch, of France, and it is the purpose of these men to visit the battle fields on their trip.

The organizations referred to in the resolutions are not going to Europe as strictly military organizations, although they have been recognized in the military laws of the United States. While not going in a military capacity, these men are greatly interested in military matters and in the battle fields of the war, about 60 per cent of them, as I am informed, having served in the military forces during the World War. Many of them will have the pleasure of revisiting the scenes of their heroic service of the year 1918.

I am grateful to the membership of the House for their courtesy in passing this bill by unanimous consent, and on behalf of the men most directly concerned I sincerely thank the House for permitting the bill to be passed in this way.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by printing a brief memorandum from the commander of one of these organizations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The following is an extract from a memorandum furnished me by Maj. M. F. Neal, commanding the Light Infantry Blues:

The friendship of the Richmond Light Infantry Blues Battalion and the First and Second Companies, Governor's Foot Guards, of Connecticut, began at Jamestown Exposition in 1907. Since that date these organizations have exchanged numbers of visits on anniversaries and other suitable occasions. In 1908, the Blues went to Connecticut. In 1911, the Foot Guards came to Richmond. In 1912, the Blues went to Connecticut. In 1915, for the Confederate reunion, the Foot Guards came to Richmond. In 1922, the Blues went to Connecticut. In 1924, the Foot Guards came to Richmond. In 1925, the Blues went to Connecticut. The governors of Virginia and Connecticut have accompanied the Blues and Foot Guards on their visits to the respective States, and the friendship of these two military organizations has gone far to completely wipe out that feeling of "the North" and "the South" that had existed between the two Commonwealths.

In 1914 the Blues and the Foot Guards began to plan a trip to England to visit one of their territorial commands. This trip had to be abandoned, due to England's entry into the war.

In November, 1921, the Blues had the honor of escorting Marshal Foch on his visit to Richmond, Va. The Foot Guards had the similar honor in Connecticut. While in Richmond, Marshal Foch invited the Richmond Light Infantry Blues to visit France at a time when she was not torn by war and strife.

In 1922, when the Blues were visiting the Foot Guards in Connecticut, the matter was discussed, but nothing definite adopted.

In 1924, when the Foot Guards were visiting the Blues, at Richmond, it was decided that the trip would be made in 1926, and committees formed and the plans laid for the trip. It was then determined to also visit England and Belgium at the same time to also pay respect to these allies.

The purpose of the trip is to promote good will and a closer understanding between our own and the countries to be visited; to visit again the battlefields of France, on which our organization served in the World War, and to pay respect to the memory of those of our comrades who made the supreme sacrifice.

THOMAS JEFFERSON

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House the Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN]. [Applause.]

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am thankful to the distinguished Speaker, the leaders, and the Members of the House for the opportunity to say a few words to-day about that great American, Thomas Jefferson.

Thomas Jefferson was the foremost apostle of liberty—human liberty—the world has ever known. Other men, including many who were associated with him in creating this great Republic, were more interested in the forms of freedom, in liberty as an abstract idea, than in universal emancipation. Some sought to trammel liberty and keep it within narrow bounds. Many of the founders proposed a system of government which should be little short of a republican monarchy. But Jefferson had an infinite faith in the people in days of distrust of the populace, agitation, and revolution, and at a time when democracy was but a name he stood firm for a government in which the power would be resident, not in the men of intellect, of financial influence, or social standing, but in the artificers of the cities, the woodsmen of the frontier, the laborers on the farms and plantations, the seamen along the Atlantic coast. He was the plain people's only champion at a time when they were inarticulate.

I often think, as I note increased demands for vesting all authority in the hands of the Central Government, that our greatest need is another Thomas Jefferson to speak out in behalf of the rights of the common people, to utter the individual's well-founded jealousy of a Federal Government which daily reaches out its talons for more and more control over our daily lives. The great Democrat who championed freedom of worship in Virginia, a system of State universities in which students might elect their own courses of study, and a Government resting solely upon the consent of the governed would be the first to protest against the growing encroachment which the Federal Government, through hateful amendments to the Constitution and a distortion of democracy, is making upon the life, liberty, and happiness of the individual citizen.

If Jefferson were sitting in this Chamber to-day, or holding the office of governor of any of our sovereign States, I can picture him as our leader in the struggle against sumptuary laws which restrict the decent freedom of the individual, against proposals to lodge control over our widespread educational system in the Federal Government, against domination of political groups by the great financial interests, against class discrimination, against bowing the knee to Europe whether it take the form of writing down their just and honest debts or accepting their decisions in international matters of vital import to our western Republic. Nine years before Washington's Farewell Address, you may remember that Jefferson was writing from Paris to caution against "entangling alliances"—those were his very words—and as Washington's first Secretary of State he adhered to that great American policy.

Jefferson's birthday this year should be a day upon which we rededicate ourselves to the many great causes and the single great principle—human liberty—for which he fought over a period of 40 years. It may seem trite to recall his services to liberty, his struggling for the doctrine of universal emancipation, but it was not so in his day. His enemies, at home and abroad, sneered at his demands for the fullest form of freedom. They pointed to the excesses of the French Revolution, and shuddered at the resulting wars which drenched Europe with blood from the North to the Red Sea.

"This," they retorted, "is what your liberty would give us in America."

But Jefferson never faltered; his vision was keener than theirs, his trust greater, his understanding deeper. Though a George the Third sat on the English throne, and a Napoleon strode across the European continent like a colossus, and a Metternich and a Talleyrand set the wicked pace for diplomats of the Old World, Jefferson labored to such avail that he created not only a nation but a party. It was only a few years afterwards that Jefferson became the first President of a nation and a party which, largely through his own efforts, were builded on the doctrine that all men are equal in the eyes of nature and the law, that life, liberty, and happiness are inalienable rights, that the function of government is to safeguard and guarantee those rights, and that all the authority and inspiration of government are drawn from the consent of the governed.

Trite words to-day, perhaps, for they are embedded in every child's history book; but, unfortunately, there are indications that those in charge of our Government are straying from the path marked out by such guideposts. No longer, I fear, do they exercise a dynamic influence upon those who sit in high places.

So we need a Jefferson to guide us back to sanity, to fundamentals, to the doctrine preached by him in the most critical period of our country's history. We need a "majestic and free voice" such as his to sound a trumpet call awakening us from our lethargy and slumber, the presence of a leader who traveled life's common way "in cheerful godliness," yet assumed life's lowliest burdens and duties on behalf of those who could not do so themselves.

To those who head the forces of reaction in our time Jefferson would protest, as he did to George the Third, in tones of defiance and warning:

Open your breast, sire, to liberal and expanded thought—

Thundered the great Virginian, then only 31 years old.

Let not the name of George the Third be a blot on the page of history. The whole art of government consists in the art of being honest. Only aim to do your duty and mankind will give you credit where you fail.

With equal justice he could say to-day to those who seem bent upon converting the Government into an instrument for improving the condition of the powerful and wealthy that—the whole art of government consists in the art of being honest.

Though we can not emphasize too much Jefferson's service in framing the Declaration of Independence, which struck an entirely new and loftier note in the century-old struggle for human rights, and his accomplishments from 1776 until he returned to Monticello late in life, broken in health and sadly in debt, it seems to me his earlier achievements were even more noteworthy. His later triumphs in the field of politics and human development were merely an extension of the principles he epitomized in Virginia. There he stood forth as the foe of a medieval organization of society, politics, law, and education. You can not know the true Jefferson, the father of a nation and a party, unless you understand his services in destroying outworn social, political, legal, and religious forms in the Old Dominion.

Virginia, with Massachusetts, was the nursery of the Revolution, of the Declaration of Independence, and of the United States of America. But the seeds of democracy had been planted in the Bay State long before; it needed only provocation to bring them to their period of growth. In Virginia George the Third and all he represented had stout defenders. It was Jefferson who made Virginia's soil fertile for the reception of democratic ideas in that grand old State, and it was Virginia which swept the rest of the South into the maelstrom of war and freedom, out of which we emerged as a Nation.

There, as later, by pen and uttered word, he betrayed a magic skill in crystallizing into sharp and distinct outlines the issues for which America fought. He gave voice to the wavering sentiment of human freedom. Time and again when the colonists were swaying between complete independence and partial servitude to the British crown there came from Jefferson's lips or pen a statement, a letter, or draft of resolutions which banished doubt, inspired the faint-hearted, and nerved the isolated groups to the great efforts which culminated in both a warlike and peaceful vindication of the great principles set forth in the Declaration of Independence.

In Virginia, however, Jefferson revealed his instinctive hatred of all forms of oppression and tyranny, his faith in the people, and his realization that the tyrant may assume many shapes. In his day Virginia had an established church which was recognized and favored by the Government; it was a crime to join dissenting churches. He struggled for years against the established forces, incurring the lasting enmity of powerful groups, but in the end he brought complete religious freedom to that great Commonwealth. Virginia, because of Jefferson, was the first sovereign State in the history of the world to proclaim formally in its laws the absolute religious freedom of all its citizens.

So, too, he revised the judicial code which supported and bulwarked an institution of punishment and tyranny that went back to the Middle Ages. He forced the repeal of laws against witchcraft and heresy, of legislation which preserved great landed estates to the permanent disadvantage of the many, of statutes which restricted manufactures, navigation, and development of a sound currency system. An aristocrat on his mother's side, with the blood of nobility in his veins, he struck a death blow at aristocracy in so far as it sought to determine and control what the people should think, how they should worship, how they should be governed, and how they should live. I firmly believe he would have struggled against any attempt to say what they should eat or drink.

It was in Virginia that Thomas Jefferson transplanted the seeds of democracy which, under his care and guarding, have flowered and grown into a sheltering tree whose beneficent shadows now stretches across the world.

Long before slavery became a problem, dividing our Nation and requiring determination by the sword and gun, Jefferson urged its abolition. His original draft of the Declaration of Independence cited British fostering of the iniquitous slave trade as one of its crimes against America and humanity, but unfortunately it was stricken out by the more conservative of the patriots. In the Virginia Legislature he labored for eventual emancipation of the black men. In establishing a temporary form of government for the Northwestern Territory he inserted a clause banishing slavery after the year 1800; it lost by 1 vote. Many of his doctrines that have come down to us are being stricken out day by day and are losing by one or more votes. As he was ever on his guard, so we must be. Problems almost as serious as that of slavery, problems which threaten to divide a nation, are upon us now; it is not necessary to enumerate them.

Jefferson, as I have mentioned, was determined to keep us from imperialistic schemes abroad, but he was an ardent believer in a greater America. It was he who initiated and consummated the Louisiana Purchase; it was he who sponsored the Lewis and Clark expedition through western wilds to the Pacific coast; it was he who inspired the acquisition of the Floridas.

It was he who enhanced young America's prestige abroad by sweeping the Mediterranean clear of the Barbary pirates at a time when such world powers as Great Britain, France, and Spain were paying yearly tribute to the Sultan of Morocco. And before Monroe promulgated that great doctrine of America for the Americans, without interference from the Old World, he submitted it to his friend and adviser, then living in retirement at Monticello.

Thus "Jeffersonian Democracy" is not a mere political catchword. It is a glowing ideal which should animate us, regardless of party to-day, even in the face of triumphs by those who have abandoned his principles, who still manifest distrust in the people's right and ability to govern their own affairs. As against the theory that people were created for the government, which is at the root of many of our evils to-day, he proclaimed the principle that the government was established for the people. Liberty to him was not a privilege; it was a right, and government a mere responsibility delegated by the people. The first and only consideration was how much government was necessary to achieve human happiness and freedom—freedom in government, freedom in education, freedom in worship.

It is time to reexamine our Government in the light of these flashes of inspiration enjoyed by our great leader. It is time for the men in charge of our Government to make a pilgrimage, if only in fancy, to the grave of Thomas Jefferson and draw renewed faith in the people from the following epitaph, which he wrote himself:

Here was buried Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of American Independence, the statute of Virginia for religious freedom, and father of the University of Virginia.

[Applause.]

FOREIGN COMMERCE SERVICE OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 3858) to establish in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce a foreign commerce service of the United States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House therefore automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for its consideration.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 3858, with Mr. CHANDLER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule adopted by unanimous consent, general debate is limited to one hour, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] and one-half by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH].

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Chairman and gentleman of the committee, the time allotted to this bill is very short and I am also well aware there is a desire on the part of many gentlemen to attend other ceremonies elsewhere to-day and I shall attempt to cover in a very few words the subject of this bill.

This bill in its language creates a bureau of foreign commerce in the Department of Commerce. As a matter of fact, we have such a bureau now and have had for many years, but it has never had a legislative status. The purpose of this bill primarily is to give to this bureau, which is rendering such an invaluable service to the interests of the country, a permanent status in the law, to clarify the situation in some respects, and to add to the administrative efficiency by certain provisions.

This service started 20 years ago and had its origin in an appropriation bill in the House, and since that time it has steadily grown. It has grown because of the service it is rendering and because of the insistent demands upon the part of the country for its extension. We now have 42 offices scattered over the world—in Europe, in the Near East and the Far East, in Asia and Africa, in South and Central America, and other countries—42 offices all together.

At the head of this service is Dr. Julius Klein, and I want to take time in the few moments I shall speak to you to say that I believe I express the common sentiment of those who have been familiar with Doctor Klein and his work when I say there is in the service of the Government no man who is giving more intelligent, more zealous, and more efficient service than Dr. Julius Klein. [Applause.] He is a man who was drafted for this task; a man who does not look at this problem from any party standpoint but entirely from an economic and business point of view.

I shall not attempt here—because I am going to keep my word about the length of time I talk to you—to summarize the work that is being done by this foreign service bureau. It extends to all branches and all kinds of American business, including not only manufactured products but agricultural products as well. I might take the time here to read to you the testimony of men who came before us representing agricultural cooperative associations, who voluntarily testified to the great service which this bureau is rendering them. I pause here to say I think the man is no friend of agriculture who wants to draw a line between industry and agriculture, but rather he is the friend who says that agriculture is a basic industry and who insists that all of the extension methods and the machinery which have been available for manufactured products shall be applied to the extension of the business of the farmer. This measure is distinctly in the interests of agriculture as well as in the interest of the other industries of this country.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. How much will the increase in the expenses be by reason of the increase of salaries provided here?

Mr. HOCH. The increased expenses under this bill will be very slight. There is an increase in the maximum salary of $500 over that which is now carried, from $9,500 to $10,000, and the probabilities are there will be two men promoted to that salary. I have the word of Doctor Klein that the total increase of salaries for the present force will not exceed $2,000 a year.

Mr. MADDEN. Two thousand dollars per man?

Mr. HOCH. A total of $2,000 for all the men to whom these increases apply.

Mr. MADDEN. Why do they not make the increases in salaries through the classification board? Why is this bill taking these men out from under the classification act?

Mr. HOCH. It follows a practice which has existed not only in the service but which existed under the Rogers bill which we passed.

Mr. MADDEN. The classification act was not in existence then. Since that time we have classified men in the civil service, and there ought to be some respect paid to that law. The Chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce is enthusiastic about getting the things he wants, and he has got to be watched to see he does not overdo that.

Mr. HOCH. Of course, the Appropriations Committee has control.

Mr. PARKER. Does the classification act apply outside of the District of Columbia?

Mr. HOCH. It does not apply to the field service. It does not apply to the Foreign Service. We have passed the Ketcham bill which gives the Secretary of Agriculture the right to fix salaries, and I am not criticizing that bill.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think it does. If it does, we will find out about it. We have something to say about that.

Mr. KETCHAM. I will say to the gentleman from Kansas and to the gentleman from Illinois that it does not, but it is analogous to the service in other fields.

Mr. MADDEN. The Secretary of Agriculture will not be permitted to fix any salary he pleases.

Mr. HOCH. No one is asking for that; but the language of the Ketcham bill is broader than in this bill. I will say that after the hearings were held the committee was convinced that these men are selected very carefully for their qualifications and experience, and that they are held to account for the character of the work that they do. There is no stricter efficiency test anywhere in the governmental service. Now, I do not think that I will use any more time, unless some one wants to ask a question.

Mr. KETCHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. Will not the gentleman refer to the fact that this is an effort on the part of the departments as the result of an agreement to avoid duplication?

Mr. HOCH. They are in agreement, I am glad to say. The differences that existed between the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Commerce have been straightened out.

Mr. MADDEN. That is because they were coordinated upward, each one getting what he wanted. Later on they will break out again and want more.

Mr. HOCH. I will say that we held exhaustive hearings, and I do not believe the Government is spending money anywhere where it brings more definite and larger return than it does for the money expended in this service. Certainly there is nothing we need more as a business proposition in this country than to extend our foreign markets, particularly in these days when the European countries are getting back to the pre-war conditions and are reaching more competitive conditions with us.

Mr. MADDEN. These men are not sent out to make sales, are they?

Mr. HOCH. They are sent out to find markets and to get trade information, and they have rendered very valuable service to American agriculture and industries of all kinds.

Mr. MADDEN. What do these figures mean: "Class 1, $8,000 to $10,000"? That is a $2,000 increase.

Mr. HOCH. No; the maximum under the present practice is $9,500. That makes a raise of $500.

Mr. MADDEN. And is that true in class 2?

Mr. HOCH. No; the present maximum is $9,500. There is no legislative status for this service; it has been entirely within the control of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. MADDEN. Do they think the Appropriations Committee has been penurious?

Mr. HOCH. Not at all; and they are not complaining. I will say that the Appropriations Committee at every hearing has recognized the great value of the service.

Mr. HARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. HARE. Does this bill provide for any new activity in the service?

Mr. HOCH. It does not. It does not provide any essential departure from what is already done.

Mr. HARE. Does it provide for anything that can not be done under the present system?

Mr. HOCH. The gentleman was not here when I explained that. I am sorry that he was not. There is no legislative authority for the service, and any appropriation would be subject to a point of order. This legislation is necessary to give a feeling of certainty and permanence to this service and to promote its efficiency.

Mr. HARE. Has all the work accomplished by the bureau in the few years—and I will admit that it has been very valuable—has it all been accomplished without legislative authority?

Mr. HOCH. Under appropriations made by Congress. This is purely a parliamentary matter and the gentleman does not want me to go into a discussion of that situation?

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. Is there any connection between this service and the Diplomatic Service?

Mr. HOCH. We have a provision in the bill which is entirely satisfactory to the State Department wherein it is provided that these trained men shall be attached to these consular offices, but they are not in any sense ministers or consuls. That is necessary to give them a standing and in order for them to get entrée in foreign countries for various purposes.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. Is not this legislation very desirable also from the standpoint of its marking out the lines of effort of the various departments and preventing the thing we have all desired to prevent, namely, duplication of effort?

Mr. HOCH. I think there will be effort to avoid duplication. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the bill. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER].

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I desire to deal briefly in the time allotted to me with matters that come more directly in contact with the work of this bureau. I am for the bill, because it gives status and additional power to the bureau that deals with that most essential department of our national life, our foreign and domestic commerce. Under the efficient leadership of Dr. Julius Klein, the director of this bureau, it has taken a prominent part in expanding the commerce and trade of our Nation. The result has been that our exports and our imports are now double what they were prior to the war. Our exports in 1925 amounted to $4,900,000,000 and our imports in that year were $4,288,000,000. That is a balance of trade in our favor of over $600,000,000.

Some very interesting facts are disclosed in a study of the reports of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce. For instance, they show that the largest item of our export trade is cotton, and that, of course, has been continually so; but now the article of greatest value of our imports is rubber, and this is the first year that rubber has become the major item in our imports. The second greatest item in our exports is mineral oils and their derivatives, and the third, for the first time in the history of the country, is automobiles. We know that automobile tires are made from cotton and rubber and that mineral oils furnish the lubricant and the power that drives the automobiles; so for the first time in history, automobiles and the necessary articles for their operation—cotton, oil, and rubber—have become the greatest trade factors in the world.

The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce has dealt exhaustively with the rubber question during the past year, because it has become of supreme importance among our imports.

In prior remarks I have directed the attention of the Congress to the great increase in the cost of automobile tires to American users, and I have tried to point out the fact that the enormous profits made by the tire manufacturers in 1925 proved that this advance in cost to the American users of automobile tires was not warranted. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NEWTON] made a lengthy explanation of the rubber situation the other day, and lately his remarks were extended in the Record; but the facts I have pointed out have not been successfully challenged, nor can they be. The rubber manufacturers paid less than $100,000,000 over the agreed fair price for their rubber in 1925 over the price paid in 1924, but by their own admission they charged the American users of tires $500,000,000 advance in price in 1925 over 1924. The enormous profits they show for 1925 are the results of these tremendous advances. It is true that the manufacturers claim that they received only part of the advanced price, but it is well known that on most tires the public actually paid an advance from 75 to 100 per cent for the tires they used.

The reports of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce reveal further interesting facts in respect to the price of automobile tires, which have not been disclosed before, and that is what I want to bring to the attention of the Congress; and I think it will also interest the country. As I have already pointed out, the American manufacturers sold in 1925 $350,000,000 worth of automobiles to the rest of the world. That was greatly in excess of the amount they ever sold before. These automobiles are fitted with tires, and when these tires wear out new ones must be bought, so that our trade in exportation of tires is rapidly growing. We have heard a great deal about the low price of corn, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOCH] has just mentioned it. Many claim that the surplus that we sell to the foreigners is the reason for the unprofitable price to the American farmer for his corn, but the same economic laws do not seem to work in respect to tires. The manufacturers sell them cheap to the foreigner; but the American consumer, no matter whether crude rubber is high or low, must pay a greatly advanced price over that paid by the foreign consumer.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, about what difference is the percentage in the price to the foreigner and to the domestic user?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I am coming to that. The fact that we produced a surplus of tires does not depress the price of tires, although they tell us it does depress the price of corn under similar circumstances. The manufacturers admit that they have advanced the price of tires to the domestic consumer from 50 to 60 per cent, but they did not advance the price to the foreigner over 10 per cent, as proved by the reports of the Department of Commerce. The total value of tires exported in 1924 was $15,062,708, and the number of tires exported was 1,240,000. The average price to the foreigner, therefore, was $12.05 per tire for 1924. The value of tires exported in 1925 increased to $21,055,372, an increase of over $6,000,000. As we increase our exportation of automobiles we increase the value of our exportation of tires. The total number of tires sold in 1925 increased to 1,628,000 and the average price to the foreigner was $13.12, or an average increase to the foreigner for the year of only $1.07 on all tires exported to the rest of the world. The automobile manufacturers are upon record in hearings before our committee, and we know that they advanced the price to the American consumer from 50 to 60 per cent; but by the records that I have before me they advanced the price to the foreign user of tires less than 10 per cent for the year 1925. Fifty per cent increase in price to the American user of a $10 tire amounts to $5, and on a $30 balloon tire it amounts to $15. This evidently is one time when the foreigner did not pay the tax.

The value of corn exported in 1925 was only about $15,000,000. About one-half of 1 per cent of the corn that we produce is exported.

We sold $21,000,000 worth of auto tires to the rest of the world during the same year.

The reports of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce explode the claims that it is the surplus that is the millstone around the farmer's neck. With 3,000,000,000 bushels' production of corn in 1925, we sold less than 13,000,000 bushels to foreign markets, less than one-half of 1 per cent.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FORT] the other day made an interesting speech upon agriculture and offered as his remedy for the poor price of corn the creation of a corporation to buy and store all the corn offered below a certain price and holding it for future advance. He termed it investment rather than speculation. But at the best it is a plan that has broken every corporation and every individual that have tried it. No one has yet been able to corner enough corn to control the market and the price for the United States.

The reports of the Department of Commerce show that the farmers themselves are right now doing the very thing the gentleman from New Jersey would have his corporation do. They are storing and holding their corn off the market to the extent of over 1,300,000,000 bushels, but the price keeps going down, because the world knows the corn is in existence.

The amount of corn stored on farms on March 1, 1925, was 700,000,000 bushels; on March 1, 1926—1,350,000,000 bushels; 600,000,000 more stored than a year ago, but the price does not rise. If that 600,000,000 of stored corn could be sunk in the sea or burned up, the price would jump in 24 hours from 71 cents, the present price at Chicago, to $1.15 or $1.25, where it was a year ago when the amount stored was 600,000,000 less.

The problem is to find a profitable market for 600,000,000 bushels of corn, whether at home or abroad. Manufacturing it through hogs, sheep, and cattle into high-selling and profitable animal products and limiting and controlling production is a practical solution of the corn-price problem. Increasing our foreign sales is another.

The party in power continues to deal in agricultural relief nostrums, and fiddles while the farmer fails, and refuses to make any move to change the laws that have made manufacturers and railroads increase $60,000,000,000 in wealth in the last five years, while the farmers have become $25,000,000,000 poorer, as shown by the reports of the Department of Commerce. Give the farmer a square deal on the tariff and fair freight rates and lower taxes, and the farmer can take care of himself. The administration is determined to find a sound agricultural remedy, even though it costs the farmer every dollar he is worth.

Corn has kept going down in price while Congress flounders with the question of farm relief. I paid 70 cents a bushel for corn three months ago that is now quoted at 50 cents on the same market. Instead of fixing the corn price up, they are fixing it down.

It reminds me of an experience I had on another occasion. I recall not long ago that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHE] told us about the cattle-feeding operations of Chairman HAUGEN of the Agricultural Committee. You will recall that he told us how the agile chairman of the Agricultural Committee and apostle of high protection overleaped the tariff wall and landed in Canada to buy his steers in a free-trade market to feed his Iowa corn.

I also feed cattle, but I buy them or raise them in Nebraska. I recall that in 1920, the last year under a Democratic administration, I was feeding a bunch of cattle and in the spring of the year I needed a thousand bushels of corn to finish them. A neighbor came to me and said he had a thousand bushels to sell, and I bought it at $1.65 per bushel, and I gave him a check for $1,650 for that thousand bushels of corn.

In 1921 I was again feeding cattle and in February of that year the same neighbor came to me and again wanted to sell me a thousand bushels of corn. I said to him, "I can not pay you more than about half as much this year as I paid you a year ago. Something has happened to us and the bottom seems to have fallen out of prices for farm products."

Now, this neighbor had voted the Republican ticket for the first time in 1920 and had the enthusiasm of the new convert, and he said to me, "You know the Republicans are coming into power next month. Mr. Harding becomes President on March 4, and I think he and the Republicans will fix things up. I don't have to have my money until the 1st of May when real estate taxes are due. You need the corn now. I'll tell you what I will do. I will haul you the corn to-morrow and you pay me the price corn is on the 1st day of next May after the Republicans and Mr. Harding fix it up."

"All right," I said. And he hauled me the corn. But he did not wait until the 1st day of May to get his money. He met me in the road on the 27th day of April when I was coming in from the ranch, and he stopped me and said, "SHALLENBERGER, I am afraid to wait until the 1st day of May for fear you won't have to pay me anything for the corn."

I said to him, "What is the price in town to-day?" And he replied, "Thirty-eight cents."

And so I wrote him out a check for $380 for same amount of corn and just as good corn as I had paid him $1,650 for one year prior, before Mr. Harding and the Republicans had fixed it up for him.

They have fixed it up in a different way for big business and the railroads. They have fixed it up for them by law so that their prosperity is unprecedented. They have fixed it up so that the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. made $107,000,000 net; General Motors, $106,000,000; Ford Motor Co., $115,000,000; United States Steel, $90,000,000; Standard Oil, $100,000,000; the rubber barons, $100,000,000 of net profits in 1925.

Ninety-four industrial corporations last year each made over $10,000,000 or more in net earnings. There was never a year in the history of this Government when so many industrial and transportation companies in time of peace made record profits as in 1925. And yet during the last five years agriculture has lost $25,000,000,000.

The way the party in power has brought about agricultural relief has been to relieve the farmer of about everything left upon the farm. A careful study of the reports of the Department of Commerce convinces me that the way to relieve the farmer is to repeal the unfair laws that rob him. Unfair tariffs, unfair freight rates, and unfair taxes make up a triple burden too great for the farmer to shoulder. [Applause.]

It is because I hope that this great bureau, which has done such splendid work in the past, may find for us a better market for our corn and other agricultural products that I am for this bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. What reason, if any, is given by the manufacturers of these automobile tires for discriminating against the home buyers and in favor of the foreign buyers?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. They make no excuse. I do not think they admitted it. I presume the reason is that they wanted to make money by this practice.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. Has the gentleman gone into the matter of investigating the size of the tires sold in foreign markets as contrasted with the larger-sized tires sold here?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That question is not related to the question that I have referred to. The comparison that I make is the average advance in price of tires, from one year to another, in the foreign trade as compared with the average advance in price of tires in this country.

Mr. KETCHAM. Is there not a difference in the character or size of the tires shipped abroad where there is a contrast of price, because in this country we use a much higher percentage of larger-size tires than they use abroad?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes; but the matter that I call attention to is that the average price of the tire in this country, by the admissions of the manufacturers, advanced 50 or 60 per cent. They put the prices of all tires up 50 per cent of more. So far as the exported tire is concerned, whether 10, 15, or 20 dollar tire, the average price of exported tires was advanced less than 10 per cent to the foreigner.

Mr. KETCHAM. Does the gentleman set out all those figures in his statement?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. The gentleman is sure that that is a fair statement of the facts?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes; I am sure that is the only conclusion that can be drawn from the report of the Department of Commerce.

Mr. KETCHAM. The gentleman will set that out in full in his remarks, will he?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The facts as stated by me are all taken from the department reports, and I can point to the tables showing the figures I have given in monthly report of Foreign Commerce.

Mr. SPEAKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. SPEAKS. I am very much impressed with the gentleman's statements. I want to inquire how, in the event the price of corn reaches a profitable figure, you can prevent a constantly increasing production?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is a problem that the farmer must settle for himself. By cooperative organization overproduction can be greatly controlled.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield back the balance of my time, if I have any left.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 15 minutes.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Chairman, my confidence in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce is greatly increased because of my confidence and respect for Doctor Klein, who is at the head of that service. I regard Doctor Klein as one of the ablest men connected with the Government of the United States. Doctor Klein is in no sense a politician. A problem presented to him is met and treated according to its substantial merits without reference to political phases.

Last summer I was over in Europe, and I visited a number of the offices of our commercial attachés. I spent some time at a number of them and learned something of their work.

At Hamburg I found Mr. Squire in charge; at Berlin, Mr. Herring; and at Prague, Mr. Hodgson. Each of these men is a high-class man, selected on a basis of his ability and fitness. Other places I met men of similar type.

At every place I visited they were actively engaged in explaining and making clear to foreign buyers where they could purchase American commodities. They were constantly informing the foreign buyers where there might be a market for our products, or where our products might be obtained.

I wish to call your attention to the foreign trade and commerce of the United States. I have here a chart showing the foreign trade of the United States for the last 35 years. This chart for convenience is divided into the different periods covered by the different tariff bills. The first is the McKinley tariff bill, enacted in 1890; then the Wilson bill, enacted in 1894; the Dingley bill, enacted in 1897; the Payne-Aldrich bill, enacted in 1909; and the Underwood bill, enacted 1913 during the Wilson administration, and then the emergency tariff act, 1921, at the end of the Underwood bill, and finally the existing tariff law.

By reference to statistics you will find that in 1890 we had a volume of trade of only $1,700,000,000 a year. We had even a less foreign trade under the Cleveland administration act, the Wilson bill. We had a volume of $2,500,000,000 under the Dingley bill. It increased to $3,750,000,000 under the Payne-Aldrich bill. It increased to over $8,000,000,000 as the average under the Underwood bill, and then it fell down to about $7,000,000,000 under the emergency tariff act, and for the last three years under the Fordney-McCumber bill we have had an average volume of trade of $8,250,000,000.

The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce came into the picture in 1905 in a modest way. I do not exhibit these figures to show that the representatives of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce have produced this result; but here we have the greatest volume of trade ever enjoyed by any nation in the history of the world. In 1920 about $50,000,000,000 of commerce moved from one nation to another in the commerce of the world.

The United States in 1920 had a volume of commerce of $13,500,000,000. Our country represents one-sixteenth of the population of the world, but we were then in possession of one-fourth of its international trade. We now have a volume of foreign trade of over $8,000,000,000 per year.

The world is in an unsettled condition. We are living under abnormal conditions. We are doing business in the United States now on an inflated basis; the rest of the world is on an inflated basis. Unless the history of the future is different from what it has been in the past, we are approaching the time when we are going to have a long descending scale of prices with a retardation of business. When that time comes we will need our foreign commerce worse than we need it to-day. Our foreign commerce in recent years is one of the greatest prizes in commerce that any nation has ever enjoyed. The amount that this bill requires to sustain this commerce, to promote commerce, and to increase it is comparatively small. It is only a drop in the bucket in proportion to the value of the trade involved.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute?

Mr. KETCHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA of California. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. In the period from 1913 to 1921, will the gentleman make a statement as to the amount, if he has the figures available, of foreign commerce in the war period that would be attributable to just the unusual situations that prevailed at that time?

Mr. LEA of California. The commerce, beginning with the Payne-Aldrich bill, with an average of $3,750,000,000, jumped to an average, for the first eight years of the Underwood bill, of $7,960,000,000. This map illustrates the difference, the abnormal as contrasted with the normal. This line represents the balance of trade of the United States for the last 35 years. Here is the balance of trade under the eight years of the Underwood bill, which takes in the abnormal period. During that period of eight years the United States had a balance of trade of over $19,000,000,000. We have heard much about the United States being the creditor nation of the world, and here is how the United States became the creditor nation of the world, when for eight years it had an average annual balance of trade of over $2,500,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would not be less interested than any other Member, I hope, in the development and enlarging of our foreign trade service, but it looks to me as though the principal purpose of this bill, as is the principal purpose of most of the bills of this kind that we have been dealing with, is to increase the salaries of those who are employed in the positions. In fact, I make bold to assert that is the moving purpose behind the bill.

I realize perfectly well that there are two classes of legislation that it is perfectly useless to oppose in the House of Representatives; that is, a salary increase bill and a bill to pension somebody or increase pensions. When a bill of that sort is brought up for consideration we can figure always and without exception that it will pass by a large majority. A bill was passed last Wednesday, I believe it was, an agricultural relief measure so-called, brought in by the Committee on Agriculture, to increase the salaries of our Foreign Service employees of the Department of Agriculture by placing them on a list to be known as agricultural attachés, and in the law it was provided that the Secretary of Agriculture should fix the salaries and make the grades, but the bill said he should make them in accordance with other similar Government positions. So I dare say that we can safely calculate that the Secretary of Agriculture will fix the salaries of the agricultural attachés at practically the same figures as the classification provided in this bill.

We are often told, and I imagine no one will contend to the contrary, that wages and salaries in foreign countries are lower than they are here in the United States. That seems to be universally agreed upon. Yet the salaries provided in this bill for employees in the Foreign Service will be considerably higher than for employees in the United States. When we wrote the reclassification act of 1923, reclassifying all of the employees in the Government service here in the city of Washington, the highest-paid grade was the grade known as the professional and scientific service.

I would like to have the Members of the House compare the salaries we have provided for the professional and scientific service in the United States with the salaries in the grades which is fixed in this particular bill. The salaries and grades of the professional service are found on page 19 of the reclassification act. They begin at grade 1. Eighteen hundred and sixty dollars is the beginning salary of that grade and it graduates up to $2,400. Grade 2 begins at $2,400 and graduates up to $3,000; and without taking the time to read them all we get down to grade 7, which is the highest grade, and the salary provided for that grade is $7,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think this is one of those sorts of bills against which this stock argument of economy might lodge with any degree of force. Of course, we all believe in economy, and we all talk that way, but I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that if any man in this House had sat through the hearings on this measure, he would have become convinced that this service, in its limited way in the past, has been one of the greatest and most beneficial services that has come out of any department of the Government. What are we disturbed about now more than anything else? What is the thing that is said will hold up the adjournment of Congress if it is held up? It is the question of farm relief legislation. And what brings about the intense situation with reference to agriculture? It is the surplus American crops that we are trying to find a market for somewhere. The same is true with reference to other things as well as to agricultural products, to the products of our mines and our factories. These men in the Department of Commerce have done more within the recent few years to find markets of the world for surplus American products than any other agency in this Government in a quarter of a century.

Mr. HARE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. HARE. Does the gentleman know whether or not the markets for these surplus crops are for raw materials or for the manufactured products?

Mr. RAYBURN. Both, but mostly, of course, for the manufactured products.

But is not the gentleman as much interested in one part of America as he is in another; in one class of products that should be exported as in another?

Mr. HARE. I should think, though, that their activities should be directed as much toward the raw material as the manufactured product and not show any partiality—

Mr. RAYBURN. The Department of Agriculture has its agents in every part of the world trying to find markets for all the things produced in agriculture. A bill was passed here quite recently to cover that.

Mr. HARE. But this provision has been in existence for some time, and these people have not paid attention to finding a market for the raw material as they have the manufactured product.

Mr. RAYBURN. I doubt very seriously if the gentleman is correct about that. I think not. This service found a market for the rice of California, and the rice growers of California would have been out of business years ago if it had not been for this service that found a market for rice, where the people would eat the kind of rice they raise in California when they would not eat it in any other country with which we had been trading.

Mr. HARE. I want to make it clear that I am heartily in favor of the activities of this bureau, but I would like to see them as much interested in finding foreign markets for raw materials as they are in finding such markets for manufactured products.

Mr. RAYBURN. I would like to see it increased along all lines, but it can not be increased unless we pass a bill of this kind.

Mr. LEA of California. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to make a suggestion in connection with that statement. Europe buys 53 per cent of the exports of the United States. Europe is a small consumer of our manufactured products but is a large consumer of our raw materials. Therefore it is absolutely true that the great increase in the exported articles of the United States has been in the raw materials.

Mr. RAYBURN. I simply want to say in the minute I have remaining that this is a great service. It has done a great and an almost stupendous work in finding markets for the surplus of America, and I trust it may be carried on as the provisions of this bill set out it may be carried on. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, the foreign commerce service was originally conceived as a sort of glorified bureau of commercial salesmen for American manufactures and its activities have been largely along that line. During the recent years of depression in agriculture pressure has arisen that this bureau should take on the business of selling American farm products and considerable service has been performed along that line. Nevertheless, it remains that whatever we appropriate for this service amounts, in logic, to a subsidy to commerce which can not be distinguished in principle from a subsidy to shipping or to any other private business activity.

The chief fault I find with the service is that it is obsessed with the idea that commerce consists wholly in selling something; that commerce is altogether in selling and that buying is no proper part of it; and that all the profits of commerce are derived by those who have something to sell. You can not interest the service in buying anything abroad which might possibly be produced in the United States, no matter at what cost. A group of farmers, for instance, can expect no help from this service if they should desire to exchange their surplus crop for the articles which they require, such as clothing, tools, and so on.

The idea has never gotten to the Department of Commerce that sometimes it is better to buy than it is to sell, and that commerce that is real commerce consists in an exchange of products, an exchange of value for value. This idea has not been able to permeate into the imagination of the department. Their conception is that America ought to be absolutely self-contained and that we ought not to buy anything in a foreign country that in any possibility can be produced here. We are expected to be self-contained so far as consumption is concerned, and yet we are expected to do business with the world in the surplus of what we produce. How in the name of common sense are we ever going to be able to do business with the world when we only sell to them and buy nothing they produce? How can they buy from us if we will not buy from them, how can they pay? How can foreign countries pay what they owe us for borrowed money and continue to buy our goods and cotton and wheat when we do not buy from them.

The ideal of the people in charge of the Department of Commerce is that we ought to produce on our own soil absolutely everything that is needed in the United States and buy absolutely nothing abroad. That is their goal; that is the golden hour they look forward to. They would like to do that and then have a handsome surplus of products which we would sell abroad for money. Of course, our trade could not last 60 days on that basis; but suppose it did. What would we do with the money? That they do not know. That has passed beyond their imagination. They have never thought of that. Of course, gold is mere dross. Money is a mere counter. It is of value merely because it commands some one's service or something that some one has produced or something that he has. Money is of no value unless we buy service or something else with it.

Every article that we buy from a foreign country at a lesser price than we can produce it for in this country is to our advantage. The balance of trade is nothing to gloat over. Oh, Doctor Klein and Mr. Hoover think they have done wonders when they point to a favorable balance of trade. With what glee they chant, "The balance of trade is in our favor." Now, of course, I am all lopsided and wrong headed, and my mind is incapable of appreciating logic and economics, and all that sort of thing. I am with the economic philosophers; but, pshaw, what do we know! We philosophers are foolish enough to think that frequently it is better that the balance of trade be on the other side, and that it may represent the fact we are getting something that we want from an outsider instead of giving him something that we have produced and could very well use ourselves and getting no return for it. Ultimately a favorable balance of trade may mean an export of capital, of real capital, to wit, natural resources and the work of our hands and brains. Ultimately it may mean that something has gone abroad in excess of that which we have received in return. It is always good sense to buy when you can something that you want and need for less than you can produce it yourself. The seller in such a case is the one who is stung. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL] the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, while the gentleman from California was coming across the continent in order to embark for Europe to make some study of trade conditions and other situations over there, I was leaving my home on the eastern seaboard for San Francisco, where I took passage to the Orient, in order to learn something of trade conditions over there and the market for our goods, as well as other matters of great interest.

I listened to the gentleman from Alabama with great attention, and I am surprised. I can not quite get his angle. Most of us are particularly interested in our own constituency, and rightly so. I can not conceive how a man who represents in part the great city of Birmingham, with its wonderful potential possibilities and future, excelled by no other city or location in the United States, can take such an attitude as he does. Furthermore, his whole State is ripe for development, and I think it will be difficult to find capital for development unless a market is found for the output of that State.

It is not a local question; it is a problem confronting every State to find a market for its raw material and manufactured articles.

I have a few facts here with reference to New England that I want to give you a little later after discussing briefly the features of the bill. It may interest the gentleman from Alabama to see what can be accomplished by giving a little more encouragement to these trade relations.

Mr. Chairman, I should be very much surprised to find any opposition to this bill, which has been unanimously reported to the House by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

In the first place, this bill merely makes statutory the foreign service of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce. It does not provide for any additional appropriations. The Foreign Service of the State Department has been placed on a firm footing so far as authority from Congress is concerned, because of a bill passed last Congress at the instance of my late lamented, splendid colleague, John Jacob Rogers, and furthered in the Senate by the late Senator Henry Cabot Lodge. I saw no concerted opposition to that measure. Only on Wednesday last was a bill passed by this House without opposition creating a foreign service in the Department of Agriculture, and the foreign work of this department is comparatively small.

The basic work of the Department of Commerce's Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce is to collect and disseminate trade information. This involves many ramifications, and the successful manner in which this work has been done since the inception of Mr. Hoover as Secretary of Commerce needs no comment from me. Trade agents of the Commerce Department are located in no less than 34 foreign countries spread throughout Latin-America, the Far East, and Europe. They are part of a service that is 20 years old.

I might add in passing that I would not object to seeing the provisions of this bill extended to some of our possessions. For instance, there is a tremendous opportunity in Hawaii that I think is being neglected to a certain extent. They are using an immense amount of material and machinery, and we might secure considerable trade from these islands.

May I say here with reference to the gentleman from Texas that, although the cost of living is somewhat cheaper in foreign countries, these trade representatives have to entertain rather extensively and lavishly sometimes in order to get business.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The gentleman does not mean to say that these representatives of ours, commercial attachés, agricultural attachés, so called, have to entertain on any such scale as the Diplomatic Corps?

Mr. UNDERHILL. No; I do not mean to say so, but they do entertain, and it is good business for them to do so.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. They kotow some, do they not?

Mr. UNDERHILL. I would not say that—courtesy is not kotowing. A man, to be a successful salesman, must be, and a representative of our Government should be, courteous.

Mr. BLANTON. I got that expression "kotow" from a former distinguished leader of the House, Hon. Claude Kitchin, who said at the beginning of his service that these men all had to kotow.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Well, I will take no issue with the gentleman whose acquaintance I was denied.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman was unfortunate in not knowing him.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Their trade data is reported by cable and otherwise to the Department of Commerce here in Washington and then through its many media—the district offices located in some 10 or 12 leading cities in the United States, cooperative offices situated in other important distributing centers and maintained at the expense of chambers of commerce and boards of trade, since Government appropriations are insufficient to keep them up, and the news and trade press—is given to business men, trade organizations, banks, schools, and so forth, for assimilation and guidance. These trade agents, known technically as commercial attachés or trade commissioners, are men of experience, education, and temperament especially qualified for this collection of economic information and for the rendering of American trade-promotion service.

Now, does the House know that there is no legislative provision for this foreign service? Does it know that these Government officers, located in the strategic commercial centers of the world, and performing duties so essential to the protection and development of our foreign markets, would be compelled to return home in the event that a point of order was raised by any Member against appropriating moneys for the maintenance of this service?

nance of this service? Does it appreciate that in this happening our economic and trade fabrics would be paralyzed? And, yet, all that is needed to prevent this catastrophe is the approval of Congressman Hoch's meritorious bill, which, as I mentioned before, has been approved unanimously by the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Does the House fully appreciate what needs our foreign trade serve? We are not entirely a self-sufficient country, as great as we are. We must find foreign markets for 10 per cent of our yearly production, since we can only consume 90 per cent of it, and this 10 per cent in 1925 amounted to $4,909,396,000 in exports. That additional 10 per cent frequently furnished the margin of profit which permitted our great industries to practice efficient methods of mass production and thus increase our total output of products. We are compelled to rely on foreign sources for our consumption of sugar, coffee, tea, tin, rubber, silk, newsprint paper, unmanufactured wool, and so forth, if we are to maintain our superior standards of living, and these items comprised principally our imports of 1925, which had valuations of $4,227,995,000. Thus our total foreign trade, exports and imports, totaled $9,137,391,000. And this amount was $936,427,000 greater than the total foreign trade for 1924, when it amounted to $8,200,964,000. This, gentlemen, is a gigantic institution, and this House should not hesitate in granting American business and industry the protection it needs and which is provided by Congressman Hoch's bill.

I had been in the trade game nearly all my life before I came to Congress, and I have traversed some of the proverbial Seven Seas only recently. I have seen the products of the United States of America in far-off China, in Japan, and in the Philippines; everywhere I went I was confronted with the ingenuity of our country. This is inspiring, indeed, and actuates one's motives in improving it wherever and whenever possible.

I hope this bill carries overwhelmingly. I do not pretend to know the details involving all the sources of exports from the United States, but I do know that if other sections of the country can make—and I trust they will—the excellent showing New England made during 1925 in the sales of its merchandise to foreign marts this bill will have little difficulty becoming law. Exports from the six States of New England during 1925 amounted to $191,820,500, as compared with $177,383,184 for 1924, an increase of nearly $14,500,000. Massachusetts's exports during the same period were $118,607,731 and $114,418,430, respectively, an increase during 1925 of well over $4,000,000. These items, gentlemen, are worthy of your consideration.

The last decade has witnessed our foreign trade progressing by leaps and bounds. We have entered hitherto unknown foreign markets, and we must stay there. We hear much about the economic recovery of Europe, and this, of course, must mean increased competition everywhere from such leading countries as Great Britain, Germany, and France. Our task, then, is not only to watch the moves of these foreign countries but to study more the purchasing power of the peoples of the world and to approach our markets from that standpoint. All of this requires guidance, such as is covered by the bill under discussion. [Applause.]

Mr. FREE. Mr. Chairman, the foreign service of the Department of Commerce has been developed during the last 20 years, until now it is composed of 124 Americans stationed in 42 foreign offices. These trade experts are specializing on the development of American export trade. They have no duties other than those of promoting our foreign trade. This is done, first of all, by making personal investigations of conditions abroad and submitting cabled and mailed reports on them. These reports describe the methods of entering foreign markets, methods of facilitating trade, and assisting American manufacturers in directing sales efforts abroad.

The foreign service is directed in its trade promotion work by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, which has on its staff experts in all commodities which enter into foreign trade, who interpret the desires and who transmit the requirements of American business men to our foreign representatives, and interpret the reports from our foreign representatives to the American business community. These experts prepare lengthy questionnaires and inquiries which enable the foreign representatives of the Department of Commerce to get exactly the sort of information required by an American business man. The foreign representatives are free to travel in their territory in search of information, and resort to the cable constantly in order to get information regarding opportunities for the sale of American goods to American manufacturers at the earliest possible moment. The reports from these foreign representatives are distributed by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to American manufacturers and exporters.

This foreign service has been of great value to American business men in developing foreign trade. In order to indicate the practical type of service rendered by these trade representatives abroad, I will mention some specific accomplishments.

The first two instances mentioned have been of especial value to the farmers in my State, California.

ASSISTANCE RENDERED RICE GROWERS' ASSOCIATION OF CALIFORNIA BY THE BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE

The Rice Growers' Association of California was created in October, 1921. The industry at that time was bankrupt. The banks of the community producing rice were practically bankrupt; the business houses were bankrupt. The producers had a crop of some 4,000,000 bags of "paddy" rice with no market, knew nothing about the conditions with which they had to contend, and with no domestic demand for the rice.

This problem was presented to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. It was not only necessary to know the crops that were produced in competing areas abroad, but it was also necessary to know their economic conditions. California rice producers needed to know what was behind the fluctuation of the Japanese yen, what their gold holdings were, what the future of their silk market might be, what their political situation was in relation to the stability of government, in relation to the farmer, and to business. This information was all secured by the foreign service of the Department of Commerce and in this particular instance was the cause of prosperity to the rice producers of California.

Through the foreign service information was obtained regarding the conditions in French Indo-China, Siam, China, and Japan. The solution of this problem was not in going into the American market nor into the foreign markets of Europe to compete with the producers of our Southern States, but the outlet was found in Japan, a point where one would least expect to find it.

Within a year there was exported out of the port of San Francisco 78 per cent of the crop of 1921. This represented the largest quantity of rice which had ever been exported from the United States and sold at a price which was satisfactory and which returned the rice producers of California to a condition of stability.

SERVICE RENDERED TO PRUNE EXPORTERS BY BRUSSELS OFFICE IN 1923

The proposed Belgian tariff revision of 1923 carried in its first draft a scale of duties for prunes which would have severely hindered their exportation from California. The rates proposed were, in francs per hundred kilos:

Two hundred for prunes in packages of less than 10 kilos each.

Sixty in barrels weighing 180 kilos or more and in sacks weighing 80 kilos or more.

On: hundred in other packages.

The export trade from California being mainly in small packages, this would have made it very difficult for the shipper from that State to compete in the Belgian market.

Mr. S. H. Cross, at that time acting commercial attaché at Brussels, took the matter up with the Belgian customs authorities and succeeded in getting them to agree to reducing the duties on prunes imported in small packages, with the result that the proposed duties were changed to the following, in francs per 100 kilos:

One hundred and twenty for prunes in containers of less than 10 kilos each.

Eighty for prunes in larger containers.

The tariff as finally enacted contained these rates, which are those now assessed.

The importance of this service may be gathered from the fact that our prune exports to Belgium in the last three years reached the following values:

TYPICAL RESULTS SECURED THROUGH THE BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE DURING THE PERIOD JANUARY 1 TO APRIL 10, 1926

A European representative of an American motor-car company states that because of the prompt and effective assistance given by our London office he was able to close a contract for 128 cars, involving a sum of $204,000.

Indebtedness to our Peking office is acknowledged by a New York steel-products corporation for the placing of a contract with the Imperial Government of Japan calling for $402,655 worth of steel rails.

Through the assistance of our trade commissioner a Los Angeles oil-refining company made a suitable connection in Shanghai, China. Orders for 55,000 cases of kerosene oil, with an approximate value of $100,000, were received during the first six months.

Due to a misclassification of a shipment of 10 tons of aluminum foil brought to Spain by an American company excess duties and fines amounting to $5,229 resulted. Case had been pending two years when our commercial attaché at Madrid was prevailed upon for assistance, who, with the aid of the foreign tariffs division of the bureau, not only succeeded in saving this entire amount for the American firm but obtained a proper classification in duty without which further shipments of aluminum foil would have been prohibitive. This was accomplished in the face of strong opposition.

Through information furnished by the bureau a San Francisco manufacturer of barrels learned of the market for its product in Medan, Sumatra, and from this territory received orders amounting to $43,572.15, with prospective business for considerably more.

Leads furnished by the bureau have brought foreign orders amounting to $75,000 to a Los Angeles firm dealing in foodstuffs.
